THE CRESCENT SMOKER

ANOTHER INTERESTING "STAG" ENTERTAINMENT.

Good Singing and Instrumental Music and Amusing Recitations and Boxing—The Chief Attraction Failed to Appear.

THE Crescent League gave a "smoker" last evening in the Crescent Club House on East Second street.

The chief attraction of the entertainment was to have been the boxing between two bantam pupils of McAuliffe, the prize-fighter. They failed to appear, however, presumably because of the greater attraction, to them, of a prize-fight at Coney Island.

Still, Manager-in-Chief Charles Leggett made, with the assistance of others, the "smoker" a decided success.

That humorous "little Dutchman," Mr. Carney, caused much amusement by a droll dialect address, on nothing in particular and everything in general. He responded to an encore.

Then followed a tenor solo by Mr. Stevens, who was enjoying the Crescent League good cheer too much to do himself justice in the matter of singing.

Following Mr. Stevens, Mr. Green was called for and delivered in true oratorical style a laughable conglomeration of wrongly applied big words jumbled together, which, with the pieces, was much applauded. He called it "Happiness."

The musical part of the evenings programme was most creditably rendered by the following gentlemen. Messrs. R. T. Barnes, Clarence Teel, Geo. Stevens and Chas. Leggett.

Mr. Leggett not only sang but played the accompaniment for the others on the piano.

Mr. Wm. A. Coddington was the announcer.

Boxing livened up what might have been monotonous pauses in the programme. The first bout was one of three rounds between Manager Fred Jones and George Leidy.

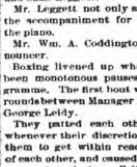
They pasted each other with vigor whenever their discretion would allow them to get within reaching distance of each other, and caused much laughter among the onlookers. Following this bout was more music.

Mr. Smith surprised skillfully on a stringed instrument he called a "box." He was encored.

Then Dr. Adams and Mr. Davis, of the well-known firm of Hallock and Davis, laid aside their customary dignity and put on the boxing gloves. Mr. Davis proved himself quick and agile, getting in taps despite Dr. Adams long arms. Their two-round bout ended with honors even.

Messrs. Wood and McIntyre finishing the evening's boxing with a lively set-to.

The club quartette then sang a few comic songs and the guests departed.



Cigars were frequently passed around during the evening, and the Crescent League members showed their usual cordiality, making everyone feel at home.

PARK CLUB VS. FANWOOD.

The First Game in a Series of Three Won by Fanwood.

The Park Club of North Plainfield and the Fanwood Club have arranged to bowl a series of three games. The first game took place last night, on the Fanwood Club alleys. The game was very close and exciting from start to finish. In the fifth frame the members of the Park Club team made seven strikes in succession, and it looked as though the North Plainfielders would win in a walkover, but the Fanwood bowlers made a grand spurt and won by seventeen pins. The following is the score:

PARK CLUB.		FANWOOD CLUB.
Lawrence	151	R. P. Moore	193
Thiers	134	Bradley	114
Matthews	131	Miller	134
Sandford	135	Lawrence	127
Amundson	91	Beegen	107
Thomas	139	C. Moore	122
North	136	Driver	102
Brown	130	Anderson	126
Hinrichs	111	Warren	143
Darling	100	Stevens	145
Total	1,351	Total	1,389

—As Mr. Andrew Seguine was going in the yard at his home last night he found his gate, unexpectedly, propped up on the walk. He did not notice it until he struck his shin against the bottom of the gate. He says he would like to find the culprit.

—Fred. Jones, the popular first-baseman of the Crescent League and manager of the League Club House, is a great lover of dogs. He has now, as a special pet, a pure blooded bulldog. It comes of a long line of fighting stock and its warped appearing legs and suggestive mouth bear out two of the good points that tickle the heartstrings of the knowing.

POLITICAL PICKLES.

The Event of the Campaign.

The Republican "Stag" party, otherwise yclept "smoker", which comes off in the Crescent Rink, on Thursday night, bids fair to be the event of the campaign in Union county. As the Plainfield Democrats don't appear to be in it, on their own hook, this trip, the Republicans have designed this entertainment specially for their benefit. Come around friends, be entertained, perhaps—instructed, surely.

About Rowland M. Stover.

Mr. Rowland M. Stover, the Democratic candidate for surrogate, is wholly unacquainted with New Jersey law, and in no way could he improve the management or morale of the surrogate's office.—Elizabeth Journal.

Our cotemporary is probably not aware that Mr. Stover is editor of the Law Reports, which are the authorities for lawyers, and has been for twenty years or more. The objection to him on that ground, therefore, cannot well be made. A better reason, we think, is that we do not want Democrats in office this season. We have had enough of them for awhile. We have tried Surrogate Parrott and are satisfied that he is the right man in the right place.

The Republicans of Elizabeth will have a big street demonstration of the campaign this evening, and an imposing turnout is looked for.

BREVITIES

—The Epworth League of the Methodist church is making arrangements for a mock trial to take place in Vincent chapel, on Friday evening.

—Two more newspapers have been added to New Jersey's already large list. They are the Star Gazette, published at May's Landing, and the Democrat, issued at Jersey City.

—The biggest turnout of the campaign is looked for at the Republican "Smoker" on Thursday night. Better be there before eight o'clock or you may find the other fellow in your seat.

—The delivery wagon of a baker residing on Grove street, near Greenbrook road, was found by the owner, this morning, near the First Baptist church, where it is supposed it had been placed by some boys.

—An entertainment is to be given next Thursday night, in the First Presbyterian chapel, on East Front street. The affair is under the auspices of Plainfield Local Union of the Y. P. S. C. E. See advertisement in another column.

—Sixteen members of the Holy Cross church choir went to Seymour, Conn., yesterday morning. They sang a vesper service last evening in the Trinity church of that place. To-day they were at Naugatuck, to render two services in St. Michael's church.

—The first Autumn meeting of the New York League of Unitarian Women will be held in the Church of the Messiah, New York, on Friday, Nov. 4, 1892, at 11 a.m. A paper will be read by Dr. Emily Blackwell. The society extends a cordial invitation to all interested.

—The letter box, which was located at the corner of Front and Peace streets, has been placed in front of McDonald's store. It had to be removed on account of the track of the electric street railway, which makes such a sharp curve that the car would strike the box.

—Hong Cong's Chinese laundry sign was placed over the doors of a blacksmith shop, on Somerset street, last night, by some one on mischief bent. The unusual sight of a laundry sign in front of a blacksmith's shop quite amused the passerby, but Hong Cong did not see the funny part of the joke. It was put back in its customary place to-day.

PERSONAL.

Mr. L. M. Randolph of Newark yesterday visited his brother, Plainfield's enterprising druggist, Mr. L. W. Randolph of West Front street.

Mr. and Mrs. E. V. H. Conover returned to their home, on West Third street, yesterday, after a week's visit with relatives at Bound Brook.

Messrs. E. E. Pope and J. Pope of Duer street, North Plainfield, left yesterday for a three weeks' stay with Mr. E. E. Pope's father-in-law, Mr. C. Coddington, of Mt. Horeb.

Mr. Jacob Voehl's household, on Somerset street, with many of their young friends, enjoyed themselves immensely last evening playing games, and trying some of the old superstitious methods.

About sixteen of the many young friends of Miss Lulu French, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward V. French, of West Front street, assembled at her home and observed the old family custom by holding an old-fashioned and delightful Hallowe'en party last night.

The Calumet Club met at the home of Mr. Vincent Hockwell on East Front street, last evening. A most enjoyable time was had in suitably observing All Hallowe'en, by the usual games, and later, in lively dances. Among those present were Miss A. Coard, Miss Saltzman, Miss Abbott, Miss Crane, Miss Haines, Miss Thorne, Miss Williams and Miss Heyniger of this city, Mrs. and Miss Driggs of New York and Miss Sanborn of Newark, Messrs. Cree, R. Titsworth and L. Titsworth, Williams, C. Haines, H. Johnston, F. Smith and W. Burleigh.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Nassau" Replies to W. B. S. T.'s Criticism of Henry George Theories.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—"W. B. S. T." in his reply to my letter of the 18th of October, makes again several errors, some of them mere errors of assertion, others in apprehension of fundamental principle.

Thus he implies that I had asserted that assessors rate town lots at the same value as farm land. I made no such assertion. What I did say was that assessors reduce disproportionately the assessment of unused land below that of used land. Thus of two lots of the same size, lying side by side and manifestly of the same value, if one is vacant while the other has a house on it, the vacant lot will be rated for taxation at a lower figure than the other. This practice is universal. It is perpetrated in, on the plea that the holder of the unused land is getting no income from it, the result being that the other taxpayers of the community pay a part of the taxes of those whose land is to this extent exempt.

"W. B. S. T." may see this exemplified in North Plainfield in dozens of cases. If it were not so, if unused land were rated by the assessor at its full value, as the Constitution of the State of New Jersey says it shall be; or even if it were rated at the same proportion of its actual value that other land is, "For Sale" signs would at once appear on nearly all such property; for the owners could not hold it if taxation took from them every year an amount approximating its rental value.

Now, the question which "W. B. S. T." should put to himself is, "Why should a special exemption be made in favor of this kind of property? and the question which the taxpayers of North Plainfield generally should ask themselves is, Why should we meekly continue to pay the taxes of other people?

"W. B. S. T" also says that the tax on personal property could be as easily collected as that on land "if our legislatures had no personal interest in making it otherwise, as I could easily show if it would do any good."

Let "W. B. S. T." step forward at once now and grasp enduring fame. This is the problem that all our older States have been wrestling with for half a century without success. The State of New York has been exceptionally perplexed in this respect. In 1874 it appointed a special commission of three to examine and report upon the incidence of taxation, the published result of their deliberations being that the only persons who paid their taxes under the prevailing system with any approach to fairness were widows and orphans and a very small remnant of extra-conscientious people, and the committee recommended the abolition of the personal property tax altogether as uncollectable and the substitution of an arbitrary tax on the individual based on the rental value of the houses he occupied. The last three legislatures have had no better success in dealing with the matter. Let "W. B. S. T." therefore, go to Albany at the next session of the Legislature and unfold his plan to the Joint Committee on Taxation, or, if modesty forbids this, perhaps he will reveal it to the readers of THE NEWS in his next letter.

As to "W. B. S. T.'s" views on the subject of political economy, the least that can be said is that they are peculiar. It requires, of course, some hardihood to challenge the conclusions of a gentleman who in his public utterances on a given subject habitually informs his audience that he has studied it profoundly. Nevertheless it would be interesting to know from what unique work on economics he gets the impression that wealth is merely that excess of the good things of life which a few possess over the majority rather than the entire sum of such things. There has been a good deal of this sort of thing among political economists—a prejudice, too, which singularly enough they all share—that wealth embraces all those material things which man by his labor draws from the great store house of nature and fashions to his various purposes. Even the poorest man in the civilized State possesses a portion of wealth, his special grievance being that his portion is only large enough to satisfy the needs of a mere animal existence, and that even that is continually threatened. Now that "W. B. S. T." has pronounced against the commonly accepted interpretation, perhaps the scientific world will reconsider the matter.

Of a piece with this original conception of his concerning wealth is that other which he entertains that the source of wealth is land. Wealth, he says, according to this view, the dipping of water out of a spring is the source of the water rather than the spring itself.

On the subject of land, too he enjoys an originality of conception which illustrates afresh the innate heterodoxy of genius. Thus, in his criticism of my definition of wealth, he says that I only succeed in "proving that it is the fruit of labor, whether exerted on land, or iron, or wood," etc., evidently scouring the usually accepted view that the word "land," as an economic term, includes all these things.

There is so much, indeed, in "W. B. S. T.'s" system that is novel and stimulating to thought, that it will be perhaps a public service to set forth briefly the commonly accepted view concerning the more important terms in order that the points of disagreement between the two systems may be most effectively contrasted and the fruit of this original thinker's research—the fruit of his profound study—may be most brilliantly exhibited. Only by some such method can the modifying influence destined to be exerted on our present system by the scrutiny of a thinker who scorns the conventional in this free, large way be estimated with approximate correctness.

Wealth, as used in political economy, signifies all those material things ministering to man's needs or desires which are drawn by his labor from

Land, which in its turn embraces the entire surface of our planet as well its cultivable and habitable ground as its mines, forests, rivers, lakes, oceans, etc., all of which are included under the term "land" just as we include men, women and children under the one comprehensive, generic term "man."

Necessarily the first form of wealth man will produce will be food, for this is the first and most imperative of his needs—a need never to be waived or intermitted whatever the height of civilization he may reach. So great is the bounty of the Creator, however, that man's labor expended through cultivation of the soil in the productions of food, secures a return far in excess of his needs, and with this surplus he is able to satisfy next those other primary needs—shelter and clothing. In the varieties of civilization the impulse of the individual is to attempt to provide all these things solely by his own labor. He will soon discover that the attempt will absorb all his time, leaving him no leisure for higher pursuits.

Imagine a community in which each man builds his own house, makes his own tools and utensils, raises and prepares his own food, provides the material for and makes his own clothing, etc. A thousand men wasting thus each for himself would be simply an aggregation of barbarians. Nevertheless each one of the thousand would be self-sustaining and independent. There would be no paupers in such a gathering and wages would be equal, each one getting, as such, the entire product of his labor. If one of this thousand wished to hire some man to work for him, he would be obliged to give him as much as he himself received, for no man would consent to work for another for less than he could make when working for himself. The thing which makes each thus self-sustaining and independent is freedom of access to land, the source from which his rude wants are supplied. Free land, in other words, provides steady employment for all and equalizes wages.

From this rough sketch of the beginnings of human industry it will be apparent to the attentive reader how vital to the process is freedom of access to natural opportunities—in other words, to land. This is the view of the matter taken by what, in view of the recent triumphant researches of "W. B. S. T.," we must now call the old political economy—that of Adam Smith, Ricardo, John Stuart Mill and Henry George.

NASSAU.

ODD FELLOWS FIRST ANNIVERSARY.

How a New Lodge Enjoyed All Hallow Een.

Queen City Lodge, No. 226, I. O. O. F., celebrated their first anniversary last night, at their rooms in Amphion Hall building, and had a large number of friends present to rejoice with them over their prosperous condition.

The programme, especially the recitation by Miss Ernestine Smith, was very interesting and was as follows:

Opening Ode
Address of Welcome.....Noble Grand C. H. Rugg
Singing by Quartette—Charles Dressell, Augustus Walter, Henry Wedemeyer, Edward Mead
Recitation.....Miss Ernestine Smith
Address on Odd Fellowship by Grand Master James W. Trenchard, of Bridgeton, N. J.
Singing by Quartette
Address on Unveiling of Portraits of Charter Members by Past Grand Master Howard Sutphin, of Flemington, N. J.
Closing Ode
Prayer by Chaplain

After the programme was rendered refreshments were served, and the remainder of the evening was spent in informal social intercourse.

The Trolley for North Plainfield.

On Friday next, Nov. 4, the ordinance granting a franchise to the Street Railway Company to operate a road on Somerset street will come up for final passage. Notwithstanding the fact that the matter has been fully advertised and invitations extended to the public to be present, Mayor Saunders urges all citizens of North Plainfield who are interested in the subject, either for or against the road, to be present on that date, as it is my intention, "he says, "to call for an expression of opinion from the citizens before the vote on the franchise is taken." Those who cannot be present or who do not care to be present are requested to send written communications on the subject.

The Mayor says he first thought of submitting the matter to a vote of the people, but now concluded that such a course is not just or practical, because he considers that "a man who owns no property should not have an equal voice with a property holder, and that a man who owns property in Long Branch should not have a vote equal to that of a property owner on or near Somerset street." The question of how much property a man owns, and how far it will be affected is one which he confesses himself unable to arrange on any fair basis which would give any value to a popular vote on the subject."

It is intended to specify a rail which will effect the use of Somerset street to the passage of vehicles or bicycles at any angle. This rail, he says, "will be suggestive to the one now in use in Plainfield, and in view of the fact that there is but a single track, it is believed, that, notwithstanding the narrowness of Somerset street, the road will be in no way objectionable."

Has Anyone Missed a Horse?

Mr. J. C. Carney of Emily street, when he went to his stables this morning, was surprised to find one more horse there than he had been used to seeing. No one has called for the animal yet, and Mr. Carney is the horse better off today, but he would like to find the owner.

THE CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE

The Autumn Meeting Held at Westfield To-Day.

The Northern New Jersey Conference of the Congregational churches holds their Autumn meeting to-day in the Congregational church, in Westfield. The conference includes all the churches of North New Jersey, thirty in all.

The sessions were in charge of the moderator, Rev. William Hayes Ward, D.D., editor of the Independent. The morning hours were occupied by reports from churches, delegates to the national council and committees. The feature of the afternoon session was an address by the Rev. W. R. Richards, D.D., of the Crescent avenue church, of this city. His subject was "A Larger Parish." The afternoon session closed with what was called on the programme "An Ecclesiastical Clearing-House for New Ideas." This was under the charge of Rev. S. L. Loomis, of Newark. At one o'clock the ladies of the Westfield church served luncheon to the delegates.

All Hallowe'en

Last night was "All Hallowe'en." The youth of this city were out in full force, bent on having a gay old time. It was late on night of the whole year when the boys seem to have considered that they could do mischief without fear of arrest, as the policemen were expected to look with indulgence on their pranks.

Several families in Plainfield followed the old custom of holding parties.

Dressed in grotesque costumes, many boys and girls went from house to house, ringing door bells and tapping on windows. Many streets are entirely bereft of gates.

The old superstitions of Hallowe'en are pretended to be held to by some people for fun sake. Charms, potions, magic spells and all that sort of thing were formerly indulged in by those anxious to have a peep into the future. An ancient legend was that on this night the spirits of the unhappy dead return to earth for a brief period and occasionally show themselves to the living. Another legend is that the spirits of those who committed sin while in the flesh are allowed to return to earth to make atonement. The land being full of spirits on this night, they are, according to the legend, allowed to communicate with human beings; hence the old time indulgence in charms and magic spells. There are hundreds of ways in which girls are said to be able to find out on Hallowe'en who their future husband will be. One is to pare an apple without breaking the peel and then let the peel drop over the back. It will form the initial letter of the name of the future husband of the charm-worker.

Another method is to drop melted lead into a cup of water, when signs will be shown of whom will be the husband. A feat that is usually regarded by girls as hazardous is at midnight to walk backward downstairs holding a lighted candle in one hand and a looking-glass in the other and calling on Satan to show your future husband. Then the face of the future husband will appear in the glass. Still another method is to walk out of the house at the hour of midnight and walk a quarter of a mile around the house and return without having spoken to any one. The first single man who is seen by the girl after this feat will be her husband.

There are no don't imagine there were any such simple-minded fools among the merry makers in Plainfield last night, or anywhere in this enlightened land, as to drive away the idiotic ignorance which prevailed at one time among people supposed to have sense.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Isn't it nearly time to quit erecting "tower of Babel buildings"? Some of the manufacturers in our big cities go skyward for that no fire apparatus on earth could quench a blaze in the upper stories.

It is so much the fashion for the American girl to ally herself with that conservative institution, an Englishman, that the following confession of a western girl, "who dearly loved a lord" for the sake of his title, is full of suggestion: "It is nothing but violet, velvet and veal one day, and mauve, moire and mutton the next."

A bill is to be brought before the New York legislature calling for the pensioning of superannuated public school teachers. On general principles the payment of government pensions is not desirable. Great Britain today is loaded down to the point of back breaking by the number and variety of government pensions that must be paid to people for anything and nothing. There is one thing that is much better than pensions. It is to calculate as nearly as possible the amount of money that would be required from year to year to pay the retired teachers pensions, and then let the sum be added pro rata to the salaries of the real live teachers not yet superannuated. These will then have opportunity to lay up enough to keep themselves in their old age, or if they do not it is their own fault, and they can go to the poorhouse. With larger salaries the standard of professional training for teachers might be advanced and the poor ones gradually weeded out. The larger pay would invite a higher class of talent permanently into pedagogic ranks. As it is, even women can now in many cases earn more money by doing something else than teaching. If the teachers themselves wish to create a fund for the old age and illness of members of their profession, that is well, but it ought to come in that way.

Some Little Points.

The social standing of an individual is judged instantaneously by his grammar his manners and his personal cleanliness. The Irish woman who said she knew a certain family "belonged to the aristocracy because they talked so precise" was not far out of the way. Though an individual wore the Koh-i-noor on his forehead and was an angel in his morals, he could not go into good society if he ate with his knife, picked his teeth with a fork and said "them pertaters."

The style of form that governs manners and the best habits of speaking is at home. The child whose parents have refined manners and talk the English language correctly has an incalculable advantage over the one not thus launched on the world.

Parents ought to be ashamed of themselves who allow themselves to lapse from the best they know in both language and manners. The home is expected to yield for the display of the gentlest, most courteous manners, the sweetest voice and the best language you know. So shall you send civilized young people out from your home—young people who will feel at ease among well bred persons the world over. The bitterest mortification that can come to a well educated young person is the confidentiousness of the rude manners and illiterate talk of his parents. There is no need of it in this country. Even if one's early education was neglected he can grow into good manners and good grammar by using always the best he knows and setting his mind in that direction, observing how those talk and act who have had a superior bringing up. Better still will come to him.

What We Know About Mars.

We know enough to be safe in predicting that future astronomers will find out much more. The observations of the past summer have shown Schiaparelli's canals or land to be veritable fact. They were seen from the observatory at Northfield, Minn., to extend not only crosswise but also lengthwise of the planet, like stripes crossing one another in check pattern. They seem to branch out from dark spots, which look as if they might be bodies of water.

We know that Mars has two moons—Phobos and Deimos—and that Phobos is brighter than Deimos. At least these are the names our astronomers have given to the satellites. What the people of Mars call them we have not been informed. We know when the summer and winter of Mars occur, and the Lick astronomers saw the great white polar cap, which is supposed to be snow and ice, grow smaller with the increasing heat. Yet Professor Barnard is not certain that a dense cap of white clouds would not present the same appearance. Since the last opposition of Mars startling changes have occurred on the surface of the red planet for which there is no adequate explanation. These are changes in both form and color.

Professor Barnard found difficulty in securing satisfactory photographs because the planet hung so low in the horizon. The observers watched it through the great telescope and made drawings meanwhile, which are more satisfactory than the photographs. Many small stars hitherto unknown were seen to be hovering about the neighborhood of Mars. Some of these may be additional satellites.

THE ARENA OF POLITICS

Democratic Managers Figure Out Victory for Cleveland.

REPUBLICANS SURE OF WINNING.

Their Authorities at National Headquarters Say the Election of Harrison and Reid Is a Certainty, but Neither Side Will Relax a Single Effort.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—About the national Democratic headquarters there is an air of cheerfulness. The feeling there is that the fight is won, and that Democrats have only to hold their own from now until election day, but this will require plenty of hard, active work, as the Republicans have not let up one iota in their efforts to secure victory in the state.

However, the managers of the Democratic national campaign expect to win the election with at least eight and possibly twenty-seven electoral votes to spare. They have refrained from making positive claims and giving figures, they say, until they felt absolutely sure of the result. Today the managers at headquarters say that Cleveland and Stevenson are certain to get 281 electoral votes, as follows:

New York	36
New Jersey	10
Indiana	15
Connecticut	6
Total	281

There are 444 electoral votes and 223 are necessary to a choice. The above estimate gives Cleveland and Stevenson eight votes to spare if all the other electoral votes are cast for Harrison and Reid. But the Democratic leaders contended that Weaver will get anywhere from thirty to fifty electoral votes. This of course will further reduce the votes of Harrison and Reid.

Chairman Dickinson arrived from the northwest and was at the national Democratic headquarters at an early hour. To a reporter of the United Press he said: "The outlook for the Democrats in the northwest is very bright. I think there will be some big surprises for the Republicans when the returns from that section come in. In Illinois, Iowa and Michigan the Democrats are well organized and confident. In Minnesota Harrison is certain to lose four of the electoral votes. The Democrats are supporting four of the electors on the People's party ticket, which insures the defeat of four Republican electors." Mr. Dickinson said further that the Republican speakers had entirely dropped the tariff issue in their speeches in the northwest.

To Arrest Cleveland.

Hugh Wallace, the national committeeman from Washington, is at Democratic national headquarters. He says that the Republicans will lose twenty votes to the fusion ticket west of the Rocky mountains.

Chairman Murphy, of the Democratic state committee, informed a United Press reporter that he was confident that New York state was sure for the Democrats. "There is a good increase in registration in the interior," he said, "and those who think that all the increase is Republican will find that they have been sadly mistaken."

Colonel Daniel Lamont was one of the callers at the national Democratic headquarters. He said he had returned recently from abroad to speak learnedly on the situation, but from what little he had seen he was confident of the election of Cleveland and Stevenson.

There is a story in circulation that Mr. Cleveland will be arrested, should he attempt to vote, on the ground of his having lost his residence which he says he will now occupy only a week at the time he registered. The Democrats pooh pooh the this, and say that Mr. Cleveland's residence dates back to last May, the time of his leasing the house in which he lives.

Mr. Cleveland will in all probability visit his native state, New Jersey, before election. The report that he will do so has given rise to a desire for him to visit Connecticut, which he may yet conclude to do. Today he was visited by Chairman Harrity, Don M. Dickinson and Daniel S. Lamont.

A letter was received at Democratic headquarters from Mr. A. H. Evans, of the Jackson Lumber company, of Lockport, N. Y., denying that he had deserted from the ranks of the Democracy and that he intended voting for Harrison.

Colonel Cooper, of Kent county, Del., a member of the Democratic committee of that county, a caller at national headquarters, said that his state was surely Democratic.

Republicans Certain of Success.

A feeling of certainty of the success of Harrison and Reid pervaded national Republican headquarters. Reports from every quarter bring encouragement. But the principal source of the increased confidence was found in the results of Saturday's registration in the state of New York, where such Democratic strongholds as New York, Albany and Troy fell below the registration, while strong Republican localities were marked by an increased voting strength.

The last week of the campaign will be signalized by unflagging energy on the part of the campaign managers and greater activity all along the line. More speakers than ever will be at work in the doubtful states, and the finishing blows of the campaign will be delivered with effect.

Among the visitors were ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, Senator Quay, General James A. Beaver, of Pennsylvania; ex-Congressman J. Hart Brewer, of New Jersey; Charles E. Coon, of New York; Edward Einstein, Republican candidate for mayor of New York; Judge A. L. Morrison, of New Mexico; Samuel Carpenter, of the Pennsylvania railroad, and J. R. Montgomery, of Oregon.

Ex-Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, in speaking of the prospects of the coming election, said, "All my information and all my belief and all my judgment and all my hopes are in favor of our success, for our cause is right and our candidates are right, and I cannot believe that the people of the United States are either ignorant or crazy."

Chairman Carter received a letter from Hon. John F. Finerty, of Chicago, in which he said:

My recent visit to Chicago for the purpose of registering has greatly raised my expectations of Illinois. I think the gubernatorial issue is conspicuously one of honesty. I never had any doubt as to the favorable outcome of the electoral vote for the presidency. There is every where a decided movement toward the Republican party by the Irish-Americans. Many of the clans of voters have attended our meetings. Takes all in all, I am most hopeful of victory.

Senator Paddock's Views.

Nebraska has had during the past eight weeks the first active precinct to precinct canvass in its history. The state is surely safe for Harrison and Reid from 5,000 to 10,000 majority. Thousands of the old soldiers will leave the People's party and return to their allegiance, disgusted by the treachery of General Weaver to the south.

The damage done to the state by the calamity howlers has aroused state pride and indignation against the defamers of Nebraska. The agricultural population will resent in no uncertain tones at the polls these assaults on the state's prosperity. My advice from Kansas are that the Republican ticket will receive 15,000 majority. I consider the west safe for the ticket.

Hon. B. C. Kerens, member of the Republican national committee, returned to national headquarters from his western journey. He accompanied Governor McKinley on his trip across Missouri. "In the history of politics in Missouri," said Mr. Kerens, "there has never been anything like the intense enthusiasm which marked Governor McKinley's trip.

"At all the stations along the route he was greeted by immense crowds of people, and the speeches made by him and those who followed him were listened to with the closest interest that foretells conviction." Colonel Kerens was feeling very jubilant over what he considered certain indications of success.

There is growing indignation at Republican headquarters over the story that H. C. Frick was in consultation with Chairman Carter with regard to campaign funds. The story was again emphatically denied by the leaders.

Depew and Reid Speak.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 1.—Whitelaw Reid and Chauncey M. Depew spoke to a large gathering here last night. Mr. Depew showed how prosperous a country is ours, eulogized President Harrison's administration, and said that, having tried and trusted a great leader, it is well to say that "one good turn deserves another." Mr. Reid's speech did not occupy over thirty minutes. He made a plea for reciprocity and honest money, and challenged the verdict of the American people upon the character and success of the administration of Benjamin Harrison.

Cockran in Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, Del., Nov. 1. — Bourke Cockran, of New York, addressed 5,000 persons in the rink here last night. In the audience were many ladies, and the speaker held his hearers' attention for nearly two hours. Mr. Cockran was introduced by ex-Secretary of State Thomas F. Bayard, who presided. Senator Gray was also on the platform. Mr. Cockran was warmly greeted. He discussed the tariff, and concluded by saying the taxation imposed by the Republican party was unconstitutional.

McKinley in Brooklyn.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 1.—Seven thousand people filled the Clermont avenue rink to suffocation last night to hear Major McKinley speak, and at least 3,000 people were turned away. It was the biggest rally of the present campaign in the City of Churches. When the champion of protection arrived men and women climbed upon chairs and saluted and cheered until they were hoarse. Lieutenant McKinley's discussed protection and reciprocity and predicted the election of Harrison and Reid.

FASHIONS.

THE NEW COATS.

Huge revers and very wide, full sleeves are salient points of some of the new coats. The chief innovations among the plainer tailor made models appear to be the short double or triple shoulder cape and gauntlet cuff. The cape shown here has those adjuncts, and is made of drab cloth, fastened with large bone buttons. The back is cut sack fashion.

TAILOR MADE CAPE COAT.

The more elaborate of the new coats are lined with beautiful flowered silk or satin brocade. Very deep pointed cuffs are a picturesque feature. Delightful Parisian novelties are full of intricate detail. The handsomest of them, however, are made of cloth, generally drab or brown, or they are a combination of velvet and cloth trimmed with fur and wonderful silk embroidery and the sleeves are enormous. A handsome model in fawn cloth is of three quarters length, falling in loose Watteau-like folds at the back and adorned with long ribbons hanging from a bow tied between the shoulder bladers. The lining is a lovely brocade, the trimming brown fur and brown and gold embroidery and the sleeves finished with deep frills of brown velvet. Another model is of light brown corduroy cloth with a sack back, large brown velvet collar and revers of the same, the trimming being mink. The little flaring collar is no longer the fashion feature, being superseded on some of the smartest coats by the rolled over collar.

Perfectly plain tailor made coats for winter wear are made very warm by a lining of firm, heavy cloth in mixed colors, and are in fact, with the exception of the full sleeves, almost a facsimile of a man's overcoat. Some coats are lined with tartan, which is popular in English fashions for cloaks and dresses. The Cossack coat, known at the beginning of its career as the Russian blouse, has become a little too fashionable for the most exclusive dressers, though some very attractive models are still to be seen in it. The Eton jacket bodice, it may also be added, has also become almost too popular and is on the same almost of first class tailors.

It is predicted that black will be much less worn than colors in this winter's costs.

KING BEHANZIN ROUTED

France Conquers Dahomey After a Brilliant Campaign.

CANNA AND AGOMEY CAPITULATE.

Colonel Dodds Captures the Capital of the Dusky Monarch's Kingdom, and the Barbarous Human Sacrifices in His Domain Will Be Tolerated No Longer.

PARIS, Nov. 1.—A dispatch from Porto Novo states that Colonel Dodds captured Canna on Saturday and Abomey Sunday. This ends one of the most brilliant campaigns that a European power has ever waged against the natives of Africa. The French column, numbering 4,000 infantry and cavalry and several guns, set out from the coast Aug. 16, and the campaign has therefore lasted two and a half months.

The usual route to Abomey is by road, almost directly north from the coast town of Wydah. The route, however, involved crossing a river at Cotonou, which would be difficult for the artillery, and Colonel Dodds therefore chose the route along the Wheme river.

His artillery went ahead and broke a road along the river bank for the troops to follow, and the cavalry and a part of the supplies were towed up the river on transports, while 2,400 native porters carried the remainder of the provisions.

The advancing force had a number of skirmishes with the enemy and three hard fought battles before it reached the neighborhood of Canna and Abomey. The French loss on all occasions was trifling, but the Dahomeyans suffered severely in killed and wounded. The Amazon or woman warriors fought with ferocity, but their shooting was very wild.

Canna, the town that was captured on last Saturday, is eight miles from Abomey, and has a sacred character in the eyes of the Dahomeyans, as it is the burial place of a long line of Dahomey's Kings.

The capital, Abomey, could not possibly offer any resistance to a well equipped force, though the king has for many years possessed cannon of a more or less modern type and a roughly disciplined army, the most formidable members of which are the Amazons.

The city is about eight miles in circumference, protected by a ditch five feet deep, filled with a dense growth of prickly acacia. It is entered by six gates, which are simply clay walls with two openings built across the roads leading into the town. Altogether the place does not contain more than 12,000 inhabitants. It is probable that unless the king is captured he will, like Koffee-Kalkali of Ashanti under similar circumstances, retreat into the bush.

The campaign somewhat resembles the English invasion of the neighboring kingdom of Ashanti. The British forces, however, were nearly all natives, Europeans who suffered terribly from the climate, while the present invaders are for the most part Senagalese troops, with Porto Novo allies officered by Frenchmen.

The French will now doubtless seize Whydah, the Dahomey seaport. The country is poor, their profit will be small, they will probably turn it into a French colony. One good result will be that we shall hear no more of the terrible human sacrifices that have marked the annual religious festivals at the capital.

Behanzin's Human Sacrifices.

King Behanzin, a young man very much like Prempeh, the late Ashanti monarch, has brought his downfall upon himself. He has been on the throne less than three years. When he became king he made a treaty with the French, promising to recognize their rights to the Port of Kotonu, and to cease the customary raids into the French territory of Porto Novo for slaves and sacrificial victims.

The French agreed to give him an annual subsidy, and lived up to their engagement. Last year, however, Behanzin renewed his raids into Porto Novo, and when the French protested he repudiated the treaty, said he would raid where he pleased, that the French had no business in the country anyhow, and that he would drive them out of Kotonu into the sea.

The rainy season was coming on, and as the French were utterly unprepared to assume the offensive, they utilized this period to make preparations for the war. They spent about seven months in getting ready to fight, but after they were ready they moved with celerity and have had an unbroken series of successes. Colonel Dodds is now in position to supply some of the famous women warriors for exhibition at the Chicago World's fair.

TUMULT IN THE TABERNACLE.

Almost a Riot Over Dr. Pierson's First Appearance in Spurgeon's Pulpit.

LONDON, Nov. 1.—The Rev. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, presided over an uproarious prayer meeting at Spurgeon's tabernacle last evening. This was Dr. Pierson's first appearance in his pastoral capacity since his return from the states. No sooner was the hymn finished than an adherent of Thomas Spurgeon called out:

"Mr. Pierson, like many other members, I would like to know whether you are a believer in baptism by immersion?" A scene of great confusion—almost a riot—followed.

Two men seized the disturber by the arms, and half a dozen more pushed and pulled until they got him into the aisle. Then the immersionist made a rush and partially freed himself with a violent struggle, in which two members were thrown on their knees and three seats were upset. Finally the immersionist was thrust out.

Dr. Pierson, who was flushed and nervous while the immersionist was being ejected, recovered his self possession quickly and began an address concerning his plans for the next ten months. He said that he "meant to make hot work for the devil in the tabernacle this winter."

The Kaiser and Luther.

WITTENBURG, Nov. 1.—Emperor William and his wife, three of his sons, the Duke of York and a number of other titled personages took part here in the dedication of the restored church to the doors of which Luther nailed his thesis against papal indulgences. A pageant in which 1,000 figured was one of the features. The emperor's address was loudly applauded.

Professor Herzka's Proposition.

VIENNA, Nov. 1.—Dr. Theodore Herzka, political economist and writer on the subject of money, in an article against the money conference in Brussels next month suggests the replacing of gold coins with coins composed of silver and gold, mixed in the proportion of six to one, on the basis of international agreement.

GODFREY PUT TO SLEEP.

Choynski Knocks Him Out in the Fifteenth Round.

VICIOUS FROM START TO FINISH.

Both Men Fought to Win, and the Beaten Colored Man Took His Punishment Gamely, but Was No Match for His Younger Opponent from California.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Joe Choynski, of California, fought his way to victory and professional reputation by knocking out George Godfrey, of Chelsea, Mass., last night after fifteen rounds of hard fighting, in the ring of the Coney Island Athletic club.

The mill attracted the biggest crowd that has yet journeyed to the clubhouse by the sea. The attendance was bounded only by the seating capacity, and this was taxed to the utmost. Well known faces peered out from every box, and all the pugilists of renown now in the east might have been seen about the ringside. Chief among them of course was Peter Jackson, the colored gladiator from the antipodes, who recently defeated Frank Slavin, and now stands ready to dispute the world's championship with Jim Corbett.

After all the preliminaries had been decided and the referee had instructed the men they shook hands and the battle was on.

The Fight by Rounds.

Round One—After some preliminary work and scientific feinting Choynski landed a light lick on the body and got away without any return. Choynski landed a light left and Godfrey responded, but Choynski met him with right and left heavily in the mouth, getting away without damage. Godfrey rushed and reached Choynski slipped and Godfrey struck him late, which foul was claimed but not allowed.

Round Two—Godfrey opened the ball by rushing his man. He landed his right on the ribs and Choynski went down to save himself. Choynski got his left in twice. When he tried it again Godfrey dodged, and coming up quickly struck his man in the back of the head. Godfrey, who was fighting loosely, dodged again and countered with his left on Choynski's breast.

Round Four—Godfrey came to the center of the ring with a very ugly looking eye. The men sparred for a moment, when Godfrey landed a stiff left on the heart, for which he was rewarded. Then regaining a moment later, Choynski landed on his heart with his right and touched his man upon the eye with his left. Choynski landed a light left on the latter's nose. Godfrey tried his right and then his left, but fell short with both. Joe landed on George's stomach and escaped a return. Godfrey landed with left on the chest. Choynski swung and missed, and Godfrey landed with his left on the body and received a stiff left hander on the chin. Godfrey landed two rights on the body and received a left on the stomach.

Both Fight Viciously.

Round Eight—Choynski, who appeared to have little wind, played strong for his opponent. He landed a vicious right on Godfrey's head, which he staggered from. Then as Godfrey came for him Choynski slipped and took his time about getting up. When he did get to his feet Godfrey rushed him to the ropes.

Round Ten—Both led wildly and both missed. Then Godfrey had his man in a corner he couldn't get out and, clipping, holding him all the time, he sent Choynski's head back with a straight right on the chin. Choynski caught on to his opponent's wind, but Godfrey upper cut him viciously with his right, the first good blow of the kind in the mill.

Round Thirteen—Choynski led wildly. Godfrey went to go at him and Choynski fell up against the ropes. Here he landed a vicious right. Godfrey was fighting very viciously, but Choynski met and bested him at all points. Godfrey's left eye was completely closed as the round ended.

Round Fourteen—Godfrey went in right away and planted Choynski by landing his right in the wind and his left in the face. Choynski again landed on Godfrey's bad eye and got away without receiving anything in return. Choynski swung twice on Godfrey's wind heavily and both men were in vicious rushes.

Round Fifteen—Godfrey made matters extremely interesting early by rushing viciously and forcing his man. Choynski escaped with a scratch, and when the colored man spent his strength went at him in the center of the ring. Fighting him lightly with his left, he brought his right around with tremendous force on Godfrey's jaw was staggering places, and as the men clinched on into the land of dreams. Ten seconds had expired and Godfrey was defeated. The man Choynski went over, and as he put his fallen foe carried him to his corner.

Choynski was warmly congratulated and carried out of the ring and to his dressing room on the shoulders of his friends. He fought before the battle 168 pounds and Godfrey 179. The fight was for a $5,000 purse.

The Men's Records.

Choynski was born in San Francisco in 1868. He stands 5 feet 10 inches in height. He has met and conquered a number of men, among them Tom Moran, in two rounds; Jack McAuley, also in two rounds; Jack Sullivan, in three rounds and a number of others.

Godfrey defeated him in twenty-one rounds. Goddard defeated him twice in eight rounds respectively.

Godfrey was born in 1832 on Prince Edward's island. He stands 5 feet 10½ inches in height. He has defeated Jack Ashton, Jack Dempsey and Joe Lannon. He fought a draw with Jake Kilrain, one of three who held the other of four rounds

SOME ODD STORIES.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS RELATED BY MAJOR A. R. CALHOUN.

An Electrical Girl Who Lived During the Last Century Was Believed to Be Haunted—How She Destroyed the Peace and Furniture of Her Employers.

(Copyright, 1892, by American Press Association.)

That electrical influences have much to do with what some believe to be supernatural manifestations there cannot be any doubt. And the more we learn about this wonderful power which science is fast making subservient to the purposes of man the less surprising will appear the haunted houses, which, though growing fewer as houses grow more plentiful, are still to be found, particularly in the older countries.

The haunted house at Stockwell, in England, excited the interest of the learned and unlearned about the time of the breaking out of our Revolutionary war, with which for a time it divided the interest of the English speaking world.

The facts in the case of this haunted house are entirely authentic.

It was in early January, and Mrs. Golding, an estimable and cultured lady, was seated in the parlor of her mansion at Stockwell, in the county of Surry, when she heard the glass in the kitchen falling and breaking.

Mrs. Golding at once summoned her maid, and the girl, appearing in a state of great alarm, called out:

"Oh, missus, everything on the shelves is a-tumbling down to the floor and smashing to pieces!"

Immediately following this violent rappings, like the regular beating of great hammers against the walls, were heard all over the house. While this pounding went on all the dishes and china, as if flung down by angry hands, were dashed to the floor and broken into fragments.

THE SERVANT SEEMED TO BE EXCITED.

Mrs. Golding and the servants ran out, and their screams alarmed the neighbors, who came running toward them. Mr. Rowlige, a carpenter, attracted by the thumping still going on in the house, went to the door to make an examination, but the noise frightened him away and he hurried back, declaring that the foundation of the building was giving way and that the house must soon fall.

Mrs. Golding's maid had only been with her a few days, and the noises seemed to follow her. She was evidently not a stranger to them, for though she appeared to be perplexed she was not in the least alarmed.

After a time the noises ceased, and Mrs. Golding was somewhat hysterical that a doctor had to be summoned, who, according to the practice of the day, proceeded to bleed her.

The girl, who had gone up stairs to her own room, was called down to hold the basin. She did as she was told, but after the bleeding was over the basin leaped out of her hand and was broken to pieces.

Under these circumstances a consultation was held, and it was thought advisable to remove the furniture to a neighbor's. A number of strong but very much frightened men were summoned for this purpose, but their alarm increased when they found the furniture going to pieces in their hands, as if it were beaten by sledge hammers from the inside.

Mr. Haines, a civil engineer, attempted to take away a costly pier glass, but parts of the frame flew off in his hands.

Mr. Saville, a lawyer, was asked to drink some wine which he had helped to carry up from the cellar, but the bottle broke before he could uncork it.

"At all times of action," says the narrative to which I am indebted for this odd story, "Mrs. Golding's servant was walking back and forward.

"She seemed to be very much excited, though, as has been said—not frightened. They tried to get her to sit down, but instead she kept walking back and forward, as if forced to move against her will.

"She appeared to be sorry for the excitement of her mistress, and frequently implored her not to be alarmed, as these things could not be helped. And at all this the neighbors were sorely amazed, nor were there wanting those who declared that she was a witch.

"One proposed that she be thrown into the pond, where if she sank her innocence would be assured, but if she floated that would be a positive evidence of her guilt, and then the proper thing to do would be to take her out and burn her. But this suggestion was not encouraged."

Mrs. Golding, too much alarmed to stay in her own house, went to a neighbor's named Mrs. Paul, her maid accompanying her.

Up to this time Mrs. Paul's house had been as quiet as any house in all England during the reign of George III, but the advent of Mrs. Golding and her maid soon put an end to all this.

The destroying force followed either one or both of those women. They were not well settled at Mrs. Paul's before the work of destruction that had driven them from their own house was renewed. "Every thing," says the narrative, "was broken till there were not more than two or three cups and saucers left out of a large pantry full of china."

About 5 o'clock the next morning Mrs. Paul went to her visitors and told them to get up, as the house was going to pieces.

The furniture began to groan and creak and fall to pieces, as if unseen giants were pulling it apart. At length Mrs. Golding and her servant were glad to leave Mrs. Paul's, and they sought refuge in the house of a neighbor named Fowler.

Mr. Fowler was a relative of Mrs. Golding, but eluding all the persecution against the girl he told this woman that he would be glad to give her asylum, but that he could not, in justice to his own peace and furniture, take in that maid.

As soon as the girl left Streknell the noises and beatings that had been subsiding the whole of England suddenly stopped.

The girl went back to her own house to help Mrs. Streknell through the winter, but being of an independent turn of mind he always told them when spring came that he could shift for himself during the summer months.

How he shifted was no secret, though he did not work. Sam had a propensity for picking up any articles that were at once portable and valuable and appropriating them to his own use.

As he was poor and rather liked, no further notice was taken of his peculiarities than to keep a sharp lookout when he was about.

A dealer had a quantity of dried fish landed at the wharf at an hour too late to get them into his store. As he was about covering them with an oilcloth he espied Sam observing the operation with much interest.

Selecting two of the fish the dealer said:

"Here, Sam, I must leave these fish here tonight, and I will give you these two if you promise me that you will not steal any."

Sam took the fish, examined them and said as he handed them back:

"That's a fair offer, but"—

"But what?"

"I think," said Sam, with a glance at the pile, "that if I keep my eyes open I can do better."

Was He Absentminded?

Some years ago the "conversation lozenge," as it was called, was very popular with young people in the spoony state. It was intended to answer a double purpose, the first perhaps being its intrinsic sweetness and the second the fact that each lozenge had printed on it, in red letters if I remember rightly, an amorous question or a reply more or less encouraging and affectionate.

Bob Nothridge, despite the fact that he was a Sunday school teacher and passed the collection box down one of the church aisles at the right time, was very fond of the girls.

The collection box was a half closed in affair, to which a long handle was attached to reach the length of a pew. It was Bob's custom to set an example to contributors before presenting the box by depositing in the basket a twenty-five cent piece, except on special occasions, when he would see that and go three quarters better.

He delighted to present the box to the girls, but one Sunday he wondered why all the fair maids were so much astonished and amused. Even the staid elderly people laughed, and as it continued till the collection was finished.

It was not till Bob reached the pulpit end of the church, with his basket collectors thigh he was then reason for the hilarity of the people in the pews. There, staring him in the face, was a conversation lozenge bearing the legend, "Will you marry me?"

ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

Looking Out for the Brewer.

A humorous incident occurred at a meeting where Sir Wilfrid Lawson was speaking. One of the principal plunks in his programme was of course his permissive bill, but all his attempts to explain it were useless—they would not hear him. At last he called some of the disturbers up to the platform and tried to pacify them. One of them came up three parts drunk and stood close to him. He was asked what he had to say, when, turning to the great brewer of the place, who was sitting near and who was not making a noise, the man in words which he thought could not be disputed and must carry conviction with them exclaimed, "If your bill is carried, sir, what is to become of this gentleman?"—London Standard.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

AN IMPORTANT DUTY THAT USUALLY RESTS WITH MOTHERS.

Reflections on the Incidents of One Day's Call—Several Kinds of Young People in Several Different Households—Why Many Mothers Fail.

It is of course true that no general and uniform system of training the young can be expected. Diverse natures will show their diversity in their relations to other people. It has been my fortune to make calls today on different families, and at each one to find children. At house No. 1 I met as the gate a big headed, big eyed boy that by temperament you could see was an inventor. Everything in this world existed for him to use for a purpose, and that purpose you would be likely to find original with himself. He had his foot on the rose trellis—now what do you suppose that trellis was to him? Clearly enough to us it was for a rosebush to climb on; but to him it was just as evidently for him to climb on.

Up he went, got caught by the rose and in the struggle the boy got the worst of it. It is not hard to see why rosebushes have thorns in that yard. As I entered the house big eyes was just in front of me, walking backward and talking in a half shy way in order to find me out. He evidently understood me, or thought he did. A moment after he had run up stairs, mounted the balustrade and came riding down with a whack at his mother's feet.

"I'll tell your father, sir, if you do that again!" she cried at him. Two bad things. She had in one sentence owned up that she could not manage him herself, and that a first wrong was to be repeated before it became correctable. We had some domestic matters to talk over, and the subject of canning fruit to discuss, which took us to the kitchen. Little Phil was everywhere, full of inquiry and never still. But at every move his mother was sharply saying: "Stop that, sir, or I won't tell your father, and he'll train you."

I should have liked to see the boy's thoughts. Did he learn to fear his father and dread his training, or were all the threats of his mother mere fustian? I wonder if she really ever reported the chap's performances? I believe not. It was a case of weakness. She was not self educated to educate any one else. All through my visit there was not one permit, not one sympathetic word of guidance, but constant effort to stop him. The poor fellow had, instead of a mother, a brakesman or brakeswoman, whose whole business in the way of training a child was to check him.

At house No. 2 I found a case of this sort, a peevish girl, so puny I could not be sure of her age, but about six. The little creature had not one easy nerve in her body—a restless, fretted body that always wanted something and did not know why. The seat of her trouble was her stomach, and the secret of that difficulty was inherited from both parents. The father is an inveterate smoker, and the mother a devotee of tea and nervousness. The child of course is a tease and not easy to endure. The mother had had enough work to endure herself, but when it came to how more relief of the same sort she gave up all effort at using common sense. The little girl had only to tease for anything in order to get it, if possible. She ate at all times whatever she craved, notwithstanding the mother knew in general terms that she was aggravating the difficulty.

When I had been seated on the veranda overlooking a pretty garden the child began to pull off choice flowers and throw them in my lap. There really was no use in this, for I could not carry them away and did not wish to do so. Placing my hand on the little one I said: "Now, my little friend, we have enough. Let us talk about this beautiful blue one." We had a few moments' quite pleasant chat about the flower, but before I could quite realize that she had left me she was teasing her mother for a banana. The mother replied: "It isn't good for you, my dear. I would not eat it." But the child set up a determined whine, and got one. She waited. I was ashamed to tell you how disagreeable this girl became to me in the course of a single half hour.

At house No. 3 I found a boy of about eight, his breeches rolled up as high as possible and his feet bare. He was a sturdy fellow, full of vitality and not very fond of book study. He knew me well and trotted me off at once down the garden way to show me something he had found out about insects, and more about flowers. We had a splendid time for half an hour before his mother discovered us, and then like a sensible woman she joined us in our study of things. "The boy doesn't like books very well," she said, "but he likes things, and that, I think, will have to do." But the time came for several duties and I was firmly ordered to go. He went without a complaint and with promptitude. It certainly was not agreeable to him to leave us, yet he was well trained.

Invited to dine at this house I did so, because it is pleasant always to be there as long as is considerate. At the table berries were passed to the smallest child, a girl of seven years, who declined them. Soon after she said she wished for berries. "What you have on your plate is very nice," said her mother, but gave her no berries. I said, "Will berries hurt her, do you think?" "Oh, no," she answered, "but I prefer she should learn not to change her mind so easily." This fine blending of freedom and firmness was producing an admirable family and a home of beauty.

The power to make beautiful souls is a rare gift—it constitutes the genius of motherhood. Nothing but that privilege and duty would have constituted woman what she is at her best—a creator. It is our true ambition. I do not lack sympathy for those who have inherited such biases or weaknesses as disqualify them for being noble mothers; only such persons should not become wives. They have no right to assume an office they cannot fill.—Mary E. Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat

A Good Liniment.

A cheap stimulating liniment which will be almost odorless and yet effective for outside application can be made as follows: In one quart of turpentine mix one quart of cod oil. Pack half an ounce of alkanet root and two ounces of pulverized capsicum in a large ordinary funnel. Over this mixture pour the turpentine and oil, allowing it all to percolate through the capsicum and alkanet root. In this way it will extract the substance of the capsicum and take on a beautiful red from the alkanet. After this has been done add one ounce of the oil of peppermint and four ounces of gum camphor. To make it more fragrant add a little oil of pepper grass. This liniment thus completed is a strong, efficacious one to rub on the skin, and so clean and fragrant that even the most fastidious would not hesitate to use it.—Yankee Blade.

Couldn't Afford It.

The woman with a ring on every finger was a queenly beauty, with the regal manner largely predominating over the comeliness. She had a harsh 1-am-not-my-brother's-keeper look in her eyes as she entered the grocery store around the corner.

"Are those tomatoes fresh?" she demanded icily.

A clerk with thin, sandy hair and no beard hastened to assure her that the tomatoes were just from the vine.

"Is that celery crisp?"

"Yes'm."

"Those cabbages free from decay inside?"

"Entirely free."

"Those melons ripe?"

"Dead ripe."

"Those lemons juicy?"

"Very."

"Those cranberries reddened on the vines?"

"Yes, indeed."

The woman glanced scornfully about the place.

"How are you selling butter?" she asked, with a cold, stony glare.

"Thirty cents, ma'am."

"Thirty cents! Well, I declare. I'"

She was sweeping toward the door.

The clerk with the thin hair went into the back part of the store to collect a few thoughts.—Detroit Tribune.

TWO MASS MEETINGS.

THE OPPOSING PARTIES IN THE SAME BUILDING.

The Republican Meeting Outnumbered the Democratic Five to One and was a Marked Contrast in Other Respects.

There have been two mass meetings held in the Crescent building this week—one by the Democrats and the other by the Republicans.

The Democratic meeting was held on Monday evening in a small store known as Democratic headquarters, and had an audience of not over one hundred persons, equally divided between men and boys, and the room was thick with smoke and the rank odor of strong tobacco, for nearly everyone smoked pipes, or had very fragrant cigars.

The Republican meeting was held in the large hall known as Republican headquarters and had an audience of about five hundred, among whom were quite a sprinkling of ladies. Everybody was decorous.

In the Democratic meeting the speaker was a Mr. Murphy of Washington, the burden of whose theme was abuse of the McKinley bill and praise of English free trade, the system with which the Democrats aim to favor England and injure our own industries.

The Republican meeting was addressed by a Mr. Pennypacker, who for one hour and a half held the audience in closest attention by a discourse which was historically accurate and argumentative.

The speaker showed that the Democratic party is still true to its record of being the party of calamity.

We are to-day a prosperous nation, as the result of a wise Republican policy, and the Democratic party and its old time partner, England, feel hurt and jealous of core in a struggle to injure our country by breaking down our Protective tariff, to which our prosperity is largely due.

Over a quarter of a century ago this partnership between the Democratic party and England was formed, and the Southern wing of the party, with the guns and the cannons, and even the paper and ball, furnished by England, tried to destroy us as a nation. Having failed to do this by the bullet, they now hope to do it by the ballot, aided by a British corruption fund. By this partnership between England and the Democratic party it is hoped to elect a President and Congress which will repeal the McKinley law, or at least nullify its provisions for the protection of our home industries, and force wages to the same level they are in free Trade England.

The speaker had spent some time in England and had taken pains to find out the rates of wages there for similar occupations there and in his State, Pennsylvania. He found in some instances men receiving 60 cents per day for the identical work for which in his State they were paid $2.50 per day, and in every case a more or less large difference in favor of the workman in this country.

"All my Democratic friend says that they are of living is so much lower over there. Well, I took occasion to look into that matter also, and I don't think our workmen would care to live as the workmen in England live on the average. I found numerous instances where two families occupied three rooms, because they could afford no better, but I could not find such condition of affairs here. Of course, if you will compare such families with families of American mechanics you will find it cheaper over there, but what intelligent workingman here would have his family live that way. As a matter of fact food in England is dearer than in this country. Clothing may be a little cheaper at present, but not enough to make it an object for the workmen to risk his present prosperity for the uncertainty at least which may be expected from the Democratic policy.

The speaker gave numerous illustrations of this character, and held the audience intensely interested to the close.

The band played a selection, and, in response of Councilman Frank Marsh, who presided at the meeting, three rousing cheers were given for Harrison and Reid, and the Republican ticket generally.

GUNNING FATALITIES.

ONE MAN KILLED, ANOTHER BADLY WOUNDED.

The Dead Man Shot Through the Heart, the Wounded Man Shot Through the Eye.—The Dead Body Unidentified.

While a party of gunners were hunting near Morristown, yesterday, one of their number stumbled over the body of a dead man, lying face downwards in some bushes.

They rolled the body over and discovered that the man had been shot in the left breast, just below the heart.

From all appearances, it was judged that the man had been dead only a short time, as the body had not commenced to decompose.

The gunners carried the corpse to the nearest house, which was quite a distance from the spot where the body was found.

As soon as it became known among the farmers, of the gunners' ghastly find, there flocked to the house to see if they could identify the body.

A number of Plainfielders were gunning in that vicinity yesterday, and one of them saw the body after it was taken to the house, but did not recognize the man as anyone from this locality.

Another gunning accident occurred in the same locality yesterday.

Two men were hunting in the woods for woodcock, when they strayed from each other, and, owing to the thick undergrowth of sprouts, were unable to see one another. A woodcock suddenly arose, and one of the men shot at it. He missed the bird, but his companion, who was a short distance in front of him, received part of the charge of shot in his face. He was completely blinded in one eye, and his face was filled with shot.

POLITICAL PICKLES.

To Redeem New Jersey.

Mr. Kean's speeches and his presence are making a most favorable impression upon the people of New Jersey and are winning him many votes among the independent and undecided voters. The prospects of his election are growing brighter and brighter every day. The Republican leaders are hopeful that Kean's strength will so help Harrison and Reid that the State may be redeemed for them. The following estimate of majorities, which is made by a State official who is thoroughly acquainted with the situation throughout the State, is considered very conservative:

County.	Kean.	Watts.
Atlantic	500	—
Bergen	—	400
Burlington	500	—
Camden	2,800	—
Cape May	200	—
Cumberland	1,500	—

Republican Meeting at Jersey City.

The Hudson County Republican League propose to hold a monster Republican parade, next Friday evening, in Jersey City. It will surpass anything in the shape of a local parade that has ever been held there. There are now over fifty clubs in Jersey City alone.

The Hon. John Kean, Jr., Mayor Wanser, State Organizer Ulrich of this city, and other well known Republicans will review the parade from the Union League Club room.

The Coal Combine Assemblyman.

Air—"Down in a Coal Mine."

I am a smart Assemblyman,
And sharp as sharp can be,
For whether coal be cheap or dear
I make the same to me.
The coal combine full well I know,
And vote for it always,
So where the dollars brightly glow
I'd wear away my days.

Shall we elect any man who voted for the combine? No! We will put him—

CHORUS.

"Down in a coal mine, underneath the ground,
Where a gleam of sunshine never can be found,
Digging many diamonds of the wretch round,
Down in a coal mine, underneath the ground."

At every session, soon or late,
My vote will boodle earn,
And as the country the lobby wait,
And watch for my return;
For each that buys them all alike,
What e'er their price may be,
It may look honest, Treason strike,
And fling his purse to me.

Shall we elect any man, etc.—CHO.

How little do the bosses care,
Who sit at home secure,
What freezing blasts the workmen dare,
What hardships they endure;
No cheery fires their cots and homes boast,
To warm themselves and wives,
The combine bill will surely cost
Poor little children's lives.

Shall we elect any man, etc.—CHO.

Then cheer up, lads, and make ye much
Of every joy you can,
But let your vote be always such
As best become a man;
However bosses cry and shout,
Good Lord, preserve me soul,
We'll never choose Assemblymen
Who've raised the price of coal.

Shall we elect any man, etc.—CHO.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WELL-KNOWN PLAINFIELDER IN THE WEST.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—

THE first settlers here had no picnic, and neither have the later arrivals at present.

We are now having quite a dry spell, no rain having fallen in several months. The last few Winters, too, have been cold and stormy, and cattle men have lost heavily. On this account many herds of cattle have been shipped to Montana, Kansas and Colorado, while large outfits have gone out of the business. Four years ago we had double the amount of cattle on the ranges that we have now. Sheep are taking their place. You can see thousands of sheep in every direction. Sheep men have coined money the last few years, since the McKinley bill went into operation. They will have hard times this Winter, though, for want of water and grass. Herds of from ten to thirty thousand sheep are common. Of course thousands of cattle are still on the range, and they look well.

I have seen many herds on the trail, some having as many as 5,000 head. These were being shipped to market, or other pastures.

Ex-Senator Dorsey has just sold his fine ranch near Springer. His company had, at one time, 50,000 cattle on the range. Three years ago they sold over $200,000 worth of steers. This year they disband and go out of the business. Mr. Dorsey was a big man out here. His house was furnished elegantly. The pictures alone cost $65,000. His home will now be used as a sanitarium for consumptives. Mr. Dorsey is now engaged in irrigating large tracts in Colorado. His plant is worth several millions of dollars.

Kit Carson's two sons have a sheep ranch not far from us. They have many relics of their distinguished father.

Several years ago there was a snow storm here lasting eight days. Cattle perished by the hundreds, and many lives were lost. The cattle business hasn't been the same since then.

Game is quite plentiful. If you were here I could show you herds of antelope of forty head, and I know of fifteen coveys of California quail, averaging from fifteen to sixty birds in a covey. As for rabbits, they are of no account; they are too numerous.

Where I am staying is over 5,000 feet above the sea. Northern New Mexico is considered about the healthiest place in the world.

Four or five fine fellows have been badly hurt and several killed since I have been here. As a rule they were thrown from their horses. The prairie dog holes do the business. They are a nuisance.

The large red ants are so plentiful, they desolate whole pastures, and, when they get on you, they bite mighty savagely, and, I tell you, they hurt.

Centipedes get into the houses and drop on the tables. I have killed numbers of them.

The rattlesnake abounds. They are often killed 8½ feet long. They are monsters. Once I was nearly bitten by one. I have the rattles of quite a number. Whenever I kill one I add the rattles to my collection.

In places the roads are good for bicycling. I have only seen one wheel since I have been in the territory. Horses here take their place. Song birds are plentiful, and their king, the mockingbird, can be heard on every hand.

I was never in a place where so many varieties of wild flowers abound. Many varieties are beautiful.

When it does rain here, it fairly floods everything, while the thunder is terrific. One grove of trees hasn't a tree in it but what has been struck by lightning. Five trees were struck near my home in one night. Cowboys and cattle are often killed by lightning.

Murders, of course, are frequent. Every few days you hear of one. The laws, as yet, are not obeyed the way they should be, and several committees talk of raising vigilant committees.

If they would only hang several hundred of these desperadoes the country would be much purer. The celebrated "Bill the Kid" sent to one on his tares through here. Many places are noted as being the scene of his killing. He is dead, and his followers are cut down by one being killed off, to the great benefit of the country. CHARLES SANFORD.

That a man who has a wife and reared a family may be held amenable for breach of promise of marriage was decided recently by Supreme Court Justice Garrison in the Camden courts. The decision was rendered in the suit of Emily E. Seybert of Camden against William W. Budderow, postmaster, and a wealthy storekeeper of Palmyra, N. J.

The plaintiff's suit was based upon the claim that Budderow had paid her marked attentions under the name of Reynolds, and had wronged her.

A jury will decide the amount of damages. Budderow is one of the heirs of Josiah Wallace, who died in Palmyra, leaving an estate of $200,000, with no will.

The outline of particular features divides the exhibit into fifteen departments. The first is to contain photographs, charts, reports, etc., relating to the school system in general. The second deals with the statistics, furniture, etc., of the kindergartens. The third is devoted to primary, the fourth to grammar and the fifth to high schools. Then are to follow those relating to state of the unrattled schools, evening schools, the normal school, city training school for teachers, special State schools, technical schools, private schools, colleges, reading circles and vacation schools.

There was excitement last Monday in the sattler department of the Singer factory, caused by the illness of an employe. William Root, the sufferer, quest: discovery of the cause of his sickness.

Root, following a time-honored custom in the great hive, ate a portion of his lunch during the morning hours. He was partaking of a meat sandwich when he was suddenly taken ill, and passed through terrible agony for over an hour. His groans drew the seat of pain, and, after he had recovered somewhat from the attack, he naturally examined the remainder of his lunch to search for a cause of his illness. He was horrified to find that the remaining sandwich in his lunch basket was sprinkled with a substance resembling fine broken glass.

THE ARENA OF POLITICS.

Activity Increasing as the Campaign Draws to a Close.

HUSTLING AT THE HEADQUARTERS.

The Battle to Win Votes to Be Kept Up to the Last Moment—Judge W. Q. Gresham Announces That He Will Vote for Cleveland for President.

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—Senator Quay was at Republican national headquarters, and had a conference with Vice President Morton, Chairman Carter, General Clarkson and Mr. Manley. After leaving the conference room Senator Quay was asked to give his views of the situation and his opinion as to the result. He said:

"I leave for Philadelphia at once, and I possibly may return, but not necessarily. Coming here on the suggestion of some of the gentlemen engaged in the management of the Republican campaign, who thought my experience in 1888 might be useful in the solution of two or three problems, I have gone very carefully through the details of their labor up to the present time, and have canvassed with them their propositions for the future. Their administration has been faultless. Their correspondence and reports are that the sentiment of the country is favorable to a continuation of Republican rule.

"Mr. Harrison will be elected. It is my belief that he will carry the states of New York, Indiana and Connecticut. Existing conditions are such that the electoral vote of New York will elect him without Indiana and Connecticut. Indiana and Connecticut will elect him without New York."

New York's Registration.

There are many significant facts about the registration in New York city, all pointing, in the judgment of the Republican national committee, to a victory for Harrison and Reid. One of the most important facts is that the registration for 1892 before Fortieth street, on that portion of the town where the Democrats are especially strong, is 3,303 less than it was in 1888. Above Fortieth street the registration this year stands 149,366 against 125,574 —an increase of 27,049, or 22.12 per cent.

The entire increase in registration, therefore, is above Fortieth street. Comparing the registration by assembly districts as at present constituted with the total vote cast in 1891 in these districts, the fact appears that in the districts casting heavy Democratic majorities the increase of the registration over the vote cast is about 25 per cent., while the increase in districts giving annual Democratic or Republican plurality is about 37 per cent. The first ten assembly districts of this city are heavily Democratic, their majorities ranging, on the vote cast in 1891, from 3,000 to 5,000. In those districts the percentage of increase in registration this year over the vote cast in 1891 is only 22.96 per cent.

The Eleventh assembly district is a Republican district. There the increase is 27 per cent. The Twenty-third district is a Republican district. There the increase is 31 per cent. The Twenty-seventh district is slightly Democratic, but it contains an enormous Republican vote. There the increase is 41 per cent.

The sum and substance of all this is that in those parts of the city where the Republicans are strong registration is very heavy, showing large increase over the total vote cast last year, while in the heavily Democratic districts the registration is low, showing a small increase over last year's vote.

Croker's Prediction Analyzed.

Six weeks ago Mr. Croker gave out the prediction that the registration in the New York city would amount to 320,000. That was a conservative estimate. It allowed for a considerable falling off from what would be a full registration, on the basis of the natural increase over the registration of 1888, there should be now on the registry lists 342,000 names, but there are not 342,000 nor 320,000. There are only 309,859, and, as near as the analysis above given clearly shows, lies in the Democratic districts.

The registration as it stands proves the truth of the Democratic allegations at Chicago that Cleveland is essentially a weak candidate. When the Democratic delegation from this state united in the statement to the Chicago convention that Cleveland could not possibly carry the state of New York they contemplated precisely the situation which has come about.

They knew that there would be a slump in the Democratic vote if he was made the party nominee and their predictions have been realized. They have made a bold fight to keep him out, but they have failed in the three months to undo among their fellowers the prejudices of years.

The Republican county committee, by comparing their canvass of the city with the registry lists, have ascertained that substantially the whole Republican vote of this city is on the rolls. One hundred and fifteen thousand Republican votes will be cast, as compared with 103,000 in 1888. The full vote of the city will not be much more than 291,000. If the Democrats obtain 58.5 per cent. of the total estimated, they will be doing enormously well on the situation as it stands to-day. This will give them 170,000 and a plurality of 55,000. This is as much as they can with any degree of reason hope to accomplish.

How the Betting Goes.

A conference over the situation in New York was held in the rooms of the state Republican committee, at which politicians from all over the state conferred with Chairman Hackett and Brookfield.

The principal topic of discussion around hotels and at political headquarters is not the peculiar betting on the result of the presidential election. There were thousands of dollars ready to wager on Harrison on the general result, with no takers, while on the other hand remarkable odds were offered on the success of the Democratic electoral ticket in New York state.

August Belmont, who placed $100,000 and won it on Harrison in 1888, arrived from Philadelphia with $75,000, which he was prepared to bet the same way this time. He has thus far found no takers on the general result.

M. F. Dwyer, the turfman, placed $20,000 in Billy Edwards' hands to bet at odds of 10 to 6 on Cleveland's carrying New York. Six thousand dollars of this was taken by Mr. Hill.

Mr. R. S. Stokes also bet $1,000 to 800 on Cleveland's carrying New York. R. S. Mitchell, of Baltimore, taking the stakes.

At Democratic Headquarters.

At the Democratic national headquarters a dispatch was received from Chicago stating that the Democrats of Illinois had no longer any doubt of carrying the state for Cleveland, and that they were offering even money on the success of the Democratic electoral ticket.

John Steleon, of Boston, the well known theatrical manager, is at the Hoffman House. He informed a reporter of the United Press he was so confident of the Democrats carrying Massachusetts that he had left $50,000 at the Tremont House before he came away. He wagered that Governor Russell would be re-elected. He also predicted that Cleveland would carry New York, New Jersey and Indiana. He declared that he was ready to bet any reasonable amount the Republicans chose to cover that Cleveland would be elected.

Senator Hill will make speeches during the week in the following cities of New York state: Port Jervis, Wednesday night; Canandaigua, Thursday afternoon; Syracuse, Thursday night; Cortland, Friday afternoon; Elmira, Friday night; Albany, Saturday night.

Gresham Will Vote for Cleveland.

The following statement and letter issued by the Democratic national committee were also given to the press last evening at Springfield, Ills., by Hon. Buford Wilson, who was solicitor of the treasury under Grant's administration:

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., Nov. 1.

TO THE PUBLIC—The truth of the statement made by myself and others that Judge Gresham said he intended to vote for Mr. Cleveland at the coming election has been persistently denied, but only by the Republican press, but also by the national Republican committee and upon the stump. It is due to Judge Gresham and his friends that the truth be known, and I therefore take the responsibility of giving to the public his letter of Oct. 27, addressed to me.

BUFORD WILSON.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.

The following is the letter:

Hon. Buford Wilson, Springfield, Ills.:

DEAR MAJOR—I have your letter of the 21st inst. I did tell you originally that after mature reflection I had determined to vote for Mr. Cleveland this fall because I agreed in the main with him on the tariff and did not believe in the principles embodied in the McKinley bill. I adhere to that determination and have said nothing indicating a change of purpose.

It is not true that with my knowledge or consent the president was asked to appoint me to an office. It is not true that I requested any one to say or do anything to obtain the Republican nomination this year. It is not true that I voted for Mr. Cleveland in 1888. I voted the Republican ticket at every presidential election since the party was organized, except in 1864, when I was not able to go to the polls.

The Republicans were pledged to a reduction of the war tariff long before less, and during the campaign of 1888 year the pledge was renewed with emphasis again and again. Instead of keeping that promise the McKinley bill was passed, imposing still higher duties.

It was passed in the interest of favored classes, and not for the benefit of the whole people.

It neither enhanced the price of farm products nor benefited labor. Wages are still and ever will be regulated by supply and demand. Duties were imposed upon some articles so high as to destroy competition and foster trusts and monopolies. I think you will agree with me that this was an abandonment of the doctrine of moderate incidental protection.

The tariff is now the most important question before the people, and whatever others may do, I shall exercise the right of individual judgment and vote according to my convictions. I think with you that a Republican can vote for Mr. Cleveland without joining the Democratic party. How I shall vote in the future will depend upon the questions at issue.

Yours very truly, W. Q. GRESHAM

An Ovation to Cleveland.

The business men of New York who favor the election of Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson had their demonstration last night, and a notable one it was in many respects. Lenox Lyceum was the scene. The magnificent auditorium was crowded from platform to door with a solid mass of humanity that stood for hours to give vent to their Democratic enthusiasm. There were six business men's clubs represented in the demonstration. The platform was occupied by 350 vice presidents, each one of whom is well known in the financial world.

The immense audience throughout was made up almost entirely of business men and their clerks and wives and daughters. It was somewhat difficult to estimate the number present, but there must have been fully 5,000.

The big attraction of the meeting was the appearance and speech of Mr. Cleveland. When the portly presence of Mr. Cleveland was recognized there went up a wild shout that shivered the electric lights away up in the dome and was heard in Central park. For nearly five minutes it lasted, and during that time the Lyceum presented a scene not common even in a presidential campaign. The women in the boxes all around the hall stood up and waved the stars and Stripes over the rail and added their applause to the masses below. Every one had a flag.

When quiet was restored Hon. J. Edward Simmons, president of the Business Men's Democratic association, was named as chairman of the meeting. Mr. Simmons received three big cheers when he stepped forward. He spoke briefly, after which a long list of vice presidents and secretaries was read.

Resolutions were read and adopted reciting that the assembly, reflecting the opinion of all classes of business men in the city of New York, believe the Democratic party to be the champion of honest money, just taxes and freedom of opinion; that they heartily indorse the Chicago platform, and pledge themselves to the earnest support of Cleveland and Stevenson.

Another big demonstration occurred when Mr. Cleveland arose and Mr. Simmons said, "I have the honor to introduce to you our standard bearer, Grover Cleveland." When quiet was restored Mr. Cleveland started in at once on his speech, in which he argued that the business interests of the country were safer under Democratic rule than under Republican rule. He was interrupted at every other sentence by showers of applause, and when he sat down somewhat unexpectedly some one called for three cheers for Cleveland. They were given with a will, and then three more.

Hon. W. C. P. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, then spoke and raised a tumult of applause by reading the Wilson-Gresham correspondence. The meeting broke up with cheers for Cleveland and Stevenson.

THE POWERS OF MARSHALS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—Attorney General Miller has issued a circular letter to all United States marshals and district attorneys throughout the United States, clearly defining the line of policy which the department of justice will pursue in the coming elections for congressmen in relation to the appointment of United States supervisors of elections and special deputy marshals to attend the polls. He says:

The provisions of the federal election law are in force whenever a representative in congress is voted for, and whenever any of the provisions of the federal law are in conflict with the state statutes the federal statutes must be followed.

In the language of the statutes of the United States, section 2,028, it is the duty of the supervisors in their respective election districts on voting precincts, "if on election day the polls, occupy and remain in such position from time to time whether before or behind the ballot boxes, as will, in their judgment, best enable them to see each person offering to vote and the registration or ballot by him, and as will best conduce to their scrutinizing the manner in which the registration or voting is being conducted, and shall there remain until every duty in respect to such canvass, certificates, returns and statements has been wholly completed."

By section 2,022 the deputy marshals are authorized to arrest, with or without process, any person who commits or attempts or offers to commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited by law, or who commits any breach of the peace, or who commits any violation of the laws of the United States; but no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of the marshal, or one of his general or special deputies, or one of the supervisors of election.

And the supervisors have like power to make arrests. Any attempt to interfere with the supervisors or deputy marshal in the proper discharge of their duties is a violation of the law and subjects the wrongdoer to a severe penalty.

Reid and Depew Alternate.

HORNELLSVILLE, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Hon. Whitelaw Reid and Hon. Chauncey M. Depew spoke in Hornellsville last evening. Their reception was enthusiastic. Mr. Reid was received by Metropolitan hall by a committee of the Republican clubs. An audience of a thousand men awaited him. He said, "I am here to represent the party that freed the slaves, that paid the debt, that made the McKinley tax, of which it is proud." Mr. Reid then asked whether there was a Democrat present who would undo these acts if he could. He then discussed the platforms of the two parties.

While Mr. Reid had been addressing the meeting at Metropolitan hall Mr. Depew had been addressing an audience of about 2,500 people at the opera house. Both speakers finished speaking at about the same time, and while Mr. Reid was departing for the opera house Mr. Depew was on his way to the Metropolitan hall, where he was met with a rousing cheer. Mr. Depew spoke on the currency question, and illustrated the evil results that would follow if the old wildcat banks were revived.

Following the addresses a reception was held at the opera house, and thousands availed themselves of the privilege of shaking hands with the vice presidential candidate. Hon. Whitelaw Reid, and with the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew.

Hill in Schenectady.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Senator David B. Hill spoke here last night before a large and enthusiastic gathering of Democrats. He was escorted to the convention hall by the marching Democratic clubs. There was a large number of Republicans and women among the audience, and the reception given Senator Hill was one of the most enthusiastic ever accorded a campaign speaker in this city. Senator Hill opened with a discussion of the tariff; then he said there never were standard bearers selected more fit to bear in triumph the Democratic banner than Cleveland and Stevenson, and concluded with a vigorous denunciation of the federal elections bill, which he declared to be the most important issue involved in the election.

McKinley at Rochester.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Governor McKinley spoke at the Washington rink, where was gathered the most remarkable crowd of the campaign. The great hall was packed to suffocation, not an inch of standing room remaining when the speaker made his appearance on the stage. Scores were turned away, being unable to procure admittance, although the night was stormy. Governor McKinley spoke for over an hour and was frequently applauded. He occupied his speech with a discussion of the repeal of the 10 per cent. tax on the issue of state bank bills by the Democrats and a talk on the tariff question.

Politics in Alabama.

BIRMINGHAM, Nov. 2.—John T. Blakemore, the straight Republican candidate for congress in the Seventh district, today formally withdrew in favor of W. M. Wood, the fusion candidate. Blakemore is the man who was charged with entering into a contract with Chris Magee to withdraw in consideration of a government position at Washington paying $100 monthly for four years, or the money equivalent thereto.

H. Lynde Harrison's Reasons.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 2.—Ex-Judge H. Lynde Harrison, of this city, says his reasons for resigning from the Republican league are because he cannot indorse two of the leading features of the present administration—the tariff and the so called force bill—not merely because he believes the position taken by the party managers in Connecticut upon what are called state issues is radically wrong.

Foster in West Virginia.

MARTINSBURG, Nov. 2.—Secretary Foster, of the treasury department, delivered a political address here before a large audience. He met with a rousing reception and spoke in an off hand manner, that took with the audience. His address was confined almost solely to the tariff and to the "wildcat" currency plank, as he termed the Democratic plank on the currency subject.

Cleveland to Speak in Jersey City.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 2.—Grover Cleveland and Senator John R. McPherson will speak at Oakland rink, in this city, next Friday evening. This is to offset the effect of Mr. Reid's visit last Saturday night.

Novelties in Stationery.

In some very tasty menu cards the French style has been adopted—gold scrollwork being commonly introduced into the decorations. A menu card in the shape of a miniature screen is particularly effective, while a folding card with a tablet for the name of the guest is an attractive novelty.

Particularly dainty is square note paper of various delicate shades, in the corner of which is really artistic little drawing—the gable of an old timbered house, a cluster of picturesque chimneys, or a tiny moorland or river scene embellished with graceful flowers or a sprig of autumn foliage. Then for the ladies whose tastes are sporting there is paper decorated with suitable designs. The envelopes are usually wallet shaped and perfectly plain.

The Prince of Wales Crest.

The Prince of Wales crest—three feathers springing from a crown—is very fashionable in jewelry in Paris, and is being produced in various articles in this country. The Jewelers' Circular explains that the design, which prevails of many antique combinations in fancy gems, is shown to advantage in scarfpins—the plume of the crown being of Roman gold with the crown studded with rose diamonds or doublets. The design is also produced in sterling silver, and will undoubtedly prove as successful here as in Europe.

CHICAGO'S LAKE FRONT.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS INVOLVED.

It Is Reported That Justice Harlan's Opinion Has Been Overruled and That the Ruling Is Against the City and In Favor of the Illinois Central Railroad.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—The supreme court of the United States, sitting in secret conference, has decided the important case of the Illinois railroad against the state of Illinois and the city of Chicago, and the decision will probably be handed down from the bench on Monday next.

The case involves the title to the lake front and part of the site of the World's fair grounds, the property and privileges being valued at from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000. The case has been advanced by the court for the convenience of the World's fair enterprise, and the verdict is awaited with great anxiety.

Much excitement has therefore been created here by a report, coming from a high authority and accompanied by such circumstantial detail, to the effect that the supreme court had overruled Justice Harlan, who decided the case in the circuit court in favor of the city and state, and will hand down a decision favorable to the railroad.

Justice Harlan is known to have made a strong fight in conference to have his decision confirmed and has been ably seconded by Justices Brown and Brewer, but is now said to have been outvoted by Justices Lamar, Field, Gray and Shiras.

The Interests Involved.

Justice Lamar will, it is said, write the opinion of the court, while Justice Harlan will deliver the dissenting views. Justices Fuller and Blatchford have not sat in the case.

Whether the decision is favorable to the railroad company or adverse to it, the interests involved are momentous. The case has been in the courts for one form or another for more than twenty years. It had its origin in an act passed by the Illinois legislature nearly a quarter of a century ago granting to the Illinois Central Railroad company valuable privileges out, if not the absolute right to, the lake front of Chicago.

Protest was made by the city authorities of Chicago, and grave charges were made respecting the influences that had prevailed with the legislature to secure the grant. The land had been acquired by grant from the general government through the state to the city, and the city authorities insisted that the legislature could not dispose of it absolutely to the railroad company. An appeal was at once taken to the court, and protracted and complicated litigation has followed.

Millions on Millions at Stake.

Some three years ago Mr. Justice Harlan, of the supreme court of the United States, sitting at Chicago, heard the case, and decided in favor of the people of the city of Chicago—that is to say, he held that while the Illinois Central Railroad company had acquired a valuable grant, it, along the lake front and could not be dispossessed of them, he denied that the absolute title of the land and the entire control of the lake front had passed to the railroad company.

This decision, while in a measure a compromise of the contesting claims, was yet regarded as a great victory for the city of Chicago, for the title to property, hitherto waiting the full time allowed by law, appealed the case to the supreme court here, and several weeks ago it was argued at length by a number of able lawyers. The court had advanced the case because the city of Chicago, under the Harlan decision, had granted certain concessions to the World's Fair company which the Illinois Railroad company was insisting could only be granted by itself.

It also held that the Illinois Central Railroad company of a favorable decision would be incalculable. The land alone is worth several millions of dollars, while the control of the harbor privileges on the lake front of Chicago would not only be worth an enormous sum now, but would in time advance to fabulous proportions.

A NOVEL CONSTRUCTION ACCOUNT.

All Sorts of Expenses, Including Legal Fees, Commissions, Interest on Borrowed Moneys and Sundries, Entered on the Book as Construction Expenditures.

HARTFORD, Nov. 2.—Damaging statements against the New York and New England railroad were made before Judge Prentice in the superior court, affecting the road's claim to register $2,000,000 of the proposed issue of $35,000,000 bonds. The suit is to restrain the road from issuing the $2,000,000 bonds for registration. The hearing is on a motion to compel the road to produce its books in court.

James H. Webb, of New Haven, of counsel for plaintiffs, Messrs. Nathan F. Goldsmith and Edward F. Knowlton, of Boston, testified that he passed the greater part of five weeks in taking the deposition of Secretary Perkins.

Mr. Webb said he examined fourteen sets of books of various railroad organizations which at one time or another had controlled or been in the organization of the New England road. All the books showed marks of recent examination in the pencil footings made.

All Charged to Construction.

The Boston, Hartford and Erie books showed sundries charged up to construction. In the books of the Hartford, Providence and Fishkill road interest on moneys borrowed, aggregating $127,000, was charged to the construction account. Charges for purchase of machines made by the stock passed to contractors, placed in the construction account, aggregated $16,000,000.

The company paid $10,000 to a firm of brokers for securing a loan of $100,000, and then charged the $10,000 to the construction account. Legal expenses were also placed in the same account.

The total of construction account footed up about $30,000,000, while he found that only $5,000,000 had been expended in the construction proper.

Mr. Perkins refused to produce the books of the Boston, Hartford and Erie in the presence of the expert accountant. The apparent construction account aggregated $20,000,000, with disputed amounts of $30,000,000. The road from Providence to Waterbury appeared to have cost $4,000,000, but the construction of thirty miles more of road appear as $35,000,000.

Mr. Webb said that the cost of the construction of the road since 1873 aggregates about $74,000,000, including the equipment account of $5,000,000.

Justice Prentice reserved his decision.

The Boston and Maine's Policy.

BOSTON, Nov. 2.—From an absolutely authoritative source it is learned that there is no truth whatever in the reports emanating from speculative sources that the Boston and Maine railroad contemplates a close alliance with the New York and New England railroad, either by the lease or by a guarantee of the preferred stock dividend and fixed charges or by an exchange of stock, wherein the Boston and Maine would give one share of stock for three shares of New York and New England. The Boston and Maine is in no way interested in the so called New York and New England railroad deal. No negotiations have ever been entered into or will be with the view of the time. Colonel Hawkins' testimony did not differ materially from Colonel Streator's. In witness' opinion the policy of punishment was proper and in accordance with United States army custom.

The young physician was tired when he returned from his evening's calls, but as he settled back in his easy chair and his pretty wife of only a month or two took a seat beside him he asked affectionately:

"And has my little wife been lonely?"

"Oh, no," she said animatedly; "at least not very. I've found something to busy myself with."

"Indeed!" he said. "What is it?"

"Oh, I'm organizing a class. A lot of young girls and married women are in it, and we're making experiences and teaching each other how to cook."

"What do you do with the things you cook," he asked interestedly.

"Oh, we send them to the neighbors just to show what we can do. There's one boarding house gets most of it. It's lots of fun."

"Dear little woman," he said, leaning over and kissing her. "Always thoughtful of your husband's practice. Always anxious to extend it."—Detroit Free Press.

THE HOUSEHOLD

ARTISTIC DRAPERIES.

Colors Advised by The Decorator and Furnisher for Walls, Windows, Etc.

Draperies ought to show a darker shade of the small color or same tint pleasingly with it in the case of window curtains. Thus soft yellow india or china silk is advisable with almost every style of furniture and decoration. It is the color of sunshine that seems to light up the rooms on the north side of the house as nothing else can do.

A dull light green is suitable for the windows of a room finished in rose color or yellow, because a green light sifting through the windows is always pleasant to the eye. But combined with it as a relief ought to be the dull pink of the apple blossom, or the complexion of the inmates will suffer.

One of the prettiest of all window draperies is ivory or cream silk, well covered with bunches of apple blossoms and leaves in delicate colors, but of course it is only suitable for a drawing room or a ladies' boudoir. On the other hand, for a general sitting room or gentleman's smoking room, jute burlap or hamding is suitable. The dark forms of these materials can be relieved by appliques of carmine velvet edged with gold thread, or by arabesques in gold and blue.

Curtains are often now looped back by fancy cord matching in color, apparently pressed through pompoms of the same or contrasting color. Some I saw recently in lawn color or dark crimson closely resembled small circular drawing sponges at equal distances. These pompoms are about the size of a Tangerine orange. Drapery for curtet shelves has gone out of fashion, and a handsome length of brocade edged with a ball fringe laid on the slab is substituted. Where there are handsome oak or marble mantelpieces this is an improvement. The large cushions retain their popularity, and frequently an unused bed pillow is covered and converted into a handsome sofa cushion.

A favorite fashion is throwing a large square or length of any brocade or embroidered material over couches and chairs and plain cushions. These squares are sometimes given as christening presents to babies. They are worked, edged with lace and intended to throw over the child when asleep in bed.

PANSY PASSEMENTERIE.

Chicken Fritters.

One cup chicken stock, one heaping table spoon flour, one tablespoon butter, one-half teaspoon salt, one saltspoon celery salt, one cup cold chicken. Mix the flour smoothly in the hot butter, add the boiling stock gradually, and when smooth add the seasoning. The sauce should be quite thick. Pour half of the sauce into a small, shallow dish (buttered). Chop the chicken fine, and when the sauce is cruated over a little spread the chicken evenly over the top. Then cover with the remainder of the sauce. Place on ice, and when cold and hard cut into inch by two inch pieces. Dip them quickly in fritter batter, and fry in hot, deep fat.

Grape Jam.

Separate the skins from the pulp, and place in different saucepans. Let the skins simmer on the back of the range with water enough to cover them. Cook the pulps till soft with a little water, then press through a colander. Add the strained pulp to the skins, with three-quarters of a pound of sugar, for every pint of grape. Boil till thick and jellylike.

Corn Muffins.

Beat an egg with two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Mix together a cup of cornmeal and three-quarters of a cup of wheat flour and a teaspoonful of baking powder. Stir this into a cupful of milk, add a tablespoonful of melted butter and the egg and sugar. Bake quickly.

Cauliflower.

Cauliflower should be soaked for an hour in salt and water before cooking. Then it is put into boiling salted water and taken out just as soon as it is cooked tender Serve with drawn butter cream sauce.

MISFIT GOWNS.

A SHOP IN NEW YORK CITY WHERE THEY CAN BE PURCHASED.

How They Fall Into the Hands of the Shopkeeper—Dresses Ordered and Not Paid For—Women Who Come Home from Abroad Financially Short.

New York women cannot vote, none's the pity, but in the side remarkably suggestive that men have a cinch on. Women do and have everything else that back in the Dark Ages was considered the exclusive privilege of the lords of creation. Here is an instance:

Until recently men had a monopoly of misfit clothing. Not so now, for very late ly a person—whether male or female does not appear on the otherwise explicit sign, but manifestly a progressive person who keeps up with the procession—has started a ladies' misfit clothing store. This shop is situated, appropriately enough, in the heart of the Tenderloin precinct. Every thing new or bizarre finds its way instinctively to the Tenderloin district. In the window is an alluring blue and gold ball dress, with slippers to match, and a gold lamped holder, which is, as the clerk tells you, "not absolutely indispensable for a ball costume, but considered tasty and stylish."

*The clerk is a small girl with a perenn*ative smile and a cold in her head. She has the useful knack of adaptability, for when I declined to examine the ball dress she called my attention to a mink muff and boa quite good naturedly, and declared that they would make me look very jaunty.

All around the walls are hung dresses of every kind and description, while piled on the counters are jackets, ulsters and that species of neat bag known as a "wrap."

But these goods are secondhand, and can be bought at any good secondhand shop. It is necessary to carry such a line of goods, which is also replete, "we do not get dresses because the people who throw them back on the dressmaker's hands are not pleased with the set of the dress. It is because they cannot pay for them. You see, a woman goes to the dressmaker and orders a dress—quite an expensive one. Blue Faille silk, we'll say. When the dressmaker furnishes everything and takes the risk of her paying for it. In some places it is customary to make a deposit, but not everywhere. Well, the dress is finished. Milandy finds that she has not as much money as she had the day she ordered the gown, and so she can't pay for it. She throws it back on the modiste's hands, forfeiting the deposit, if there has been one. Well, the dressmaker has to do the best she can. In order to spread before you gowning a dead loss she sells it to us. And here it is, just as good as if you had ordered it yourself, and much cheaper.

"There is another way in which we get dresses. Lots of women buy a quantity of clothes abroad, a great many time, because they get them cheap. They find when they get back that they don't want some of them, or they are a little hard up after the expenses of travelling, and they sell them to us."

"Do you buy many things from actresses?"

"Oh, no, indeed, hardly any. You see, they always need the clothes they order, and as a rule a little chance of their throwing them back on the dressmaker's hands."

Then the little clerk begins to haul down the dresses from the hooks. There is one of exquisite lace made over an underskirt of ashes of roses silk. The waist is an elaborate affair with jet butterflies on the shoulders, a jet bodice and a heavy fringe of jet and ribbons to finish the bottom of the waist. The waistband is stamped with the name of a fashionable modiste. You can buy this dress for twenty-five dollars. The jet on the bodice alone never cost a penny less than forty dollars.

Here is a smart brown dress of heavy broadcloth made with a severely stylish coat, its only ornamentation being the large buttons which secure it. There is an English look about the dress, and you are not surprised to find inside the name of a well known tailor in Regent street.

Hanging next to it is a confection in dark green velvet and bengaline silk, lightened by judicious touches of a metallic pink and green brocade. This dress was made in Paris, and was sold to the misfit clothing people for reasons of a peculiary nature.

You can buy a gown of rough gray and blue cloth trimmed with plain blue for twelve dollars. A gold bullion cord with smart black braid trimmings comes at fourteen dollars. And so on through the department. You can buy a buttercup gauze dinner dress or a white flannel yachting suit. You can get a gown for church or a peignoir to say your prayers at home in.

And whatever you buy you can do it with the gratifying feeling that no man living can ever look down upon you from the misfit clothing standpoint again.—New York Recorder.

A Dressmaking Club.

Among the many original women having for their aim almost every purpose under the sun, one that is as unique as it has been successful is an amateur dressmaking club, which was formed by a number of women dissatisfied with the high prices and poor work of their dressmakers formed themselves into a club for the purpose of bringing just as much style and of making their own gowns. At first they confined their work to tea gowns and common dresses. At their meetings they gave one another the benefit of their home and experience. One had a knowledge of fitting, one a good eye for color; another could drape, and so another could trim, and the dress evolved by their joint efforts were much more tasteful and in every way more satisfactory than if made by any one of them. After a time they made their best dresses in the club, and there grew up a friendly rivalry as to which of them should plan the prettiest dress at the least expense, which rivalry was productive of some astonishingly cheap and pretty frocks. —Chicago News.

Nice Flannel for Infants.

Shaker flannel—that is, a part cotton material—is the best for children, especially infants. The admixture of cotton prevents much shrinking and makes its lasting qualities greater. It may be had in very fine and soft or in coarser and heavier weaves, and at a cost of from twenty cents to one dollar per yard.—Good Housekeeping

Advice to Young Women.

"One of the Greatest Blemishes of the Fair Sex" is the subject of a very interesting addressed to the reader of "The Young Ladies' Conduct," a wise and witty essay on behavior, published in London in 1722. The book is one of the first written especially for women.

"Above all," the writer urges, "avoid Anger, which is a professed Enemy to Reason, Prudence, and Good Sense. This Passion once let loose and encouraged soon grows domineering, and quarrels with the most trivial things in Nature. A drop of Rain falling on one Sport's Garments in the Canse enough to Raise a Tempest in the Mind that Reason cannot quell.

"There is a Consideration I should think has Weight sufficient to allay this Passion, that is, that there is nothing so pernicious to the Fair, and puts so bad a Face upon them. It gives an ill natured Cast to the Eye, and a disagreeable Sourness to the whole Countenance; it makes the Lines too strong, and flushes the face worse than Brandy. I have seen it overspread the Face with beast Spots, as a Lady has been chiding of her Servant for the Breaking of a Glass, or Pinning her Manteau awry; and indeed never knew any Angry Woman to preserve her Beauty long.

"Be careful, then, to nip this unruly Passion in the Bud; suffer not yourself to be made master of Trifles, so will you soon stifle your Anger upon greater Occasions to get such a Conquest over the Heart will be a Triumph worthy of you reciver. Anger is the very Death of Beauty, Grace, and Virtue. Consider, Ladies, how far you are addicted to this unbecoming habit and reclaim yourselves by the contrary Virtue of Patience, Meekness, and Forbearance."

Grind Your Pepper.

Pepper corns! Powerful! What do you take me for? Shall I smell a withered flower in a herbarium, and think of the odor of the fresh violets of the fields? I want my pepper ground, sir, and ground before my eyes—and what is more, I want to grind it. I "will have mustard with my beef," as becomes an Anglo Saxon. I will it that my pepper shall be fine or coarse, little or big grained, according to my humor.

Do you know the difference between gravel and petit sel? Why, on that depends the nicety of French cookery, and how nicely I do it? Why, with my pepper mill on the table. Your pepper, once ground, is invisible! Dismiss, then, your horrible, brutal, revolving, cruel casters—one of the indecencies of American dinners, relegated now to third rate restaurants where lunches are in use. It's such a nice little bit of mechanism.

You turn a screw and the pepper comes out in impalpable powder. You loosen the screw and out pours the pepper of a precise molecule. You assort your atoms of pepper to your taste. And, above all, the white pepper for a table condiment. Let the sausage makers take all the black variety. It is true that the Princes of Arabia feed white pepper grains to his cream tarts. —Gargantua's Gastronomies.

Washing Fruits.

Strawberries, raspberries and many other small table fruits are not washed by the majority of people before eating, for they is a general notion among housewives that by dipping them in the water first, fresh, fine fruit flavor is taken away by the operation. This may be true, or simply the result of imagination. It is a small point, however, to keep one from using water as an antifever agent. It has been demonstrated beyond dispute that disease is frequently conveyed to many people through fruit. When the fruits are picked off the bushes by the owner, there is no objection to their immediate use without washing, but when they are purchased from stands in cities they need a good washing.

Professional fruit pickers often have the germs of fevers, skin disease or other contagious complaints on their hands, and those are conveyed from one person to another. The dust from the city will accumulate on the grapes and berries that are exposed on the stands for sale, and it is well known that this dust contains many germs that are more or less harmful to the human system. If fruit bought from the public markets is washed in the water will often be absolutely black, and it is filthy as well as dangerous to take all of such dirt into the stomach.—Yanked Blade.

What Women Demand.

The only idea of some people seems to be as though no woman had ever done anything difficult or perplexing in her life, and just because she has gone to work and accomplished something, they are taken off their pins entirely. This is anything but the right spirit in which to look at a woman's work. There is no such fuss made because a man has succeeded in farming or poultry raising or stock breeding or floral culture, but because a woman has done these things there is no end to the worrisome chatter which is everywhere thrust in our faces. To give the woman a chance, and the very best possible chance, is to take it for granted that they really can do something and do it well, and let their works and not the public praise them.—New York Ledger.

About Nursing Babies.

Under all circumstances it is better for the mother if she is healthy to nurse her own child, as more especially in the early months it is of the greatest benefit to her own constitution, and besides also knows what and how much the child is getting and that the milk is pure. It is well where the mother's health will permit to have the baby through the second summer if the milk agrees with it as a safeguard against bowel affections which are so common at that time.

Mothers with a hereditary tendency to lung disease should not nurse their own children, but have a strong and wholesome wet nurse supply this place, and if one cannot be obtained the child should be fed artificially on cow's milk.—Baby.

Mending Table Linen.

A housewife whose table linen always does her good service mends it with flax embroidery cotton of a number to correspond with the quality of the cloth. Under the ragged edges of the tear she basles a piece of stiff paper, and mends in network of fine stitches back and forth over its edges, carrying the stitches about an inch beyond the edges of the cut. Thin places and breaks in linen may be run with the flax or embroidery floss, and towels should be mended in the same way.—Daughters of America.

Sweet and Sour Milk.

Economical women who insist upon buying goods that will "turn" are respectfully recommended to invest in "sweet" milk. The rest of us plne for such as will not "turn." It is appalling to learn, on the authority of the department of agriculture, that milk which is free from bacteria will remain unchanged for two weeks, though kept in a warm room. If this be so, what of the healthfulness of our milk, and what, alas, of cottage cheese?—Boston Commonwealth.

UNION COUNTY COURTS.

THE CRIMINAL BUSINESS BEGUN YESTERDAY MORNING.

Many Arraignments, but a Number of Cases Had to be Postponed Until After Election, on Account of the Lawyers Being Busy in Politics.

The criminal business of the present term of court, at Elizabeth began yesterday morning. The trial of George Fergus and John T. W. Walton, the former employes of A. S. Campbell, charged with the larceny of stock and the burning of a portion of the plant of Mr. Campbell, being set down for to-day, excited much interest.

The case was not the first moved. Mary Doyle, the aged sneak thief who was caught in Supt. Chapman's house some weeks ago, was rearraigned, and on the advice of her counsel, Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, pleaded guilty. She was remanded for sentence.

Irving Bohmesburg, a youth, was arraigned on a charge of larceny. He had pleaded not guilty, and was remanded for sentence.

Senator Marsh addressing the court said that the trial of Wm. Lautch, the Hungarian charged with manslaughter, was to have taken place to-day. It was an important case. Hon. Foster M. Voorhees, the prisoner's counsel, had other engagements, and the State did not wish to embarrass him by moving the case. Mr. Marsh said a great many of the members of the bar were politicians and, it being so near election, their engagements made it difficult to get lawyers to conduct cases. He suggested it would be well to defer the manslaughter case and some other important cases until after election.

Mr. Voorhees, said that without admitting himself to be a politician, he would like to have the case in which he was interested go over till after election.

Judge McCormick said that the court would sit till election for the purpose of listening to cases in reference to registry, and the manslaughter case could not go on to-morrow. The court was therefore favorable to a postponement, and it was decided that the case should be tried on November 14.

Senator Marsh called the attention of the court to the case of Charles Donnelson the boy who was carged with burning the barns at Westfield. Mr. Marsh said Donelson was sent to the Reform School about a year ago, but how he got out of the institution the State did not know. The State was ready to file a new complaint or the county detective could return Donnelson to Jamesburg on the old charge.

Mr. Marsh said that in the case of George Fergus and John T. Walton, the former would plead guilty. The case was set down for Nov. 15.

In the special sessions James Emmerson was arraigned on a charge of stealing two brooms valued at 70 cents. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to the county jail for thirty days.

The petit jurors were discharged until November 7th, when appealed cases will be tried.

BREVITIES

—The Park avenue road-bed is being relieved of its coat of mud to-day.

—All the Republican candidates are expected to be present at the rink to-night.

—The Plainfield Glee Club and the Colored Quartette Banjoist, will be at the "smoker" to-night at the rink.

—Next Sunday evening Mr. R. W. Hand of this city will be ordained pastor of the First Church of Christ on Grove street.

—At Vincent chapel, to-morrow evening, the members of the Epworth League will hold court. A horse stealing case is to be tried.

—The Crescent League will give an entertainment, similar to the one held last Monday night, at its club house, next Monday evening.

—The "smoker" at the rink to-night is for men only; the ladies will have their night Saturday, when Judge Wheeler will give his stereopticon exhibition.

—Many complaints are made of the condition of the board walks on Manning and Jackson avenues, near Westervelt avenue. In some instances the boards have completely rotted away.

—Three gentlemen to settle a despute in regard to the merits of their horses have to put in $100 per man, making a sweepstake of $300 which will be trotted for to-morrow at the Plainfield Driving Park, the winner to take the purse.

—The wisdom of the Republicans of Somerset county in nominating H. Newton Spencer of North Plainfield for Surrogate is being made more and more apparent as the campaign progresses, and the present indications are that he will be elected by an overwhelming majority, and that the Republican ticket generally will win.

—Borough Council meeting to-morrow night. A notice in another column of THE NEWS calls the attention of those interested in the matter of having a street railway on Somerset street, to the fact that the street railway ordinance will be brought up for a third reading. Every taxpayer will be given a chance to speak on the subject. Men were engaged during the past few days surveying the street for the new road.

AN OLD MAN'S SAD TALE.

STARTS AT EIGHTY YEARS OF AGE TO WALK EIGHTY MILES.

After Losing Wife and Children, Money, Business and Home He Starts from Newark to Phillipsburg to Find His "Dear Old Broder."

As a NEWS' reporter was on his way to business this morning, he heard a voice behind him saying: "Vos dish der road mit der Bound Brook."

Turning in the direction of the voice the reporter saw that the remarks were addressed to him by an old white-haired German, with a full white beard, well-dressed, of sturdy frame and polite demeanor, and carrying a heavy cane, which he used as a staff to help him along. He was approaching from the direction of Westfield, and pointing to Greenbrook road.

"Yes," said the reporter, "but the way to the train is in this direction," pointing toward the depot. "In fact, this is a better road, if you are to walk." Both walked along together while the following conversation took place: The man said he could not ride, as he was too poor, and he had a long journey before him.

"But, said the reporter, "you look too old for such a journey. How old are you?"

The old man said he was past eighty years, and he looked it. He said he would walk to Bound Brook, rest awhile, and then go on to Phillipsburg, where he had a brother who would be good to him. He said this in a husky voice, as if overcome by his emotions, and as if the world had not been good to him.

"Well, you have a good face. You don't look like a tramp. Where are you from?"

"Newark," he answered.

"When did you leave there?"

"Last night at ten o'clock."

"What! travel all night."

"Most of the night."

"But it rained last night, and your clothes are not wet, nor your shoes mud-stained."

"I got to Westfield before the rain, and found shelter there. It did not rain until three o'clock this morning."

"But have you had breakfast?"

"No, I stopped at Westfield."

"Why did you not wait until daylight, and let your friends help you."

"I have no friends left there. I've lost mine frau and all my children, all my money, and even my home, and my business—everything, and now I go to my dear old broder at der Phillipsburg."

"Why, that is sad. Phillipsburg is fifty miles away. That is rather a long walk for an old man like you. How did you lose your wife and children?"

"I came from Wurtemberg in '75, with my wife and children, and start in business as a wagon maker in Newark. I make money. Two young friends want to start a brewery, and I lend them $4,000 to help them. They becomes bankrupts and never pay back my money. Then, my oldest boy—and he was a good boy (this feelingly)—died of lung fever at nineteen years. My wife then, from worry over the death of our son and the loss of the $4,000, got sick. After being sick for seventeen months, she, too, died. I had two doctors nearly all the time to try and save her, but it was no good. Then my other three children, one after the other, died of smallpox. It cost me $2,000 for the doctors, and that was all the money I had saved. I vas too old too continue my business alone, so I give up, and now want to get to my dear old broder."

"He wrote me to come and make a home with him. He would have sent me money if he knew I had none. I rather walk than tell him."

The old man shook his head sadly, and trudged along behind his staff, until the reporter met a German friend, who he got to question him in his own language, and was convinced that what the man said was true.

Another German friend was also questioned, and said, "The Wurtembergers are not tricky. They are remarkable for straightforward honesty."

Then the man's fare was paid to Phillipsburg to his "dear old broder's."

He sent back this word, "Tell dose who helpit me, I will pray fer dem hereafter every night."

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The First Presbyterian church, at its congregational meeting, held last evening, decided to extend a call to the Rev. Chas. E. Herring of Brooklyn, formerly pastor of the Presbyterian church Harlem, N. Y., to become their pastor.

Mr. Herring preached in the First Presbyterian church of this city last Sunday, and the congregation were so well pleased with him that on the first ballot, last night, the vote was unanimous in favor of extending the call.

The meeting closed with the long metre doxology, which was heartily sung.

It is expected that Mr. Herring will accept the call and begin his pastorate forthwith.

—Entertainment in the First Presbyterian chapel to-night.

—Every working man in Plainfield is expected at the "Smoker," to the Rink, to-night.

—Instead of a parade through the streets there will be a parade of local talent at the "smoker" to-night.

NEW JERSEY FINANCES.

AT THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR ENDING OCTOBER 31.

Comptroller Heppenheimer's Annual Report Submitted to the Governor.—A Balance in the Treasury of Over $600,000.

The State Comptroller submitted to the Governor, at Trenton Monday, the following statement of New Jersey's finances at the close of the fiscal year ending October 31:

STATE FUND.

Net receipts during the year	$1,973,884 15
Balance in bank Oct. 31, 1891	402,168 96
Total	$2,376,053 11
Net disbursements during the year	1,656,351 96
Balance in bank Oct. 31, 1892	$619,701 15

DISBURSEMENTS.

Net disbursements during the year	$1,656,351 96
Extraordinary disbursements—Special appropriations, 1892, 1890, 1891 and 1892, State-house improvements, war debt, etc.	325,849 00
Ordinary expenses of State Government	$1,331,002 96
Balance on hand Oct. 31, 1890 (less floating debt)	33,760 87
Balance on hand Oct. 31, 1891 (no floating debt)	402,168 96
Balance on hand Oct. 31, 1892 (no floating debt)	619,701 15

SCHOOL FUND.

Amount of securities of school fund:	Increase.
Oct. 31, 1890	$3,305,991 95
Oct. 31, 1891	$3,515,567 60 $109,575 65
Oct. 31, 1892	3,630,705 82 115,138 22

The amount in bank to the credit of the school fund Oct. 31, 1892, is $831,974.

PUBLIC DEBT.

War debt, Oct. 31, 1891	$607,300 00
War debt, Oct. 31, 1892	934,700 00
Decrease	$62,600 00

The sinking fund owes the State fund at the close of the present fiscal year the sum of $66,796, which sum was borrowed from the State Treasury by the late Commissioners of the Sinking Fund prior to April 10, 1892, when the State Treasurer assumed control of this fund, as directed by law.

The above statement shows that the State is without a dollar of indebtedness, funded or floating, save the war debt, for which provision is otherwise made. With every account as fully paid as is possible, with disbursements for permanent improvements and past appropriations paid to the amount of $825,840, the State fund has to its credit a balance in bank of $619,701.15.

The statement above made in relation to the school fund, shows that while the fund has been charged with very large expenditures for purely educational purposes, the securities of the fund have been increased $115,138 25, and that there is in bank to the credit of the fund the sum of $831,974.

The State receives a very large revenue from its tax on corporations, the result of an act introduced several years ago by Senator Briggs, Republican, from Passaic, and an act introduced by Senator Gardner, Republican, from Atlantic, compelling the Morris and Essex Canal to pay some $300,000 back taxes.

The Republicans claim that but for Democratic wastefulness on its heelers, the State would have one million dollars more than it has, and taxes be reduced thereby considerably.

OF IMPORTANCE TO VOTERS.

What the Republican State Committee Decide About Pasters.

A most important decision has just been made public.

It is the decision of the Republican State Committee to the effect that no pasters must be used that have printed on them anything whatsoever beside the name of the candidate.

To vote a paster having on it the title of the office for which the man receiving such vote is a candidate may vitiate the whole vote.

This decision of the Republican State Committee is based upon a decision rendered by Justice Depue in the Haines aldermanic contest in Essex county.

The words "For Governor," "For Member of the House of Representatives," "For County Clerk," "For Surrogate," "For Member of Assembly," or any other similar delegation is illegal when they are printed or written on a paster, because it has been held that such printing or writing is a distinguishing mark on such ballot, and will technically vitiate the vote.

Let the voters beware, therefore, and when they use pasters use only those which have nothing on them, and no other words whatsoever.

Bear this in mind, or you may lose your vote.

The Cars Run to the Depot Now.

The Plainfield Electric Street Railway Company's workmen were engaged until twelve o'clock last night wiring East Front street, and finishing up the work. This morning, at ten o'clock, the first car passed over the extension and made the run around to North avenue.

—Things will be lively to-night at the rink. Both the band and the drum corps will "whoop-her-up."

—The heavy fog of this morning delayed railroad traffic to a considerable degree. The express due in this city at 8.37 was an hour late.

—Mayor Saunders will be one of the speakers at the North Plainfield Democratic meeting to-night. All of the Somerset county nominees are expected to be present.

MASS MEETING AT WESTFIELD.

In Spite of Democratic Tricks the Republicans Hold a Rousing Meeting.

Westfield Republicans held a mass meeting in their wigwam, on Broad street, last night. The principal speaker of the evening was Hon. J. P. Lock of Ohio, who made an eloquent address, eulogizing the administration of President Harrison. He showed that the country was enjoying the most prosperous period ever known, and he rightly claimed that the credit was due to the principles of Protection as set forth in the McKinley Bill. After speaking for a half hour in this strain the speaker showed the absurdity of the negro dumination in the South, which Democratic papers are making such a bugaa-boo about. He was followed by several local speakers, who made short and enthusiastic addresses.

During the evening several Democrats tried every way imaginable to break up the meeting.

One Democrat rode into town on horseback yelling like a maniac, and shouting wildly that Lawyer Peckham's house was on fire. This is situated about half a mile from Westfield. Many of the audience in the wigwam ran out to the street. They were informed that the alarm was only a fake and returned to the meeting.

John Seagraves of Easton, Pa., was arrested last night at the North avenue depot for being drunk. City Judge Codington, this morning, gave him the choice of paying a three dollar fine or spending ten days in the county jail.

A colored man by the name of Randolph was arrested yesterday. The charge was, "being drunk, using indecent language and resisting arrest." He plead guilty and was sentenced to sixty days, by City Judge Codington, this morning.

The Skeleton of a Man Found.

The skeleton of a man was found in the woods near Romeyn Oldis's house, at Arcola, yesterday morning by a farm hand. Coroner Hill of Hackensack examined the remains, which were apparently those of a man forty years of age. The skeleton was still quite warm when disturbed by a stick. Coroner Hill thinks the body must have been there a year or more. Not a thing was found by which to identify the remains. Upon the feet were a pair of heavy Holland shoes.

An Eagle Shot near Sparta.

A bald-headed eagle was shot a few days ago by David McDavitt, a farmer residing near Sparta, which measured six feet and two inches from tip to tip of wings, and weighed five pounds. Mr. McDavitt kept missing his turkeys and, suspecting a hawk, he lay concealed in the ambush, and shot the eagle. It is a rare occurrence to see an eagle in that vicinity.

EDITORIAL NOTES

General O. O. Howard reports that the country's national guard was never before in such an excellent condition as it is at present. If another war should arise—which may fate forbid till we get the bills of the last one paid at least—then our militia could be placed at once on the defense of important posts during the formation of a volunteer army. He recommends that they be armed with the new rifle and that an appropriation of $2,000,000 a year be made to increase their efficiency. This is well, and our fifteen soldiers deserve all General Howard's compliments. All the same they should carry themselves in a more soldierly manner in order to properly show off their good looks.

Nov. 22, in Brussels, will meet the international monetary conference to which the president of the United States invited other nations to send delegates. Seventeen European countries accepted the invitation and will meet the gentlemen from the United States who have ideas on the subject of restoring silver as a legal tender money and fixing some uniform value for it among the different nations. The most prominent silver advocate on the commission from America will be Senator Stewart, of Nevada. It is not probable that the conference can do much of itself to settle the silver question, but the interchange of different views will be of benefit. All the proceedings will be published and scattered broadcast through America at any rate, and they will have valuable educational interest. This is perhaps the best immediate result that will flow from the conference.

Latest Achievements of Science.

In The Nineteenth Century Prince Kropotkin sums up, as well as a scientific writer could be expected to sum up anything, the results of the latest researches of the physicists and chemists, telling just where we stand at present in these matters.

The inextricable connection between physics, chemistry and mechanics is one of the facts which a present day investigator in either of the fields must meet and consider. One line cannot be pursued without the others. The present theory of the atoms within a molecule is no longer that they are motionless infinitesimal bodies, but that they maintain a motion as perpetual as that of the planets in the solar system. The present trend is to account for heat, light, electricity and even chemical affinity through the motions of these atoms.

The kinetic theory of gases generally accepted is that a gas is an aggregate of molecules flying and pressing equally in all directions, and constituting the walls of vessels which contain them." The kinetic theory of gases has now been applied to liquids, and that is considered an important step forward.

For many years the principal objection brought against Darwin's theory of evolution was the absence of missing links between the different orders of the animal creation. The discovery of fossil missing links has been made within a few years with such rapidity that anatomists cannot keep up with the examination of them. The absolute links, one by one, which show the modern bird to be descended from the prehistoric lizard have been found in fossil remains of ancient bird lizards and put together till not one is wanting in the chain.

The land upon the earth has been elevated and submerged so often that investigators must search over five continents to trace the links, but this is being done rapidly. Immense beds of the fossil remains of the intermediate forms have been found recently in Utah, Colorado and Wyoming, in North America, and in the Argentine Republic and Patagonia, in South America. Science seems to have a mortgage on missing links. In the Wyoming beds have been found the "probable ancestors" of all the higher orders of quadrupeds, from the five toed animal to the one toed horse and the two toed cow and pig. Even the forerunners of the present day rats have been found in these wonderful beds.

Bacteriology is a science that has developed with too much rapidity apparently, for no sooner is a fact supposed to be established than another is uncovered that upsets the first one. It is now generally accepted that many diseases, infectious and otherwise, have each its own particular microbe that gets into the blood either through air, water or food and does its deadly work. This work would be even more deadly than it is only for a remarkable theory which is also accepted as fact by leading toxicists. It is that in the body and blood of every living creature there are millions and millions of other living creatures—microscopic existences—that fight with one another as ferociously as if they were six foot high and had a gun.

In short, the struggle for life goes on in an animal in the blood as it does in the large world. There are good microbes and bad microbes. The good microbes are called leucocytes, and they are free living cells that wander about in the blood. If disease microbes come into the blood, the leucocytes attack and devour them, provided the leucocytes are healthy and strong enough; otherwise the disease microbes get the better of the leucocytes, and the man falls ill.

POLITICS AT FEVER HEAT

The Campaign Grows Hotter as the Time Grows Shorter.

STATEMENTS FROM HEADQUARTERS

How the Campaign Is Viewed by the Managers of the Two Great Parties—Thousands of Dollars Staked on the Result.

The Fight in New York State.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—The following has been issued from the Democratic national headquarters:

The froth and bubble of the Republicans' betting, which was exploited Saturday and lasted until last night, was lost sight of completely today. The very shallow design was to have offered very large bets in certain places when there would be no proposition to meet them, as bets for amounts up to $5,000 have been freely offered by Democrats on the general result every day for two weeks without takers, besides countless offers of 2 to 1 on New York. The Democrats caught on today. This morning Comptroller Theodore Myers, of New York, was in a public way offered by a prominent Republican—Mr. Comyns—$25,000 on Harrison. Myers promptly responded, producing five certified checks for $5,000 each, when Mr. Comyns said he was only joking.

At the Hoffman House a man from Philadelphia entered the corridor in the lobby and loudly offered $45,000 to $50,000 on the general result in favor of Harrison. Offers were at once made to him to divide his bet into superior sums of $5,000 even, but he refused. Thirty minutes later Edward Murphy, chairman of the New York Democratic state committee, appeared, hunting for the Philadelphian, offering to take him without odds for $50,000 on Cleveland. The Philadelphian had disappeared. Mr. Murphy registered the offer for takers, to stand till election day.

Judge Rae's Position.

The following letter to a Grand Army comrade residing in New York states the reasons why John D. Rae, formerly commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, has determined to support Cleveland and Stevenson. The letter was written by Judge Rae on Oct. 31 in answer to an inquiry by his New York correspondent:

To Joseph W. Kay, Esq., New York:

MY DEAR SIR AND COMRADE—In answer to your favor of the 27th inst. would say that I distinctly remember meeting you at the Eldridge House in Washington at the time to which you refer, and of speaking with you of my most satisfactory interview with President Cleveland on the subject of pensions. Your statement of what I said is substantially correct. I well remember that interview with President Cleveland confirmed my impression that he was not so much an enemy, but a friend of the Union soldier. He listened with great interest to my views on the subject of pensions, and when I was done said, "What you say the soldiers want is in accord with my views and is right."

I stated to you and others at the time that I had never before met a man who had such broad views of pensions whose views corresponded more clearly with my own.

He was earnest, full of sympathy, and in that, as in everything else, absolutely honest in fidelity to his convictions. I have never at any time since, when occasion offered, failed to express my opinion of him in this regard or to defend him from the charge of being an enemy of the Union soldier.

I have felt keenly the injustice of that charge and have felt humiliated by the fact that any intelligent soldier should believe it. There is no issue in this campaign on the subject of pensions. No one will propose any more liberal legislation than we already have. Nevertheless, I take pleasure in writing you this letter in the hope that it may help to create an honest man from a most malicious and unjust aspersion. Sincerely your friend and comrade,

JOHN P. RAE.

Democrats Claim Indiana.

Judge John A. Holman, of Indiana, speaking of the political situation in that state, said: "I am not pretending to know much about New York, but if I was a betting man I would rather bet that Indiana will go Democratic, because I know what the feeling is in that state. Even if Judge Gresham had not come out for Cleveland I would have felt confident of Indiana, but now he has come out I do not regard it in the least as doubtful. Judge Gresham's action will prove more effective in Indiana than did that of Roscoe Conkling in New York in 1884. He has an immense influence all over Indiana, but especially in the southern part of the state, where the Republicans broke him. You will see great changes in the votes of the southern counties of Indiana, and no matter how much money the Republicans may use they cannot bring about a change. Besides we have the Australian ballot system in Indiana, which we did not have four years ago."

Colonel Richard Bright, of Indiana, was also at headquarters. He said he was sure of Indiana. "I feel," said Colonel Bright, "that Indiana is just as safe for Cleveland and Stevenson as New York. Republicans cannot repeat their tactics of four years ago in Indiana successfully. There are a great many reasons why we are stronger than ever before. Even if it were an even thing between the two parties, Judge Gresham's action would more than turn the scales in favor of the Democrats."

Samuel A. Beardsley, of Utica, secretary of the Democratic state committee, speaking of the campaign in the interior said: "Our campaign in the interior looks well at all points. I am thoroughly familiar with the condition of the canvass and I have been unable to detect a single dark spot. In my own county of Oneida the canvass is looking exceedingly favorable for Cleveland. The Republican bolt in the interior will avail the opposition nothing. Our organization is perfect, and all our men are on guard to meet the machinations of the enemy. Quay's boodle does not go this time."

Simmons' Accusation.

Hon. J. Edward Simmons, president of the Fourth National bank, said: "It is with in my knowledge that the Republicans have been scouring the country for one and two dollar bills. They began more than a few weeks ago to gather them in, and the of that denomination are now extremely difficult to get. It looks to me as if there was an immense corruption fund on hand here to be used in the Republican interest, but I have confidence that our people will be able to thwart the little game."

Congressman William Mutchler, of Easton, Pa., spoke of the political situation as follows: "From the situation as I observe it I believe that we shall win. I think that New York is certainly going for Cleveland, and I believe that Indiana will. Information received from West Virginia leads me to believe that that state is certainly going for Cleveland. There may be some doubt about Connecticut, but the chances are that we will get that state too. As to New York, there does not seem to be a reasonable doubt left that we shall carry the state by a handsome majority. I am a member of the executive committee of the congressional campaign committee, and from estimates made by that committee upon data received from every section of the state we have reason to believe that we shall have at least a majority of forty in the next house."

Senator Hill spoke at Port Jervis, N. Y., to one of the largest crowds ever gathered in the opera house there. In closing his speech Senator Hill said: "We have two mottoes, 'No interference with general elections,' 'No public taxation for private purposes.' Take these two principles home and study them. If you do the Democratic party will win a great victory next Tuesday."

A Republican Address.

Confidence reigns supreme at Republican national headquarters, and the managers of the campaign will no longer admit of a doubt as to the election of Harrison and Reid. The encouraging reports that come to the committee from every quarter are now fully backed up by the betting market, in which it is almost impossible any longer to get even money against Harrison. But this hopeful condition of affairs will not induce the committee to relax a single effort that might be put forth between now and election day.

Money is still being wagered at odds in favor of Cleveland's success in New York. Most of this money is being put up by gamblers who have no personal knowledge of the political situation. They are betting on tips from William F. Sheehan, chairman of the Democratic state committee. Mr. Sheehan knows perfectly well that the registration figures both in this city and in the country promise nothing but defeat for the Democratic national ticket.

On anything like an honest vote the extreme limit of Democratic possibilities in this city is a plurality of 60,000. The New York Sun has conceded this fact. Editorially it was frankly admitted that 60,000 will be a big result. The registration in New York amounts to only 300,000—an abnormally low figure. The Republican strength in New York is enrolled and the Democratic vote is deficient. There is also a falling off in the vote actually cast from the vote registered. In presidential years it amounts to about 5 per cent. There is not the slightest probability of a vote larger being cast than 291,000.

The Vote Contrasted.

The Republican vote in 1888 was 308,000. It is bound to be in this election at least 118,000. Certainly as many as 10,000 votes will be cast for the Socialist, Prohibition and other candidates, and will go into the "scattering" column. This will leave for Cleveland 166,000 votes, or a plurality of 51,000. Supposing that the Democrats did their best in Kings county, their plurality can by no possibility exceed 18,000. The best results from Long Island City will be 1,500 and in Richmond county 1,200.

This will give them below the Harlem river a plurality of 72,500, as against 71,081 votes in 1888. There is not a politician of standing in any party who does not know that in an honest election this is the remotest limit of Democratic possibility.

In the country, where personal registration is not required, the Republicans have been fully prepared, and the arrangements of the local committees are known to be perfect for getting the strength of the party in the ballot box. Harrison's majority above the Harlem river in 1888 was 85,464. This year it will be at the very least calculation 10,000 greater. There is no way by which a Democratic victory in this state can be achieved in an election which is ever half way honest.

And yet the Democrats are giving odds on the state, while tens of thousands of dollars are being offered on the general result by the Republicans without a Democrat taker. The Republican leaders understand perfectly what this means. It means that an army of Democratic repeaters are to be put to work in this city, each man furnished with a carefully prepared list of polling places and names, where and under which he is instructed to vote. It means that a full million of dollars of Democratic money is to be spent on election day to corrupt the franchise.

Corruption Alleged.

Great schemes of outrage and wrong are being conceived by the Democratic leaders. They intend to cheat and bulldoze their way to a Democratic majority. The Republican national committee does not intend that those wicked schemes shall succeed. The Republican managers will not be cheated or bulldozed, and the man who enters upon such undertaking will find himself in quick time.

Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, who has just returned from Europe, called at headquarters and said: "In England the vote is almost unanimous for Grover Cleveland among all classes of men, but the most marked indications of the feeling are among the tradesmen and manufacturers who are interested in the production of articles which we are now making for ourselves. The Englishman admits that he is being driven from the American market by his American competitors."

The executive committee of the Republican national committee during its session gave earnest consideration to the situation in Missouri. The striking off of a large number of registered voters in the city of St. Louis by the Democratic board of registration revision received serious attention. The facts were presented by National Committeeman Kerens, and the determination was reached that action by the United States court should be invoked through its state committee, and the national committee decided to co-operate to the full extent of its power for the restoration of the voters to the list and the punishment of the frauds.

Among the callers at national headquarters were Henry de B. Clay, president of the Virginia League of Republican Clubs; Edward W. Doherty, of Marblehead, Mass.; Hon. Patrick Kane, T. B. Conner, of Ohio, and Hon. Perry H. Carson, of Washington.

Minister Egan has entered into the campaign in earnest, and announces that he will make several speeches for the Republican candidates.

A Harrison Straw.

Observers of the political situation in Duchess county are commenting upon the fact that Vice President Morton's coachman has been going about the village of Hyde Park, for the past few days offering to bet $100 on election day. Can find takers on Harrison's election, and that ten Republicans will carry New York state. For many weeks following the Minneapolis convention everybody heresiouts watched for some indication of how Mr. Morton felt. This sudden confidence on the part of his coachman is regarded as a straw by observers in this vicinity.

Whitelaw Reid and Chauncey M. Depew spoke to an audience of 10,000 at Belmont, N. Y., and then went to Salamanca, where they spoke to a large crowd in the open space on Main street. From there they went to Jamestown, where both spoke to an audience of 3,500 people in the wigwam, after which the two orators came to this city. They express themselves as much pleased at the outlook in the state.

A report from Governor McKinley says that after going down through the counties of northeastern Pennsylvania from Binghampton and making addresses at Towanda, Tunkhannock and Taylorville, he stumped his part in the campaign at Scranton, last night.

Republican Campaign Songs.

One of the unusual features of the campaign is the very active part taken by the business men of New York, both sides having thoroughly organized. The Republican business men of the city held a big rally at Cooper Union last night. They filled the big Cooper Union hall from wall to wall with an audience which, if the amount of noise they made be a criterion, was more brimful and running over with enthusiasm than other gatherings of the campaign.

The Wholesale Dry Goods Men's Republican club was sponsor for the meeting. The club marched to Cooper Union from their headquarters with 4,000 men in line. They poured into the hall with a whoop and halloo, and for the half hour preceding the appearance of the first speaker not a man of them relaxed to the slightest degree his efforts to express his enthusiasm by vocal means. This is one of the songs they sang:

Indiana's loyal son will lead us in the fight,
Indiana's soldier son will put the foe to flight,
Indiana's Harrison will conquer for the right,
As we go marching on.

Glory, shout the glad hosanna!
Glory, Ben of Indiana!
Glory to Harrison, hallelujah!
As we go marching on.

Mr. William B. Fuller called the meeting to order. Colonel L. L. Strong was then introduced as chairman of the meeting. After Colonel Strong had made a brief speech a campaign song was sung with great fervor. One of the verses:

Harrison fought in the war—can't we do,
Cleveland hired a man to go.
Stevenson's quite unknown to fame,
Except as one of his girls' front name.

THE POWERS OF MARSHALS.

A Conflict Between Federal and State Officials May Ensue.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 3.—United States Marshal Jacobus, of New York, telegraphed to the attorney generals of fifteen states, calling attention to an address to New York Democrats by Lieutenant Governor Sheehan, in which he said:

No federal supervisor can enter the polling booth with another voter for any purpose whatever, not even if he is assisted by a disabled voter. He cannot go beyond the guardrails. * * * United States marshals have no more right than any other voter to be within the guardrail of the polling place, but "must stand outside along with other persons."

As Lieutenant Governor Sheehan quoted United States decisions and election laws to support his assertions, Marshal Jacobus asked for instructions, and Acting Attorney General Aldrich telegraphed him to follow Attorney General Miller's circular to the letter.

How Stevenson Feels.

CHICAGO, Nov. 3.—General Adlai E. Stevenson, accompanied by his law partner, James S. Ewing, arrived at the Palmer House, after having been east, west and south within the past two weeks. He said: "I do not believe that many Republicans will vote a straight ticket; strictly party ties upon the solid south if they had witnessed those vast assemblies and the intelligent interest displayed in the houses before the country. As for West Virginia, I have been in consultation with the political leaders there, and the result convinces me that the state will go Democratic by a larger majority than it did in 1888. In the east the leaders feel sanguine as to Connecticut, though of course our opponents are straining every nerve to carry the state. The same may be said of New Jersey."

South Dakota's Politics.

WATERTOWN, Nov. 3.—The refusal of the Republican secretary of state to place the names of the Prohibition candidates on the official state ballots because of some alleged irregularity is reacting upon the Republican party in a sensational manner. M. D. Alexander, the Prohibition candidate, for governor, declares that he will run for the Populist ticket, and has written a letter to all Prohibitionists to take the same course. There are 4,000 Prohibition votes in this state, and it seems likely that Weaver, with the Populist-Democratic-Prohibition votes, will carry the state.

Wanamaker in Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 3.—Postmaster General Wanamaker spoke at Frankfort and Lafayette this afternoon, and this speech he gave this gentle dab at the western Republican senators: "You see, my friends, the condition will not be the same as when Cleveland was president before. Then the bit and bridle of a Republican congress held him in check, but with the house of representatives already Democratic and a majority in the senate, everything would sweep along according to the sweet will of Democratic administration."

Republican View of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 3.—Chairman Dick, of the Republican state executive committee, when asked today for his estimate of the probable result in next Tuesday's election, said: "The indications are that the total vote will reach 900,000, and if the returns received at the headquarters hold good the Republican plurality will not be less than 25,000, and in no event will it fall below that of last year, when Major McKinley was elected by 21,500. Of the twenty-one congressmen the Republicans will elect fifteen.

Abbett Says It Is a Lie.

NEW YORK, Nov. 3.—Governor Abbett, of New Jersey, was seen at his office in this city regarding a published dispatch from Trenton, which stated that the original draft of the famous coal combine bill and the message of Governor Abbett vetoing the same are missing from the State library. The governor branded the matter as a lie got up for political purposes, and said that if the bill had been stolen, as the dispatch insinuated, he would have been apprised of it as soon as the discovery was made.

Combination in Oregon.

PORTLAND, Nov. 3.—Information here has been received by telegraph from the national Democratic headquarters to withdraw the Cleveland electors in favor of the Weaver men. This meets with the approval of Democrats here, and may cause the defeat of the Harrison electors.

The Tickets Too Small.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Nov. 3.—It has been discovered that the Democratic tickets for the congressional districts are smaller than the legal size. The state printer is at work on new ones, but it is found that they cannot be printed fast enough to reach the remote districts in time for the election.

Populist Candidates Withdraw.

JEFFERSONVILLE, Ind., Nov. 3.—Every man on the People's party ticket in this county has withdrawn and the party has gone completely to pieces here. It threatened at one time to carry off over a hundred Democratic votes.

Death Reaped While the Tired Switchman Slumbered.

AN ENGLISH RAILROAD TRAGEDY.

Nine Persons Killed and a Number Fatally Injured in a Collision of a Freight Train with the London Express—Some of the Victims Burned to Death in the Wreck.

LONDON, Nov. 3.—An appalling railroad accident occurred near Thisak, in York-shire. The east coast express train for London left Edinburgh at 10:30 last night. The express train, being unusually late, was divided into two sections. The first section proceeded safely to London, arriving at the usual hour. The second section had over nine hundred passengers on board, including several noblemen and other distinguished people.

Approaching Thisak the fog was thicker than ever, and at a point about two and a half miles north of that town the signals were entirely obscured, and the express train collided at full speed with a goods train standing at Manor House. The train of a string at Manor House. The wreck of the express train was complete. The engine came full tilt against the goods train, and toppled over, smashed and disjointed, with the carriages after it, into a solid nest to the track.

The Wreck in Flames.

The carriages were broken and jammed together, and most of the passengers were caught in their compartments as in so many traps. The wreck took fire almost instantly from escaping gas and the smoke and flame, and the shrieks of the dying and wounded made a horrible scene.

Those who managed to extricate themselves were unable to render assist others who were yet alive and caught in the wreck. It was difficult work, owing to the way in which the carriages were crushed together, and the inside of the locking compartment doors, that were fastened after the usual British fashion.

Men and women could be heard shrieking for assistance, and one man who was slowly being burned to death and who could not get out begged the rescuers, in heaven's name, to kill him.

It is known that not less than ten are dead and that thirty are injured, twelve of them seriously. The fireman was killed, and the stoker, who jumped at the instant of the collision, escaped with a broken leg.

The Marquis of Tweeddale and the Marquis of Huntly, the latter a lord in waiting to Queen Victoria, were on board the train. The Marquis of Tweeddale escaped uninjured, and although an elderly gentleman did active service in assisting to rescue others. The Marquis of Huntly was bruised and had a thumb broken, but suffered no other injury. Captain Duncan McLeod, of the Fifty-second Highlanders, is among the killed. Trains have been sent to the scene to clear the wreck and carry away the wounded and dead. The mails for the north have been delayed for hours owing to the accident.

The Signalman Asleep.

The Marquis of Tweeddale says he travelled in a Pullman car with the Marquis of Huntly. Mr. Kynoch, of Keith, and Major General Arthur Lambton accompanied them. The collision occurred about 4:40 o'clock this morning. The goods train with which the express collided was loaded with coal, which made the encounter all the more disastrous for the express and its human freight.

It has been ascertained that the signalman at the cabin at the north end of Thisak, which may account for the accident. The New John Forsythe, chaplain of the Caledonian asylum, was badly injured in the wreck. The Pullman dining car was thrown off the rails and shattered, but the occupants escaped death. The fourteen ordinary carriages were thrown backward in the confusion of the crash. Only a small portion of the train was destroyed by fire.

A railway accident is also reported from Liverpool. Last night a train on the Mersey railway, loaded with passengers, many of whom had been on the Birkenhead ferry-boat when it collided with the ship Everton, was leaving the ferry station when it ran into the engine and was badly damaged. Three passengers were killed and about fifty injured, and some of the injured will probably die. When passage on another train was offered to the passengers who were unhurt many of them, having been in the ferryboat collision and the railway collision the same night, thought it would be unlucky to continue their journey just then, and refused to go.

A passenger named Relath in an interview said that he saw Signalman Holmes after the collision. The man was in a pitiable condition of mental distress. His child had died on the previous night, he told Relath, and he had asked the station master for leave of absence, but had been refused. He had to take his turn of duty, though greatly fatigued, and was so tired that he had asleep and neglected the signals.

RIOTING IN SPAIN.

GRANADA, Nov. 3.—The failure of the queen to come here to unveil the Columbus and Isabella monument has caused intense bitterness. Great sums had been spent in preparing for the royal party, and the vexatious found in the king's illness did not satisfy the people, who gathered in the streets near the monument, and after holding a short meeting began to riot and pillage in the neighborhood.

The Royal Tribune was burned and the covering was torn from the monument. The house of the local Conservative leader was stoned and an attempt was made to fire it. Most of the crowd were provided with whistles and horns which they had intended to use when the ministers arrived from Madrid, but the latter having heard of the rioting did not start from the capital. Crowds are still rioting throughout the city.

The triumphal arches have been torn down and the patrol offices have been burned. People are shouting "Long live the republic!" The police have charged the mobs repeatedly and many have been injured.

Mrs. Deacon Scored.

PARIS, Nov. 3.—The tribunal of the Seine dismissed the suit brought by Mrs. Deacon against her husband for divorce on the ground of alleged cruelty. The presiding judge severely scored Mrs. Deacon for bringing the suit on such frivolous grounds while she herself was under grave charges, and the court ordered that the eldest of the children, now in a convent, should be given up to Mr. Deacon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Deacon were in court, and Mrs. Deacon was deeply affected.

SCHWATKA'S SAD DEATH

The Famous Explorer Killed by an Overdose of Laudanum.

HE WAS PICKED UP IN THE STREET.

Taken First to a Hotel and Then to Jail, He Finally Landed in a Hospital, Where He Expired—His Life Might Have Been Saved by Prompt Measures.

PORTLAND, Or., Nov. 3.—Lieutenant Frederick G. Schwatka was found at 3 o'clock this morning lying unconscious in First street, a half empty bottle of laudanum by his side.

He was taken to the St. Charles hotel, where he was placed in a chair, the supposition being at first that he was intoxicated. But his condition grew alarming at the end of an hour; a patrol wagon was called and he was hurried to the city jail. Dr. Wheeler, the city physician, was summoned by telephone. He said the lieutenant was suffering from what seemed to be narcotic poisoning.

The lieutenant was straightaway sent to the Good Samaritan hospital, where everything known to medical science was done for him, but in vain, and he died.

Symptoms or Apoplexy.

Lieutenant Schwatka had been suffering from a complication of troubles and had shown symptoms of apoplexy on numerous occasions. His stomach had of recent years given him much trouble, and for the purpose of obtaining relief he used small quantities of laudanum, usually from ten to twenty drops. Last evening his stomach trouble came on with such severity that he complained bitterly and sought relief. He went into a drug store and asked for two ounces of laudanum. The clerk did not recognize the lieutenant and asked him if he had a prescription. He replied he had not, but as he was a graduate of Bellevue college he could soon write one. The clerk replied that it was not necessary and gave Lieutenant Schwatka the drug and registered the transaction. He talked about his ailment, but otherwise appeared in excellent spirits.

The city physician says: "I shall hold a post mortem examination to discover the exact cause of death. It is possible he took an overdose of the drug by mistake, but I am inclined to believe that he had an apoplectic stroke. When I was sent for I found the lieutenant unconscious. The pupils of his eyes indicated that he had taken a narcotic. I am of the opinion that had a physician been called as soon as Lieutenant Schwatka was discovered his life might have been saved."

The Explorer's Career.

Frederick Schwatka was born at Galena, Ills., August 29, 1849. In 1883 he removed to Oregon with his parents, and in 1885 he received an appointment to the United States Military academy from that state. Graduating in 1875, he served in the United States cavalry and garrison duty. He also received a medical degree at Bellevue Hospital college, New York, a year after he had been admitted to the bar in Nebraska.

From June, 1878, to September, 1880, he had command of the Franklin search party in the Arctic, which accomplished the longest sledge journey on record—3,251 miles—occupying eleven months. The search party discovered and buried many of the skeletons of Sir John Franklin's party.

Schwatka's second expedition was for the government in Alaska, along the Yukon river. His efforts were carried by about seventy-five Indians across the mountains, and a raft was built on which the party floated down the river 1,305 miles, the longest recorded raft journey. By this expedition the length of the Yukon was found to be 2,545 miles, navigable for 1,806. In 1884 Schwatka was assigned the command of first lieutenant, Third cavalry, and two years later he made an expedition for the New York Times among the Mount St. Elias Indians, which if mountain being ascended over 7,000 feet.

His Mexican Discoveries.

In 1889 he made an expedition to the northern part of old Mexico, practically unexplored on account of the presence of the warlike Apaches. Many interesting relics of the Aztec civilization were found and studies made of the cliff and cave dwellers, of whom Schwatka estimated there were from 3,000 to 12,000 in Chihuahua alone.

Lieutenant Schwatka received the Roquette arctic medal from the Geographical Society of Paris, and he was honorary member of several foreign societies. He was the author of "Along a Great River," "Nimrod in the North" and "The Children of the Old."

POOR POCAHONTAS.

THE MAIDEN EXISTED, THOUGH SHE NEVER SAVED SMITH.

Captain John Smith Did Not Insert the Pocahontas Episode in His Earlier Histories of His Explorations—His Poetic Fancy Was Vivid.

When Mr. Winsor, in his "Critical History of America," put an end to the heroic disinfecting of the redoubtable Captain John Smith we still had Pocahontas, as we thought, the very flower of wild life in America. But more recently the critics have annihilated Pocahontas. It is a grievance of our sex. Heretofore for the most part the force of criticism has been spent on the male sex—Romulus and Remus, Samson, William Tell, even Homer, ran the gantlet. History of this sort looks like the heap of chips in the fence corner—all that remains of a dozen sets that were one after another the pride of the house. Our Bridget subtracted from the plates, pitchers and saucers till nothing was left but glittering fragments. But Pocahontas! What euphony there was in that name! What an idyl to be told for the delight of our people! What a superb tableau to be rehearsed at charity fairs!

It seems that Pocahontas was an after thought of that slim Fairstaff of our early history, the heroic John Smith. The very name was a challenge of our credulity. In the first story of a voyage up the Chickahominy, written in 1608, he relates in full a long list of exploits. These ended, as he said, in his being delivered up to King Powhatan, who treated him kindly, giving him guides for his return through the wilderness, who did not leave him till he was safe among the English at James town. But in that later book which he terms "The True History of Virginia" there is not a mention of any Pocahonta. "There is no attire on Smith's, no rosarie, no princess. Up to that time he had not even thought of her.

But some time between 1608 and 1624 Pocahontas seems to have been born in Smith's fertile brain. At the latter date this wonderful captain, who had the whole New World in which to adventure and coolly himself to tell its glory, wrote what he called a "General History of Virginia," or rather edited papers written by others, with some additions of his own. In this book appeared the charming episode of Pocahontas—a story good enough to be true, and it has probably done enough good to excuse us for trying to believe it still. Smith's story tells how he was seized and condemned to death. The Indians already stood about him with raised clubs—we are all fashioned reading books—but just at the critical moment the ideal Indian maiden burst out of the throng with a wild cry, ran to Smith, lifted his head tenderly from the block, placed her own over his and pleaded for his life. Powhatan, who seems to have been a gen wise king, quite after the European style was overcome by his beautiful daughter's entreaty and spared "the late governor of Virginia."

But it is an historical fact that there was a Pocahontas; that she did marry an Englishman named Rolfe, and did go to England with him, where she was received by the court, and was held in high esteem and love even by the English people, but died shortly from the change of climate, but more from the white people's methods of eating and sleeping, to which she was compelled to conform. What can we make, then, of Smith's idyl? Did Pocahontas probably befriend him in some manner? Certainly when she went to England Smith recommended her to the court. It is most likely that his Munchausen imagination, finding her an object of great interest in England, undertook to glorify himself by picturesque scene that never took place—allying her to himself—the extent of her late set in him being kindly acts when he was a guest of her father. The temptation was certainly very great—seeing that this man Smith was a nobody who had made himself up for the public out of fustian and fustian adventures, for the most part no more real than the encounters of Falstaff.

The story of Pocahontas may find some illumination from other parts of his writings. The original description of his capture by the tribe ruled by Powhatan is to the effect that he expected at once to be put to death, but having fired his pistol freely at them and wounded several he was agreeably surprised by their taking him into high favor. For supper he had a quarter of venison and ten pounds of bread, and each morning thereafter three women placed before him "three great platters of fine bread and more venison than ten men could devour." They guarded him, to be sure, but let him have his comfort, and their "better affection" grew day by day.

On the whole it seems probable that we shall have to give up the Pocahontas story as a marginal illumination, written into history after Mr. John Smith had found that his stories pleased the people better than facts.

To understand Mr. Smith's habit of spinning fancy tales for veritable history we must know that he was a poet. His descriptions all show this. Pocahontas was simply a poem. His picture of Virginia is altogether idyllic. "Here are mountains, hills, plains, valleys, rivers, brooks, all running most pleasantly into a fair bay, compassed half for the mouth with fruitful land delightsome land. In the bay and rivers are many isles, both great and small. The mountains are of divers natures, for at the foot of the hay the rocks are of composition like mill stones, some of them marble. And many pieces like crystal we found, as thrown down from water. There waters swell from the rocks such glittering tinctures that the ground in some places is gilded, the rocks and the earth like copperas, to behold that better judgment than myself might have been persuaded that they contained more than probabilities." Clearly such a scene needed a Pocahontas, and if Mr. Smith finally divested her we should be grateful. Nor can we forget that we have had the charming maiden, quite a good as real, for over 200 years.—Mary E. Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Thomas Hardy's "Tess."

Mr. Thomas Hardy in speaking of the history of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" admits Mrs. Hardy's share in the making of the novel, through suggestions of various locations and study of the quaint people of Dorsetshire, where the plot is laid. The family selected by Mr. Hardy from among the many houses of devonly gloomy aspect as client lineage common to that region true their line back to the conquest through Woolbridge manor house, once one of the country seats and now but a farmhouse.

It is easy to divine that it was Mrs. Hardy who suggested the trying on of the jewels by Tess. It was she, too, who heard a neighbor boasting that a certain vault was full of the "skelingtons" of his family.—Exchange.

Necessary Training.

Which mother has the remedy in the training of their daughters, whether they are the children of millionaires or of the humblest clerk in a dingy office, to know how to manage their own household affairs? Is it most likely that his Munchausen imagination, finding her an object of great interest in England, undertook to glorify himself by picturesque scene that never took place—allying her to himself—the extent of her late set in him being kindly acts when he was a guest of her father. The temptation was certainly very great—seeing that this man Smith was a nobody who had made himself up for the public out of fustian and fustian adventures, for the most part no more real than the encounters of Falstaff.

The story of Pocahontas may find some illumination from other parts of his writings. For supper he had a quarter of venison and ten pounds of bread, and each morning thereafter three women placed before him "three great platters of fine bread and more venison than ten men could devour." They guarded him, to be sure, but let him have his comfort, and their "better affection" grew day by day.

On the whole it seems probable that we shall have to give up the Pocahontas story as a marginal illumination, written into history after Mr. John Smith had found that his stories pleased the people better than facts.

To understand Mr. Smith's habit of spinning fancy tales for veritable history we must know that he was a poet. His descriptions all show this. Pocahontas was simply a poem. His picture of Virginia is altogether idyllic. "Here are mountains, hills, plains, valleys, rivers, brooks, all running most pleasantly into a fair bay, compassed half for the mouth with fruitful land delightsome land. In the bay and rivers are many isles, both great and small. The mountains are of divers natures, for at the foot of the bay the rocks are of composition like mill stones, some of them marble. And many pieces like crystal we found, as thrown down from water. There waters swell from the rocks such glittering tinctures that the ground in some places is gilded, the rocks and the earth like copperas, to behold that better judgment than myself might have been persuaded that they contained more than probabilities." Clearly such a scene needed a Pocahontas, and if Mr. Smith finally divested her we should be grateful. Nor can we forget that we have had the charming maiden, quite a good as real, for over 200 years.—Mary E. Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Thomas Hardy's "Tess."

Mr. Thomas Hardy in speaking of the history of "Tess of the D'Urbervilles" admits Mrs. Hardy's share in the making of the novel, through suggestions of various locations and study of the quaint people of Dorsetshire, where the plot is laid. The family selected by Mr. Hardy from among the many houses of devonly gloomy aspect as client lineage common to that region true their line back to the conquest through Woolbridge manor house, once one of the country seats and now but a farmhouse.

It is easy to divine that it was Mrs. Hardy who suggested the trying on of the jewels by Tess. It was she, too, who heard a neighbor boasting that a certain vault was full of the "skelingtons" of his family.—Exchange.

Women as Instrumentalists.

In small things as well as in great the steady progress of our sex is observable. Learning has lately been called to the decline of the old fashioned prejudice that limited the feminine study of instrumental music to one or two instruments. Not a violin was once frowned upon as "unbecoming," and the pianoforte, the liberal descendant of the old harpsichord, was held to be the only "ladylike" musical instrument. Nowadays this limitation has almost entirely disappeared, and girls are permitted to take up the study of any instrument that pleases them. I am afraid I have still enough of the "Old Adam" left in me to hope that some of them will devote themselves to the trombone or the ophicleide.

I say this at the risk of being voted conventional and old fashioned, but somehow or other I cannot quite reconcile myself to the idea that feminine hands and red feminine faces, even when produced in the combined causes of art and emancipation! —Lady's Pictorial.

A Notable Woman Writer.

Miss Edna Lyall, the novelist, lives at Eastbourn. Her study is described as a "curious mixture of simplicity and comfort." She has stated recently that she does not exhaust herself by long hours of work, neither rising with the lark nor burning midnight oil. She writes for two or three hours during the morning, and gets rapidly through her work with the aid of a typewriter. She is passionately fond of fiction, and finds the Seventeenth century the most interesting period of romantic literature.

Her favorite poets are Tennyson, Lowell, Whittier and Mrs. Browning. The novel "We Two" was suggested to her by reading that Mr. Rindlaugh, when imprisoned in the civil tower, had telegraphed to his daughter. Edna Lyall is the daughter of the late Robert Bayley, of the Inner Temple, and her nom de plume is made by a rearrangement of most of the letters of her name.—Sheffield Telegraph.

Mrs. Palmore.

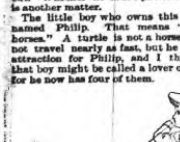
Of Coventry Patmore's wife, the heroine of his "Angel in the House," it is said that she was a very lovely girl, clever, accomplished, and animated. Lowell called her a biographer says: "Her figure was tall and graceful. Her dark hair was styled

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A Queer Dentist.

A very queer dentist, it seems to me. He never studied at a dental college. He has no diploma that I know of. He does not belong to any medical society, yet he is not a quack. That name might be applied to a duck, but not to a turtle. As a dentist, he is perhaps a little slow, but he does his work well. At least he can pull a tooth out. Whether he could put one in or not is another matter.

The little boy who owns this turtle is named Philip. That means "lover of horses." A turtle is not a horse and cannot travel nearly as fast, but he has some attraction for Philip, and I think that that boy might be called a lover of turtles, for he now has four of them.



One day this summer Philip found that one of his teeth was getting loose. He had never had but one set, and a second crop of teeth is beginning to push the first crop out. Philip's mother was away. He could not wait for her to come back. He thought it was important that this loose tooth should come out at once. So he went to the seamstress and asked to have a thread tied around his loose tooth. She did not wish to do it at first, but at last consented. Then Philip fastened the other end of the thread to a hole in the shell of one of his turtles. The turtle walked off into the grass. Philip braced himself and stood stock still. In a minute the queer little dentist had pulled the tooth out.

I am sorry to say that this dentist turtle has since died, leaving a family of four. They perished under the grapevine, with a fitting epitaph.

On one occasion this turtle went out for a little visit in a neighbor's yard. The servant had placed upon her back some a dish of doughnut fat to cool. The dentist left to himself, calmly walked into it, and rowly escaping an untimely death. He was rescued, and after a deal of bathing and wiping was restored to his former self.

Philip's turtles are often taken in a small red wheelbarrow to the common pond for their baths. They are allowed to swim the length of their strings and then brought home, looking fresh and happy.

The dentist turtle is a favorite with his master to thinking. The turtle was silent before his death and has been silent ever since. I suspect that Philip's tongue is not often so silent as that of the turtle. It may have been this fact, or it may be, his mother thinks, that he heard the test about silence in church for half an hour, which prompted him to ask the question, "Mamma, if I should die talking, would I always keep on talking?"—Christian Register.

The Queen and Her Grandchildren.

A Lesson Well Learned.

One day Ralph used some naughty words to mamma. He said "Shut up." Mamma punished him, and told him he must not use those words again. The next day it was rainy, and Ralph came home from school with his umbrella up. The catch bothered his little fingers, and he wanted to ask mamma to shut up his umbrella for him. "Mamma, won't you—I don't mean the naughty words, mamma, but won't you—pull the stick down."—Youth's Companion.

She Didn't Like That Kind of Crackers.

It was the Fourth of July. A little miss was told to take her afternoon nap, and then she could get up and watch the boys put off their firecrackers.

Pretty soon a heavy thunder shower came on, and Aunt Mary went up to see if Miss Rachel was frightened. Evidently she was, for she called out at once:

"Aunt Mary, I don't want to hear any more water crackers."—Babyland.

Queen Victoria's Cats.

The London Standard presents a picture of Queen Victoria at the age of six years, when she was still a princess with exceedingly remote chances of ever becoming England's sovereign. She then used to ride daily in her queer little carriage through Hyde park, while the children flocked after her. The picture is a copy from a painting by John Doyle, now in the possession of his son, Dr. Conan Doyle, the celebrated physician and story writer of London.

It was Beverly's wedding day, and he was teasing his kid brother-in-law. "Well, Johnny," he said solemnly, "I'm going to take your sister away off, and have her all to myself, where you won't see her any more."

"No, really, are you?" said the kid curiously.

"Yes, I am. What do you think of it?"

THAT BIG "SMOKER."

SURPASSING MOST SANGUINE EXPECTATIONS.

A Regular Fog of Smoke, but Dunellenites Brought a "Fog Horn" that Aroused the Wildest Enthusiasm.

The largest and most enthusiastic political meeting held in this city this season was that of the Republicans and their friends last evening in the Cresent Rink.

The festivities began about seven o'clock when the brightly clothed wheelmen's Division paraded the streets making noise and brightness everywhere they went. At about 7.45 o'clock the boom of a cannon was heard in the uttermost parts of the city, telling that the battle was on once more, and Republicans with their Democratic friends were in time to join in the fun.

On the way to the rink, stragglers, with white clay pipes in their mouths, were met. They were not running away, but were out to meet their friends, and soon returned with their numbers increased.

Inside the rink the air was filled with smoke which had much the appearance of a dense fog.

Gathered about in small groups, were willing voters, who congratulated each other on the success of the "smoker" and the general sociability and satisfaction which characterized the event.

Promptly at 8.30 the meeting was called to order, and as many as could do so found seats, while those who were not so fortunate, stood in the aisles and crowded about the platform.

Mr. Charles B. Corwin was appointed chairman and made a short and interesting address, after which a trio of colored men played a selection on a banjo and guitars, and were followed with a song by the Glee Club.

Mr. John W. Murray then made a short speech. He said that the Republican party was the party of intelligence and character, and the promoter of public schools, progress, good money and prosperity. He requested that every Republican vote on election day before twelve o'clock noon in order that their vote would be sure to be recorded, and ended his talk by saying

"We have nothing to fear,
Our record is clear."

Councilman Francis E. Marsh was introduced by Chairman Corwin as "Our Frank," He aroused much enthusiasm and kept the entire audience cheering again and again. His remarks were very terse and witty, and ended with a rousing cheer for Harrison and Reid and the entire Republican ticket.

Surrogate Parrott was next introduced and made a good speech. He referred to the county ticket and asked in a straightforward and pleasing manner for the support of Plainfield voters.

Mr. John H. Carney imitated a Dutch boy in his usual excellent manner and evoked much laughter by his funny remarks.

A quartette from the Glee Club sang "Good Bye, Old Grover, Good-Bye," and the audience joined in the chorus in a hearty manner.

Professor Roberts of Brooklyn, Principal of the Dunellen Public school, was introduced by Mr. Corwin, who said the Dunellen contingent thought we hadn't a speaker to spare and so brought one along. It soon became evident that they were about right. Prof. Roberts is a tall, fine looking man, with a voice of great power. He was very dramatic in manner and extremely eloquent, and succeeded in creating a regular cyclone of enthusiasm. He did not waste time on facts and personalities, but told of the good doings of the Republican party, in a very effective way. He said the Democratic candidate for President was boasting that he was not a millionaire, but a poor man who had to work for all his money, and had not had a holiday for thirty-five years. The Republican was the only party for the laboring man. Every Republican President and nominee for President had been a poor boy, a workingman — Fremont, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Arthur and Harrison.

When first appointed to the Legislature, Abraham Lincoln walked a dozen miles barefoot in order to save the wear on his boots, carrying them under his arm.

During the period of Democratic rule, a workingman not only received lower wages than he does to-day, examine every bill he received to see if it was worth anything at all. For twenty years he had to examine a bill to ascertain its value. It is good for its face value in any country where people can be found. He challenged any man in the audience to show the use of a single bill in his pocket or the bank it was issued by, and he could do so. "But you know it is good. Uncle Sam endorses it."

He added that the laboring men of the little State of Rhode Island alone, with small savings saved up to buy the stock of all the southern banks and have enough left to go on a picnic. In almost every manufacturing State in the country, yet those southerners want to come to us, and want us to have free trade and world-wide money.

As long as the Republicans stand for the country and the old flag they will win. A Republican has stood for a vote to honest his party only, while with the Democracy it is always for party above country.

Thirty years ago the nation was in mourning for those present were in the midst of a terrible war, and was admitted to the Bar to practice as an attorney-at-law.

BREVITIES

—Borough Council meeting to-night.

—The new Presbyterian chapel at Dunellen will be dedicated next Sunday.

—There is a good joke on the Dunellen Democrats which will appear to-morrow.

—There were twenty four speakers at the Young Men's meeting, at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, last Sunday.

—The mock trial in Vincent chapel to-night promises to be quite interesting. Judge Codington will preside.

—Mr. John L. Wheeler has been secured by the Republicans to speak at the rink to-morrow night. Seats will be reserved for ladies.

—Marshal Pangborn arrested John Millen last night for drunkenness. This morning Justice Crossley fined Millen two dollars and costs.

—There will be a flower show in Plainfield next week. It will be held in a Crescent avenue residence. Watch for the announcement Monday.

—Mr. L. W. Randolph, the druggist, will lead the young people's meeting of the First Baptist church, to-night, at eight o'clock, and invites everyone.

—The attendance at the Boys' Club for the month of October was 1,792, average 97; largest attendance, 131; smallest attendance, 14; number of visitors, 111.

—The eagle killed at Sparta, a few days ago, referred to in yesterday's News as measuring six feet, two inches and weighing five pounds, probably weighed fifty-five pounds.

—A horse, belonging to a well-known Plainfield butcher, fell yesterday morning, at the corner of Somerset street and Manning avenue, damaging the wagon considerably. The accident attracted quite a crowd.

—The Democratic leaders tried to hold a mass meeting in North Plainfield last night, but the Democrats had nearly all gone to the Republican meeting, and the few who lingered say the Democratic meeting proved a fizzle. There was some good singing there, however, later in the evening, by a quartette, which sang unto itself.

—The Philadelphia Times says of "The Kid": The above new musical comedy was presented at Harris's Theatre last night, and gave unbounded satisfaction to a large and enthusiastic audience. The cast comprises a number of clever people, among which Dottie Pine, Emma Carr and the Kid Quartet were most conspicuous.

—The Democratic gamblers are indulging in their usual bluffing on bets. It was the same in the campaign of 1888. They really make those bets, but they are rewards quietly make bets the other way, so that whichever way the election goes they can honestly say they have won. This make people think they have a sure thing. Quay proved in 1888 too sharp for them, and beat them at their own game.

THE STATE'S TREASURY.

IT WOULD BE BANKRUPTED BY DEMOCRATIC EXTRAVAGANCE.

But for the Republican Refunding Bill or Congress and Arrears of Railroad Taxes.—An Interesting Exhibit.

[From the Republican League Organ.]

But for the possibility derived from the Republican protective tariff, enabling the national government to refund to New Jersey the war taxes paid by the State, added to the incidental revenue derived from taxes due for several years of arrears from the Morris and Essex Railroad, the treasury of New Jersey would be bankrupt, or a loan would be required until a State tax should be levied upon the people. And it is a Republican Congress that passed the refunding bill by which New Jersey received $826,814.93 of this revenue. We charge, therefore, against the extravagance of the recent Democratic Legislatures, and the power given to the Governor to contract certain obligations by his volition alone without limit or restraint, that the ordinary receipts into the State treasury would not have been sufficient to meet the current expenses and special demands.

PROVED BY THEIR OWN FIGURES.

The reader must remember that the only sources whence we can secure our information are from Democratic officials. The Governor, State Comptroller and State Treasurer, from whom the accounts come, are all Democrats. Hence it cannot be charged that we are proving our position by what Democrats might be disposed to call garbled Republican statements. We want every honest Democrat to read the subjoined figures, and be mad over that boast of the Governor in his last message, of the excellent condition of the State's finances, is but incidental if not accidental, and that the same fortunate circumstances cannot be relied upon to insure that the larger of the two would not have come to the State but for the opportunity afforded by our Republican protective tariff and the refunding war dept returned to New Jersey by the act of a Republican Congress.

To prove our charge, we take the following figures from the last annual message of Governor Abbett. At the close of the fiscal year, October 31, 1890, there was in the treasury $445,790.97. The receipts from all sources for the year ending October 31, 1891, were $2,130,643.96. This made the total assets $2,564,184.85. But of this amount, $255,000 were received from the Morris and Essex Railroad as the result of a compromise in a suit for past due taxes accumulated during a long term of years. This income can of course not be forthcoming again and should not be estimated as current receipts. Deducting it from the balance of $2,309,184.85 left available assets, $433,760.87, on October 31, 1890, we would have had an actual current balance of only $198,760.87, which added to the current revenues October 31, 1891, would have given the following:

Balance, less Morris and Essex tax.....$198,760.87
Receipts from other sources.....$2,130,643.96

Total assets, October 31, 1891.....$2,329,184.33

NOW DEDUCT THE WAR TAX.

And bear in mind that this money, amounting to $332,614.83, was refunded to New Jersey as its war debt by the refunding bill passed by a Republican Congress, and was a part of the $100,000,000 that the Democrats charged the Republicans had been squandered by national treasury since Grover Cleveland's term expired. The refunding of this debt was made possible by the revenues from our protective tariff—which the Democratic platform charges to be unconstitutional, but in which our Democratic Governor is glad to receive to prevent the State treasury from becoming bankrupt by his extravagance. Deduct this and we would have assets as follows:

Assets, less Morris and Essex tax.....$2,329,184.33

Assets from current sources.....$1,996,569.50

From these assets from current sources, which alone the State would have received but for the two extraordinary channels above stated, we will now deduct the current disbursements as per the same message of the Governor, for the year ending October 31, 1891, and the balance sheet would present the following exhibit:

Disbursements for the year ending
Oct. 31, 1891.....$2,162,015.87
Receipts from current sources, less the two extraordinary.....1,996,569.50
Deficiency.....$215,446.37

Thus, only for the $255,000 received from the Morris and Essex tax, and the $332,614.83 from the refunded war debt, instead of the boasted balance on hand of $433,760.87, the treasury would, on the 31st of October, have been empty, and the Governor's message would have necessarily contained the humiliating statement of an actual deficiency of $215,446.37.

HERE IS ANOTHER SHOWING.

Let us give the State the benefit of the Morris and Essex tax of $255,000 and accept the balance stated in the Governor's message as in the treasury of October 31, 1890, namely $433,760.87, and deduct from this the refunded war debt received by the favor of a Republican Congress, and we have the following exhibit:

Balance Oct. 31, 1891.....$433,760.87
Deduct refunded war tax.....332,614.83

Balance in treasury.....$10,584.15

How that dwindles the boasted balance of this vaunting and pharisaical Democratic State administration. If by the message it cost $2,162,015.87 to run the State the last fiscal year, that would be $5,924.98 per day. So that, but for the refunded war debt, granted by act of a Republican Congress, there would have been in the State treasury only $10,584.15, or less than enough to pay the expenses of the State for four days.

The reader will take notice, too, that by the Governor's own showing in his message there was $433,760.87, on Oct. 31, 1890, and only $402,168.96, Oct. 31, 1891; so that the State went behind $31,591.91 in the single year, a year when the business of it would be regarded as reckless financiering.

In this connection we present another interesting fact from the State Comptroller's Report (another Democratic official), at the close of the fiscal year, Oct. 31, 1891, there were unpaid appropriations amounting to $332,614.83.

Let the intelligent and candid voter study the above figures, taken from Democratic sources even more reliable than Peck's famous report, and we know he cannot conscientiously do other than vote the Republican ticket on the 8th of November and help to secure a change in such reckless and presumptuous extravagance of the people's money.

Nelson's Seminary Reading.

A large and very select audience assembled at Seminary Hall last evening to listen to Mr. Thomas Nelson Page in his sanctum.

Mr. Page is a Southern gentleman and greatly entertained his audience with his darkey dialect selections. If any one were to shut their eyes they would almost believe they were listening to an old plantation darkey relating a history of "his family."

The first selection given was very pathetic, while the last few were shorter and more humorous.

During intermissions two piano solos were played very acceptably by a young lady.

Governor McKinley on Wild-Cat Money.

There is one thing which this country cannot afford to trifle with, and that is its money—its measure of value—the money which passes among its people in return for their labor and the products of their toil or of their land. There is no contrivance which is so successful in cheating labor and robbing the poor people of the country as an unstable, worthless and easily-counterfeited currency. With our present paper money, the citizen or the business man does not have to carry with him a bank note detector; he does not need to concern himself lest the bank should fail; if the note is genuine, it is good, and always good, for its face value. The money of this country should be as national as its flag, sacred as its national honor, and as sound as the Government itself.

FEDERAL LAWS DEFINED

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE MARSHALS.

The United States Laws Are Paramount to the State Laws When Congressmen and Electors Are Being Voted For—Arrests May Be Made Without Warrants.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—The department of justice, through Solicitor General Aldrich, acting attorney general, has issued the following important statement as to the respective rights of federal and state officers at the election polling places. The attention of the department having been called to certain alleged instructions to the police and state officers in Alabama, Arkansas and New York with reference to their conduct toward and with deputy United States marshals as may be in attendance at the polling places, Acting Attorney General Aldrich ruled as follows:

Such instructions bring their authors and all persons acting in compliance to carry them into effect within the provisions of Secs. 5,518 and 5,529 of the criminal statutes of the United States, which are as follows:

The Law.

Sec. 5,518.—If two or more persons in any state or territory conspire to prevent by force, intimidation or threat any person from accepting or holding any office, trust or place of confidence under the United States or from discharging any duties thereof, or to induce by like means any officer of the United States to leave any state, district or place where his duties as an officer are required to be performed, or to injure him in his person or property on account of his lawful discharge of the duties of his office or while engaged in the lawful discharge thereof, or to injure his property so as to molest, interrupt, hinder or impede him in the discharge of his official duties, each of such conspirators shall be fined not more than $5,000 or less than $500 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labor, not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 5,529.—Every person, whether with or without any authority, power or process or pretended authority, power or process of any state, territory or municipality, who obstructs, hinders, assaults or by bribery, solicitation or otherwise interferes with or prevents the supervisor of election or either of them, or the marshal or his general or special deputies or either of them, in the performance or any duty required of them or either of them, or which he or they or either of them may be authorized to perform by the law of the United States in the execution of process or otherwise, or who by any of the means before mentioned hinders or prevents the free attendance and presence at such places of registration or at such polls of election, or full and free access and egress to and from any such room or place of registration or polls of election, or in going to and from any such place of registration or polls of election, or who goes to and from any room where any such registration or election or canvass of votes, or of making returns or certificates thereof, may be had, or who molests, interferes with, removes or ejects from any such place of registration or polls of election or of canvassing or such certificate, or of making returns or certificates thereof, any supervisor of election, the marshal or his general or special deputies or either of them, or who threatens or attempts or offers to do, or who does or attempts or offers to assist any supervisor of election, or the marshal or his general or special deputies or either of them, in the performance of his or their duties, when required by him or them or either of them to give such aid and assistance, shall be liable to a fine without prejudice as is punished by imprisonment of not more than two years, or by a fine of not more than $3,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the cost of the prosecution.

The Law to Be Enforced.

In view of these provisions it is not thought that any person or combination of persons will seek in any way to interfere with the marshals in the discharge of their duties. Any such interference will be rigorously prosecuted. The instructions to their deputies are at such polling places as peace officers, and not partisans, and their instructions allow no discrimination for or against any party. An honest ballot and a fair count is what the law was designed to provide, and its constitutionality has been so strongly upheld, and the paramount power of the federal government so clearly asserted by the supreme court, that it would be idle to discuss that question.

It is noted that United States is not as much the object of the people's love and patriotism as any state is utterly mischievous, although implied in the circulars referred to.

A peace officer of the United States who seeks to prevent illegal voting no more invades the rights of American citizens than does the peace officer of a state. The impression that the federal government is a foreign power should be obliterated.

The statement that Sec. 2,021 is the only section authorizing the appointment of deputy marshals, and therefore that such appointments can be made only in cities of 20,000 inhabitants or upward, is not the view of the law entertained by the attorney general or myself, nor has such a view been held or expressed by any attorney general since the enactment of the law. So far as I can discover, the instructions given by Attorney General Taft in his circular letter of Sept. 4, 1876, have been continuously acquiesced in. In this circular he said:

Taft Quoted.

You will observe that the "special deputies" mentioned in Sec. 2,021 of the revised statutes have peculiar duties assigned to them duties which other ones do not belong to deputy marshals. Such "special" deputies can be appointed only in cities of 20,000 inhabitants or upward.

But the duties assigned to marshals and their deputies by Sec. 2,021 or other like statutes belong all duly appointed deputies, whether they be general or be "special" within the meaning of that and the preceding section. Deputies to discharge this latter class of duties may be appointed to any number whatever, according to the discretion of the marshal in all states in which sheriffs have a similar power.

The question whether the deputy marshals have the right to be within the guarded rail of the polling places is answered in the attorney general's circular of Oct. 31, 1876. In this difficulty, as he observes, Sec. 5,522, revised statutes, prescribes a penalty of imprisonment and fine against any person who, with or without the authority of any state or municipality, interferes with or prevents the marshal or his general or special deputies from the performance of any duty, or hinders or prevents their "full and free access and egress to and from any such places of registration or polls of election, * * * or to or from any room where any such registration or election or canvass of votes * * * may be had."

The Federal Law Supreme.

The statutes are so clear and explicit that I really cannot see any room for discussion. I do not believe that any attempt will be made to violate this law or carry out the unconstitutional acts which have been announced in the dispatches referred to. If such action is attempted of course trouble will come, as the same law prescribes penalties against any deputy who fails to do his duty.

Such a result all good citizens, irrespective of party, would deplore, and the consequences would fall upon those whose rash course led to such unwarranted resistance to the power of the federal government—a power which the supreme court of the United States has declared paramount, when a member of congress or presidential elector is to be voted for, to any state law or authority upon this subject.

I will add that this is not a partisan question, and they are not good citizens, in my opinion, who seek to make it one. No party can justly hope or deserve to win success by defiance or violations of the law of the land. However that may be, our duty is plain. The laws must be enforced. The marshals are responsible ministers of the law, against any interference with the rights of citizens, and at the same time they will guard and protect such rights at whatever cost.

Who May Be Summoned.

Attorney General Taft's opinion referred to by Acting Attorney General Aldrich and adopted by him was issued Sept. 4, 1876. It contains, in addition to the passages quoted by Aldrich, the following in regard to calling on troops and sheriff's posse:

In this connection I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and "special," have a right to summon to your assistance in preventing and quelling disorder every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations, militia, soldiers, or marines, and all such are liable to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies (whether of the state or of the United States) under the limitations and restrictions of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus.

Attorney General Taft says he finds an authority for this construction of the law in an opinion rendered by one of his predecessors—Attorney General Cushing—on May 27, 1854, and published in six attorneys general's opinions, (p. 466.) Mr. Taft says he prefers to quote from Mr. Cushing, as he has published to your own posse, and any state posse already embodied by a sheriff will, with such sheriff, be obliged upon the summons and service part of a United States posse, and obey you or your deputy acting virtute officii.

The rules will be adopted by Acting Attorney General Aldrich.

AT NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—The Republican national and state committee headquarters will close on Saturday. All the clerks in both who live at a distance will leave for home on Saturday night. Chairman Carter and the others who live at a distance will probably leave at the same time. So will other members of the Republican national committee who live at a distance. Those of the national and state committees who have homes near by will not leave this city until Monday morning.

The Republican managers are now sending out their final instructions over their private wires. They are addressed to the chairman of the state committee in each state.

For the most part the instructions were pretty much alike, but in some of the states in which the national committee takes a larger interest than in others the instructions were more complete and covered more of the details. The nature of these instructions the managers refused to reveal to the press.

A Republican national committeeman asserts that Harrison and Reid would have 90,000 majority in this state. Chairman Carter says that his figures justify above a majority for the Republican national ticket, and that he is not a bit alarmed about the result.

Minister Egan says: "There is no doubt in my mind that President Harrison will be re-elected. I have been carefully studying the situation and especially in New York. I believe he will carry this state. There is a tremendous undercurrent toward Harrison, both on the part of business men and Irish voters, and I am fully convinced that he will get a tremendous support from the latter. MacVeagh's attack on me will do the Democrats no good. The business men of the country do not want to see any change in the present prosperous condition of things. As Henry Grattan expressed it, 'This is not a time for experiments. Let us adhere to experience.' These words were uttered during a political crisis and they apply to the present situation."

At Democratic Headquarters.

The Democratic campaign managers were on duty at national headquarters until o'clock this morning and most of them got back to their desks by 9 o'clock. The long hours of work are necessary in order to keep up with the Republicans, who are working day and night in the close states trying to make them sure for Harrison.

A final conference of the Democratic state leaders was held at the Hoffman house last evening. Murphy, of the state committee; Chairman Sheehan, of the campaign committee, and Clerk De Frees compared notes. They agreed that the fight in this state was a hard one, and that all that remained to be done was to get out the votes on election day. None of them would say that they had the slightest doubt of the opinion that Mr. Cleveland's majority in the state will not be less than 20,000.

Lieutenant Governor Sheehan has gone to his home in Buffalo to remain until election day. Chairman Murphy has returned to his home in Troy. Clerk De Frees will remain on duty at state headquarters until election day, when he goes home to vote. Lieutenant Governor Sheehan will vote early Tuesday morning and will then take the first train for this city. He will be at state headquarters Tuesday night.

Ex-Governor Campbell returned to New York from a tour of some of the western states. He brought back encouraging news for the Democratic campaign managers. Speaking about the outlook in the west he said: "Indiana will certainly cast her electoral vote for Cleveland, and I am willing to stake some money on the basis there. The disaffection among the Republicans and the lack of enthusiasm or even activity in their campaign means their defeat next Tuesday. So far as Illinois and Wisconsin are concerned, the Democrats have an even chance there. I am not posted on the situation in the other states, but wherever I have been I found the Democrats unusually active and confident. I believe Cleveland will carry New York as well as Indiana, and that means his election is assured."

Held in New York City.

Carnegie Music hall was crowded to the doors last night, the occasion being a mass meeting to ratify the Minneapolis nominations under the auspices of the Business Men's Republican club. The hall was decorated with American flags, and banners with the different nominations stood around the hall, which showed that almost every line of trade was represented.

Chairman Claflin introduced Mr. Whitelaw Reid. Mr. Reid said that he just returned from an extended tour through the western part of the state, and he made bold to say that above the Harlem river he is all right for the Republican party, and that if the Republicans of this city would only do as good as they had in 1888 he would guarantee that the state would be Republican by double the majority tendered the party in that year.

General Stewart L. Woodford was called for and said that he believed from what he had seen in West Virginia that that state would give her electoral vote for the Republican candidates.

The German Republicans of this city held a mass meeting at Cooper Union last night. The hall was crowded with enthusiastic German-American citizens, and the meeting was in every way a pronounced success. Judge Charles Nacher opened the meeting with a short address. Just as he concluded Whitelaw Reid stepped upon the platform and the audience went wild with enthusiasm. It was some time before the applause subsided. Mr. Reid was immediately introduced and spoke briefly. He said:

"There is no important crisis in the history of the United States in which Germans have not borne a part—no crisis in war, none in peace and furthermore none in the history of the Republican party where they have not gone to the front.

"The German citizens have meant to be on the side of an honest, clean and pure government. They are on the side of honest money. Good government, stability and honest money can only be secured by your votes for Harrison. I have nothing to say about Cleveland, but name anything he has done in the past four years."

Mr. Reid then briefly spoke on the three great issues of the campaign—tariff, reciprocity and honest money—and was loudly applauded when he finished.

Ex-Minister Charles Emory Smith made an address to the Republican Ivy Goode club at its headquarters. He reviewed the political issues and aroused much enthusiasm in the large audience present.

Tammany's Big Demonstration.

The Democratic organization known as the Tammany Society of New York gave a grand manifestation of its political activity last night when it stood sponsor for the biggest demonstration of the campaign. The rally occurred in and around Tammany hall, and was successful beyond the most sanguine expectations. It was the second and last demonstration of the Tammanyites. The first was successful enough for any ordinary political organization—the big hall crowded to the doors and an overflow meeting on Fourteenth street that required eight stands of speakers to attend the crowd—but Tammany's chief was not satisfied. He wanted something better, and last night's unique demonstration was the result.

Tammany's wonderful organizing ability was called into play. Enough volunteer speakers were called for to talk to an army, and more than enough responded.

Then arrangements were made to get big attractions—Senator Carlisle, Senator Gorman and W. H. J. Ham, the Georgia story teller—to talk inside the hall, and a dozen stands were erected on Third avenue up Fourteenth street and across Union square to Fifth avenue, for which there were plenty of good and well known speakers. Then to insure attendance it was necessary the committee of thirty ordered every other Democratic meeting in New York scheduled for the night to be postponed. A notice was sent to every member of the organization to be on hand, and bring as many with him as possible. The result was a monumental celebration in support of Cleveland and Stevenson, such as has not been seen in New York for many years, and such as fully justified Tammany's predictions to the chief political organization of the Nineteenth century.

The log hall inside was appropriately decorated. Across the stage was a huge oil painting draped in national flags. Flanked by two large medallions, in which were the portraits of Cleveland and Stevenson, was the figure of an Indian in war paint and feathers. Tammany's chieftain stood in the foreground of a fair landscape. At his feet reposed a tiger, the head and shoulders of which peered from the medallion having Stevenson's counterfeit presentment. On either side of the two medallions were painted rocks. Against these the waves dashed wildly, as if trying to reach the two eagles perched upon the rocks above, holding in their claws the national shield and banner. Joseph A. O'Donohue presided. A letter from Senator Gorman was read, regretting his inability to attend the meeting. Senator Eustis, of Louisiana, was the first speaker. He was followed by Senator Carlisle, who was in turn followed by Hon. W. H. J. Ham, the Georgia humorous "story telling orator." He kept the hall in an uproar.

Senator Hill's Tour.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 4.—Decidedly the largest audience of the campaign was addressed by Senator David B. Hill at the Alhambra rink last evening. Nearly 5,000 people crowded into the big hall, and in the aisles, at the sides, in front of the stage and about the doors. Wherever, in fact, there was standing room they were packed together literally like sardines in a box. The very rafters even were alive with human beings from floor to roof, and not an inch of available space was left unoccupied anywhere. The senator's passage through the streets on the way to the hall was like a triumphal march, and as he stepped upon the stage he received a magnificent greeting. Before coming here Senator Hill addressed the biggest meeting ever held in Ontario county at Canandaigua.

Depew at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Nov. 4.—Chauncey M. Depew addressed a monster mass meeting in Music hall last evening. The crowd was so great that one overflow meeting was held in Concert hall. Mr. Depew ridiculed Wayne MacVeagh, eulogized the Republican party, and said that Mr. Cleveland practically gave up the fight in his speech to the business men of New York city. He abandoned the issues of the campaign and confined himself to a howl against the corruption of politics, and asserted that the Republican party was preparing to buy the election. That was an admission that the Democratic party was beaten, and he was accounting for it by charging the Republican party with buying the victory.

FORT SUMTER FIRED ON.

It Was Only in Fun This Time, Though Very Realistic.

CHARLESTON'S GREAT CELEBRATION

The Chief Feature of the Big Earthquake Festival Witnessed by 60,000 Persons. No Flags of Any Kind Were Displayed and No Sentiment Was Involved.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 4.—More than 60,000 people witnessed the grand naval display of the earthquake festival last night. Of this number about 50,000 lined the high sea wall and the remainder witnessed the bombardment from steamers and sailing vessels and craft in the harbor. It was a perfect Charleston night and the arrangements for the display worked without a hitch.

Fort Sumter built on lighters was anchored in the inner bay, as were miniature representations of the batteries on Morris island. The First regiment of artillery of the state national guards (three batteries) manned the sea wall representing the batteries of Sullivan island.

Tugboats represented the attacking fleet. The bombs used in the affair were manufactured especially for the occasion and produced realistic effects. There was no sentimental significance in the display the only interest attaching to it being the fact that the event which occurred April 8, 1863, was the first engagement during the war, in which the new ironclad warships came in collision with a fortress of masonry.

The peculiar topographical surroundings of this harbor rendered such a display exceedingly interesting. At 8:45 o'clock the first shot was fired by a battery from the supposititious Fort Moultrie at the fleet of tugboats which sailed down the bay.

This was replied to by the boat representing the Weehawken, and then for two hours the pyrotechnic firing was kept up with a fidelity to details which was really wonderful.

The officers and crews of the United States war vessels and the revenue cutter witnessed the display from the decks of the latter and were delighted. There was absolutely no sentiment involved. No flags were displayed.

The Genuine Fight.

In the genuine fight which was reproduced in mimic last night the fleet engaged was composed of the Weehawken, two guns, Captain John Rodgers; Passaic, two guns, Captain Percival Drayton; Montauk, two guns, Captain John L. Worden; Patapsco, three guns, Commander Daniel Ammen; flagship New Ironsides, sixteen guns, Captain Stephen B. Cassell, two guns, Commander Rodgers; Nantucket, two guns, Commander D. McN. Fairax; Nahant, two guns, Commander Downes; Keokuk, two guns, Commander A. C. Rhind.

The Canandaigua, the Housatonic, the Unadilla, the Wachusett and the Huron were off the bar, but were not engaged. The fight began about 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The first shots fired at the fort came from the ironclad monitor, Weehawken. One passed over the heads of the men standing ready to fire the barbette guns of the right flank on the fort, and cut a clean hole through the National Confederate flag flying on the George Wall, piercing it near the crossing of the two cannons in the center of its field.

Not much damage was done to either fleet or the fort. The Keokuk seems to have had some defect in her build. Commander Rhind, however, remained determined to test her fighting capacity to the utmost.

Riddled with Bullets.

When the turn in the channel was reached he came "bow on" to the fort, receiving the concentrated force of all the guns that could be brought to bear on Fort Sumter from the fort on Sullivan's island. He was silenced after firing three shots. The position taken seemed to him to be about 500 yards from Sumter.

To those in the fort it appeared to be hardly less than 900 yards. At the end of twenty-five or thirty minutes he was glad to escape without being captured or going down. His vessel was struck ninety times in the hull or turrets, and nineteen shots pierced his smoke stack.

The turrets were penetrated by rifle bolts and 16-inch round shots. Riddled as she was, it is a matter of wonder how she escaped with her engines in condition to take her out of the fight. That night she sank off the southern part of Morris island.

CORBETT'S ULTIMATUM

The Champion Will Fight No More Till Next September.

HE WANTS TO FACE MITCHELL.

The Englishman Insulted Him Once, and He Wants to Get a Whack at Him in the Worst Way—Corbett Won't Meet Jackson, Though, If Mitchell Declines.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Last night, in the presence of a number of newspaper men and well known sportsmen, Champion Jim Corbett settled the question whether anything would induce him to abandon his theatrical engagements and fight within a specified time. Corbett absolutely declared that he would not enter the ring again for a year.

He said this while in his dressing room at the Lew Avenue Academy, Williamsburg, where he made an appearance in his new play. The house was fairly well filled. Corbett is looking remarkably well, and is in as stout as reported. William H. Brady, his manager, says that Jim has done a tremendous business since he left the metropolis. Regarding the many reports about what he contemplated doing in the fighting line in the future, Corbett waved his hand imperiously and said in a bold voice:

"Now, fellows, I won't fight Charley Mitchell until next September. As I have repeatedly said, I want to fight this fellow above all others on account of an old score. I won't fight anybody, however, before next fall, and all the roasting and jollying from now until Christmas won't alter my determination. I don't see why I should fight anyway. I am making lots of money, consider $2,000 a week. By saying that I will fight Mitchell next September, I do so with a loss of $25,000, because my contracts run until November.

"I Have a Scheme on Hand.

"Anyway, I have a scheme on hand whereby I can make over $50,000 at the World's fair in Chicago. I have arranged with certain parties, and a building will soon be erected where boxing exhibitions, at which I will be the feature, can be held. If I can't make out these stories that I had promised certain parties that I would fight before this club and that club, I never made such promises to any one. I will contend before the club that offers the largest purse, and play no favorites."

At this point Judge Newton, who was present on behalf of the Coney Island club, broke in by asking, "Are you certain that you won't fight before next September?"

"Well," continued Judge Newton, "the Coney Island club will set the ball rolling by offering a $25,000 purse for you and Mitchell. How does that strike you?"

"First rate," quickly retorted both Manager Brady and Corbett. "I am willing to fight," argued Corbett, "and will meet the champion of England or Australia, if there exists such titles. I would like to fight before the Coney Island club better than I would any other organization."

"Why don't you fight Jackson again?" asked some one.

"Why don't I?" replied the Californian. "Because I don't think he is entitled to meet me before Mitchell. Let him battle with Goddard and see if he can lick him. They fought a draw, and it is only proper for them to find out who is the better man of the two."

"But I Might Get Licked."

When Corbett was asked why he didn't want to enter the ring again before next year, he replied very modestly:

"Why should I when I am doing well in my present occupation? I can show you some books and notes as vouchers for this statement.

"But look, Jim," said a listener, "think of the honor and glory you can attain by fighting. If you win you can make a fortune."

"But I might get licked," said Corbett with a faint smile. "And then where would I be. I don't say that I'm invincible. Some people think that Mitchell won't fight, and that his hands are sore. This is all rot. I'm certain that he will meet me. But I will place no restrictions.

"I might fight him unless he puts up a $5,000 side bet. Sullivan made me do this, and the Englishman is no better than I am. But what's more, when you come to think of it, I am perfectly right in not contesting again for a year. Did not Sullivan travel with his theatrical company two years after he fought?"

"All right," said Judge Newton at this moment. "The Coney Island club will be pleased to wait until next September if you have made up your mind not to contest before then. And you can depend upon it that our club will treat you right and make a big play for your services." The time for Corbett to appear in his act had arrived and the champion excused himself.

Impatience.

Sainte-Beuve, the great French critic, having occasion to speak of what he thought impatience on the part of an eminent theologian and ecclesiastic, brightens his discussion and enforces his lesson by telling a story of Alfred de Musset.

When the future poet was a small child his mother bought him a pair of bright red shoes. The maid put them on his feet and made ready to take him out to walk. Something delayed her for a minute, and little Alfred grew impatient.

"Hurry! hurry!" said he. "I want to start. My shoes will be too old!"—Youth's Companion.

WOMAN AND HOME.

THE INFLUENCE OF WOMAN'S INTUITIONAL FUNCTION.

The long repression to which woman has been subject through her inferior opportunities of culture and outgrowth has resulted in what might be called a great waste of thought and energy in her brain, and has led to the hereditary descent of that storage in the female line. The consequence of this is the immense superiority of what is known as her intuitional function. A man arrives at conclusions by a more or less tedious process of ratiocination; a woman is already there, as if by some electrical course that bore her more swiftly than the light. This habit of her mind her sharper critics do not call a habit of the mind, do not consider an intellectual affair at all, but class as merely an instinctive faculty, as it were the tenet of a lower order of humanity close upon the possibilities of the brute creation.

But in reality it is the result of the long storage of thought and emotion that has been slowly cut output, and that acting on cell and tissue has built up a cerebral character, whose tendency has descended from mother to daughter in a constantly increasing strength; that is to say, it is the result—as Mrs. Hopkins says in her "Spirit of the New Education"—of experience stored in the brain cells. This intuitional faculty, she says, is the product of thoroughly organized thought, of inherited structure so long habituated that its action has become automatic, unconscious and organic, and processes are fast and only results remain. This accumulated energy, the consequence of repression, has given woman a conservation force which upholds her in all moral crises, gives her the finer moral perception, the acuter sense of response to wrong, and it makes her sympathy sure, her faith unfailing, her endurance all but eternal, her spirit indomitable.

Out of this are born the ideals. Mothers transmit them to their sons; to their daughters often; but the male brain, busy with its outlook, has no time or place, no cell or tissue, for the slow growth and long building of the ideal; it is born of nurture which is finer and stronger than culture, and deeper as it reaches from the recesses of her beginnings. And thus the generic male brain receives but may not create the ideal, for the ideal is born of that conservation of force which is answerable also for the intuitional powers.

By and by some great philosopher, some woman who has come to her kingdom, some man who has not been educated into a contempt for his mother, will examine this subject minutely, and give us a marvelous study of the differentiation of the two brains, male and female, from the one original maternal cell. And we doubt not that when such a study shall be made it will cause people to see that a boy's man's brain may be a woman's be loftier, finer and in its action full as wise.—Harper's Bazar.

A mother should never forget that, although she has the question of the physical and moral health of her child, her nurse also must necessarily have great influence over it in both of these particulars, and that while she may be constantly with her children the maid lives with them entirely. Day and night she is their companion and caretaker and must therefore have more or less to do with the formation of their character. This is not a pleasant thought, but owing to the conditions of our modern civilization it is one that must be faced, and yet how few there are who give this matter proper attention and who choose a nurse with due regard to qualifications.

For very young children a happy, cheerful disposition is almost indispensable, for such a disposition is the most beneficial affect both on the character and health of the child. An eminent writer on the training of children says that "the active, energetic, good humored nurse, by regular affectionate attendance, by endeavoring to prevent all unnecessary suffering, and by quickly comprehending the language of signs in her little charge will make a cross child good humored, while a careless, negligent or stupid woman will injure the temper of an angel."

Health and cleanliness are also prime essentials in a nurse, and it is unquestionably true that an old person having charge of a young child is injurious to the latter. Any one who has any natural defect, too, should not be a nurse, or even a very ugly person or one who has an unpleasant expression. The voice is very easily imitated, and in this country particularly, where voices are apt, in spite of the great set culture, to be nasal and rasping, parents cannot be too careful in choosing a pleasant voiced nurse.

Above all, as you value your children's future rectitude, let truth be paramount in the nursery. No amount of after training can eradicate deceitful habits learned in extreme youth.—New York Tribune.

Women Artists in Munich.

Munich boasts a society of lady artists, a body of considerable importance, inasmuch as it has placed under its care the training of lady artists generally. Once, in days gone by, ladies were admitted to the academy, but this order of things was altered, and for a good many years ladies desirous of studying and perfecting them selves in art felt the want of some efficient art school. Then the "Kunstlerin Verein" took the matter in hand, and some eight or nine years ago an art school was started under its auspices, where the teaching comprises drawing after living models. Munich now possesses several hundred lady artists. The ladies' art school is largely extensively patronized; the instruction consists of drawing and modelling from plaster, drawing and modelling from living models, both nude and draped, "still life," perspective and art history.

The evening classes for drawing from nude models are also open to women who are not members of the school. The lady artists manage their own affairs; but men are, where it is considered necessary, employed as teachers, and as a rule only well known artists are chosen. The fee is moderate, as no one is supposed to make money by the school. The gentlemen and lady artists at Munich get on on the whole very well together, and so far social relations are concerned they have the same rights.—London Queen.

Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge.

Mary Mapes Dodge twenty-five years ago or more was a perplexed widow with two hearty boys depending upon her. She had been reading Motley's histories, and was carried into the land of dikes and windmills until she felt that she knew Holland nearly as well as America. The outlines of a story came into her mind, but she determined that they should be of no false tendencies. She seized upon every book bearing upon the customs of the Dutch and the appearance of their country which she could find, and devoured it. This new production of a flesh and blood tale—"Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates"—which made her famous, it being not only translated into Dutch, but also into Japanese.

This would have been a remarkable triumph for a bright, hardworking, conscientious young widow without previous training or natural talent. But as a girl she had received the most thorough education from private tutors, and was a musician, a linguist and thoroughly grounded in English literature. From girlhood she had been in the habit of meeting at her father's and her husband's houses authors, lawyers, artists—men and women of culture and information. She had already written a number of charming sketches, having, in fact, tried her wings enough to know that she could fly.

Before Mrs. Dodge was appointed editor of St. Nicholas she served an apprenticeship with Mrs. Stowe as an associate on the force of Heart and Home. Today the vivacious, retiring lady of middle life goes to her office in The Century building, and in the supervision of the intricate machinery of the juvenile periodical she labors as many hours and more intensely than some of her subordinates.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Many a life has been shortened and many a family circle broken into because of artificiously solicitude or fraternal interest on the part of the other members of the household. A sickroom is no place for chat or gossip or the presence of other than those absolutely necessary to attend upon the invalid. Of course it seems very hard to shut out the loved ones from the sufferer, who frequently likes their presence as a relief from monotony and pain. With a mistaken idea of occupying the mind of the sick person they come in, fill up the room, exhaust all the better elements of the atmosphere, tax the attention by gossip about irrelevant things and ask questions out of curiosity or sympathy. They want to do something to make the invalid comfortable, and filled with this laudable purpose they succeed in increasing the sufferings and perhaps indirectly causing the death of the one for whom they would sacrifice almost everything could they but be made to understand the true situation.

Almost all observing persons can recall instances where indiscriminate and injudicious visiting in the sickroom has been productive of the most serious consequences. A lady just recovering from a nervous attack was pronounced so much better that the entire family gathered in the room to congratulate her on her convalescence. Something occurred to cause considerable merriment; then some one told a story, and the whole company indulged in laughter, jokes and little flashes of wit. Two hours later the patient was suffering from a most violent attack of congestion of the brain, which required all of the skill and care of the medical attendants to subdue.—New York Ledger.

The English Heine.

Miss Mathilde Blind has been called "the English Heine." Daughter of Carl Blind, the well known socialist, and scholar, she was for many years the beloved pupil and adopted child of Mazzini; he taught her Greek and Latin, and instilled in her a strong love of liberty. As a young girl she lived in what was then the interesting political circle in Europe. Among those who visited at her father's house were Garibaldi, Thomas Carlyle, John Stuart Mill and Professor Huxley. Mathilde Blind was little more than a child when she published her first book of verse; since that time she has written constantly, but her greatest success was made by her translation of the "Journal of Marie Bashkirtseff," which is an intimate friend of the mother of the strange Russian artist.

Miss Blind's study is lined with portraits of the unhappy Marie, and she possesses many letters and other interesting relics which at one time or other belonged to her subject. Speaking French and Italian as well as German, she spends much of the year on the continent and has lately been to Egypt in search of material for a new book. Her convictions have not altered. She is still an ardent Liberal, and is never tired of stating openly her convictions. Among her intimate friends she counts Mrs. Mona Caird and Mrs. W. K. Clifford.

She has a keen, sensitive face, and her mass of wavy hair is drawn off her forehead and done up in a single knot on the nape of her head. She dresses with good taste, and one of the first to adopt a simple and esthetic form of costume long before picturesqueness came into fashion.—Exchange.

Homemade Things.

"There is a charm about homemade things that does not belong to purchased stuff, no matter how beautiful or expensive it may be," said A. C. Cruikshank at the Southern yesterday. "You can buy no bread like that your wife bakes, granting that she is a home queen and not a society butterfly. You can find no pies like those you used to eat at mother's fireside, nor cake like that you sleep better under quilts that have been put together at home out of the scraps of clothing worn by those dear to you. There is a charm about a homemade rug that makes you want to lie down and roll on it like you used to on the rag carpet of your grandmother.

"Did you ever notice the affection of a little girl for a homemade doll? Well, sir, you may give her the handsomest wax dolls that money will buy, but when you go to see her you will find some of the least left them to shift for themselves and is sleeping with the old scarecrow of a homemade rag doll cuddled up to her bosom. You will also find that the young lady who has grown up at home, who owns the chief portion of her education to her mother instead of to boarding school, is more sweet and lovable than those who have been sent to Paris to be polished. She has more soul, and when she settles down into a man's heart she does so to stay."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

How I Kill Cockroaches.

Cockroaches are very general feeders. All sorts of household refuse, almost all kinds of food and many other substances, such as blacking, paint, India ink, the bindings of books and other articles containing paste, are eaten by them. In warm houses they breed uninterruptedly throughout the year, and it is impossible to estimate the number annual generations.

Very few remedies are at all satisfactory. The best is perhaps a fresh pyrethrum powder. The powder ground in this country from California grown plants and sold under the name Insh is the freshest and purest. It should be puffed in plenti under the baseboards and into all dark corners of an infested room. In fact it will be well to puff it into the air until the atmosphere of the room is thoroughly saturated with it. The room should then be tightly closed, and in the morning the roaches should be swept up from the floor and burned. Many persons are prejudiced against the use of pyrethrum powders for the reason that they do not kill the insects at once. This is comparatively true, but it is none the less sure. Two or at most three thorough applications at intervals of three days should almost entirely rid any building of these insects.—Professor Riley.

Marie Bashkirtseff's Tomb.

Poor Marie Bashkirtseff's last resting place in the cemetery at Passy is attracting few pilgrims from among the multitudinous visitors to Paris. The tomb, however, is a massive structure in white stone, towering far above the tombs by which it is surmounted—presents many remarkable features. Its inscription consists of the date of twenty-four of the young artiste's pictorial and sculptural works, and a verse of original poetry laments her untimely death and speaks of her youth, beauty and genius. If you stroll along the footpath leading past the right hand side of the tomb your attention will be arrested by a glass door opening into the interior of the monument, whose first aspect in no way calls to mind any of the usual mournful associations connected with death.

A pleasant, spacious, well lighted, artistically furnished apartment meets the gaze. Carpets, stairs, footstools, cushions, art pottery and draperies—evidently once used by Marie Bashkirtseff herself—are tastefully arranged there. Her own bust, surrounded by palms and memorial wreaths, is placed at the farther end of the chamber, and her portrait in stained glass fills two of the six window panes.—Woman.

Woman's Advancement.

During the past decade woman's progress has been wonderful. While man has retrograded woman has advanced. Though called the "weaker vessel," she is constantly exhibiting a strength of character and an ability to endure suffering, both physical and mental, which man is a stranger to. One of the most encouraging evidences of advancement is found in the fact that she is getting out of the ways of conventionality which has hedged her divinity, and enlightened individual judgment is taking its place. The coming woman will be more the less loving, loving creature, the happy mother, the light of earth, because she possesses the privileges which are her birthright.

She will still be "enthroned in the empire of the affections," and the "supremacy of her sex in the production of a better breed of human beings" will be recognized. She will be the owner of her person and property, and her individuality will make its impress for good on the age. Her child ambition will be to secure a noble fatherhood for her children that they may be well born, and so to live that all who know her will call her blessed.—Boston Times.

A Proud Indian Princess.

It is told of the beautiful Princess Ahmadee of India that when she was first brought to England she refused to allow herself to be presented to Queen Victoria, saying, as the horror of her attendants, that the caste of her race forbade her to look upon her inferiors. It was only by persistent entreaties that the proud little beauty could be induced to obey the queen's summons to Windsor, and even when she did deign to confront her majesty nothing could induce her to offer the slightest token of respect for the sovereign of the people who had deposed the hereditary rulers of India.

At first glance one might well be surprised at the little semblance of an Indian princess in the attire, if not the features, of this charming scion of western royalty. Dalhi, however, long since yielded to the forms of western civilization, and is today a thoroughly Europeanized city as a result of British rule.—Chicago Tribune.

Advice from a Trained Nurse.

"It is well known that the skin is a great absorbent, and nutrition even can be conveyed through its agency," says a trained nurse. "A physician once ordered a beef tea bath for a baby I was nursing, who was apparently dying of acute wasting and bowel trouble, and with admirable effect. And I myself have found that rubbing delicate persons with warm olive oil is an excellent tonic. If I had charge of a puny, sickly baby I should feel inclined to give it oil baths instead of water baths, and try the effect. The oil is quite as cleansing, and it stands to reason that such tiny beings, particularly if they are badly nourished, should not have the natural oil of the body continually washed away."

Preservation of Rings.

"Don't wear your rings under gloves unless you remember to have them thoroughly examined twice a year," is the advice given by a jeweler. "The constant friction wears out the tiny gold points that hold the stones in place, and unless strict attention is paid to them they become loose in a very short time.

Small purses of suede leather are made on purpose for rings or any soft pouch of skin of chamois may be used to place the rings in when desiring to carry them around with one. They should never be put into the ordinary pocketbook, as the rubbing against coins is also bad for them. —Philadelphia Press.

A busy woman is Mrs. Emma Drew, of South Norridgewock, Me. She runs a small farm, keeps a horse and cow, raises butter for market, cares for her five children, does her own housework and also teaches a school of seventeen children five days in the week.

In London there are ninety-four model kitchens, managed by fifty trained teachers and attended in the course of the year by 10,000 scholars. Each class includes twenty or thirty girls, who work together six or eight at a time.

Squares and circles of white silk edged with a frill of original lace make pretty mats for setting polished tables. The silk centers should be lined, and an interlining of white crinoline gives a desirable stiffening.

Old newspapers make the best of housecleaning materials. They are excellent for cleaning windows, "just the thing" for scouring woodwork and unequaled for cleaning brass and silverware.

All kinds of cooked fish can be served with salads. Lettuce is the best green salad to serve, but all cooked and cold vegetables go well with fish.

It is said that Mrs. Adair, of Philadelphia, whose first husband left her an immense fortune, spends $150,000 a year in entertaining.

New Orleans has two woman literary clubs—the Geographers and the Quixote—which meet weekly at the houses of members.

THE BOROUGH COUNCIL.

THE REGULAR NOVEMBER MEETING HELD LAST EVENING.

The Street Railway Question Discussed by Council and Citizens—Some Object to Somerset Street, Others Favor It.—A New Style of Track Submitted.

The North Plainfield Borough Council held its regular November meeting in the Council chamber on Somerset street last evening.

Mayor Saunders and Councilmen Connelly, Hegeman, Hummer, Neal, Needham and Sebring responded to the roll call.

The lobby was filled with citizens interested in the question of having a street railway in the borough. Borough Counsel Reed was also on hand.

The meeting was called to order at 8:10 o'clock and the minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

A communication was read from the Misses E. M. and L. Verdon protesting against the railway. The protest was ordered received and placed on file.

Mr. J. H. Higgins and others petitioned for three electric lights on Stone avenue. The matter was referred to Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps with power.

A petition from Patrick Dair and others for a light on Chatham street was referred to the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps.

A communication was read from Dr. Carman, who, representing the Board of Health, objected to the sewer on Rockview avenue, near Sycamore avenue, which connects with Stony brook. It was referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

Mr. P. M. French in a communication requested that his name be withdrawn from the list of consents, and that action on the street railway question be delayed for one week. The letter was ordered received and placed on file.

A communication calling attention to the dangerous condition of the sidewalk on several portions of Mercer avenue was read and referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

Mr. Neal offered a resolution authorizing the Committee on Streets and Public Health to negotiate a loan of $100 for the purpose of erecting a culvert on Somerset street, which was, upon motion, adopted.

The Fire, Water and Lamps Committee reported favorably on a communication asking that two electric lights be placed on Mountain avenue, between Grand street and Watchung avenue. The application and report were received and placed on file.

Mr. Sebring offered a resolution authorizing the Fire, Water and Lamps Committee to purchase a new hose cart hamess. Adopted.

Mr. Neal offered a resolution authorizing the Committee on Streets and Public Health to have board walks of legal width put on properties where the owners had failed to comply with the ordinance, as notified on September 12, recordered.

Mr. Hegeman suggested that two lights be placed on Girard avenue between Willow avenue and Greenbrook. The street he said was dark and dangerous. No action taken at this point.

Mr. Hegeman moved that when Council adjourn it be to meet next Friday evening.

The Street Railway

Mr. Neal said that Council could not take final action on the railway ordinance because the company had failed to file the list of sworn consents and maps as required. He suggested, however, that the clerk read the ordinance in its incomplete form, together with the amendments, and that it be discussed by the citizens, the Council and citizens present, without taking formal action.

Mr. Joseph Blatz said the company should keep the street in repair from curb to curb.

Mr. John Goodwin asked that the company be prevented from putting salt on their tracks in Winter. This caused laughter. So Mr. Hegeman arose and explained that salt was forbidden in New York and other large cities because found detrimental to public health and injurious to the feet of horses. The laughter subsided.

Mr. Sutterlin asked what kind of fans were to be used for clearing the tracks, and electrical expert Sorrell said that each car carried two sets of brushes for that purpose. Mr. Sutterlin also asked that Somerset street was the best road in the borough, and that the macadamizing would be ruined if the road was torn up. He suggested that other streets be used.

Mr. Goodwin objected to Somerset street being used for the railway. He said it was the only outlet from the valley, the only street that could be used by the farmers, tradesmen and for general wagon traffic and business.

Mr. William E. Brock said he favored the railway and did not think the people should be deprived of the railway because of a few carters.

Mr. Goodwin suggested that the railway be placed on Duer or the proposed new street. He favored the latter and the company should share the expense of putting the new street through.

Mr. Sutterlin said he thought Somerset street was too narrow.

Mr. George Fairchild suggested that some other street be macadamized for fasteners.

Mr. Brock said he thought that the arguments were only made to delay the road.

Mr. Sorrell, the expert representing the railway company, asked the width of Somerset street and was told that the distance from curb to curb was 30 feet. He said the tracks were 5 feet 2½ inches apart, and that the car was between 7 and 8 feet wide which would allow 11 feet on each side of the track. The average ordinary wagon is but six feet wide.

Mr. F. M. Whitely said if heavy wagons used the side of the road it would cost the borough three or four times as much to keep the street in repair, and that the Railway Company should therefore keep the road in repair from curb to curb.

Mayor Saunders said the company would be taxed on their plant and that the borough taxes would be thereby reduced.

A communication from Mr. L. E. Barkalew was read. He was in favor of a street railway but opposed to Somerset street being used.

Mr. Newton B. Smalley favored the road but thought the heavy foundation of the Somerset street roadbed would need to be greatly torn up and thought that action should be deferred until the proposed new street was made. He said there were already two sets of poles on Somerset street.

Mr. P. M. French suggested using other streets, as wagons standing at the curbs along Somerset street would compel heavily loaded wagons to continually recross the tracks.

A section of the new improved track was then shown to the citizens present, and nearly all of their objections overcome. It will be constructed in such a manner that it will be perfectly level with the roadbed, and not even the narrowest of jaunty wheel cars get caught in the track at whatever angle they may strike it.

Mr. Brock read a long communication favoring the railway as necessary for the welfare and progress of the borough.

Mr. Neal explained how streets would be paved even with the surface of the rails, and he had figured in accordance with the existing grade of the street, but according to the map, as the present grade will be changed in places.

In Section 11 a clause has been added to the effect that if the company shall fail to operate the road for 90 days, all told, in any one year, they shall forfeit their franchise. In Plainfield the company could keep idle 364 days in the year if only ran a car once in every sixty days. Section 13 says that all police, marshals shall be carried free, also firemen on their way to and from fires, and children, school teachers and scholars will have a special reduced fare.

Section 15 allows the road to run with, but paying a license for two years, for the third year they must pay $90, fourth year $100, fifth year $150, sixth year $200, seventh year and thereafter $250.

This contract, Mr. Hegeman explained, only applied to the ¾ mile of railway granted by the ordinance and not to any extension.

Section 16 says there shall be two cars making continuous trips from Johnston's Drive and the depot, thus making the road entirely independent of the Plainfield road, but that one car shall carry a passenger over the entire route operated by the company.

A workingman present said the cars should start at five o'clock instead of six at the depot in time for the early railroad trains. On the Plainfield side they start at six o'clock but workingmen are nearer the Grant avenue station or main depot than those in North Plainfield have no such convenience. Mr. Neal said the Committee would take that matter into consideration.

Mr. Chas A. Reed, the legal adviser of the Council, stated that as a citizen and not as Borough Counsel he would say he would greatly benefit the borough, but that the company were not over anxious to build the road to the borough and would not do so if the Council exacted too much. He said, however, that he thought Somerset street was not the best place for it, and advised putting it on the proposed new street, North Broad way, which was going through soon. That street would be sixty feet wide, and the road-bed would be made and the tracks laid at the same time.

He did not think that legally the road could be laid on Somerset street even with the consent of half the property holders, because the making of the street necessary, by borough ordinance, the property owners, the majority of whom did not reside on the street.

His remarks were favorably received and seemed to be the general sentiment of the citizens present. He would be glad but object to its being placed on Somerset street.

The matter will be further discussed at a special meeting to be held next Friday evening.

Mr. Hegeman offered a resolution that the Committee on Fire, Water and Lamps inspect the condition and location of all the electric lights in the borough and report at the next regular meeting of the Council on the changes and additions necessary. So ordered.

The Auditing Committee submitted a list of bills, found correct, and they were upon motion ordered paid.

Council adjourned at 10.40 o'clock.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

In the Case of Peter Brunson vs Van Deventer, Executors.

North Plainfield jurors remember the application of the Van Deventer executors made to Judge Magie in the case of Peter Brunson. The executors had neglected to plead that Mr. Brunson's claim was outlawed, and just as the case was about to be tried, their counsel asked leave to amend by putting in that defense. Judge Magie heard the arguments of Mr. Lindabury and Mr. Marsh and decided in favor of the latter, and refused to let the plea go in. The executors said they would take the case to the Supreme Court, and they did take it there, but it did them no good, for yesterday the Supreme Court decided against them. The importance of this question will be seen from the fact that the claim sued on goes back to 1867, and if the executors were granted their motion, it would cut off every item down to 1867.

The lawyers who argued the motion were R. V. Lindabury and Joseph W. Cross as counsel for the executors, and Craig A. Marsh as counsel for Peter Brunson.

THE MOCK TRIAL.

HELD AT VINCENT CHAPEL LAST EVENING.

By the Epworth League. A Successful Again. A Horse Thief Tried, Found Guilty and Sentenced.

At 8:20 o'clock the trial commenced of "Francisco Hyde," charged with horse stealing. City Judge Coddington was the presiding Judge.

The prosecuting attorney, Mr. O. A. Campbell, moved that indictment No. 2 come up for trial. The prisoner was brought in by Sheriff Cornwall, and the charge was read by the prosecuting attorney to the effect "that said 'Francisco Hyde' had stolen a horse from 'Mary Ann Clark,' on the night of October 12, while the plaintiff was absent from home. Said horse was a dark bay, with four white stockings and a white face."

"Mary Ann Clark," (Miss Cornwall) was the first witness called by the lawyer for the prosecution. She stated that on the night of October 12, she, in company with her brother, had gone to New York to witness the Columbian celebration. When they returned home to Podunk Villa, the next morning she found that her horse had been stolen. The only evidence she had to criminate the prisoner was a ring which she found on the stable after the horse had been stolen.

"John Clark" (Arthur Krone) a brother of the plaintiff, testified that he had examined the soft ground around the barn, and had seen footprints, which were made by a boot having a star on the heel, the points of the star being missing. He had been with the prisoner when the boots were bought and he distinctly remembered the boots having a star on the heel, such as the footprints showed.

"Serrell, the reporter"said that he saw the prisoner on the night of October 12 at Cherry street. Mr. Serrell said the prisoner was dressed in a "corn meadow," with four white stockings, bay in color, with a white face.

"Frank Black," (Mr. Louis Dunavan) stated that he bought a horse from the prisoner at Somerville, on Oct. 31, paying $25 for the animal, and that he had driven it to Plainfield yesterday, when he was accosted by "John Clark," who told him the horse had been stolen from his sister.

For the defence, "Francisco Hyde," the prisoner, testified that on the night of Oct. 12 he had hitched up his horse at "Briarwood Retreat," driven to Plainfield, had stopped at "U. G. Brand's" and purchased some goods and then drove to "Elford Mestil's" on Cherry street, where he purchased some stationary. He returned home about ten o'clock and retired for the night.

"Prof. Dorsey" stated that prisoner had been his guardian for a number of years and later on paying teller in the Westumpka Bank of which he was cashier, and that the prisoner had always been upright and honest.

"Lockpicker," the last witness for the defense, said that prisoner had stolen "Mary Ann Clark's" horse and also some chickens.

The lawyers, C. H. Angleman for the defence, and O. A. Campbell, for the plaintiff, were allowed "an hour and a half" to sum up, by the Judge. The Judge then charged the jury, who were as follows: Misses Minnie Sharp, Cora Shepard, Della Yeoh, Gertrude Trenham, Amy Ulrich, Sarah W. Clark, and Messrs. Tom Starr, Howard Wockiser, Albert Siefker, Walter Walker and Walter Winans, foreman.

After remaining out four minutes the jury returned a verdict of guilty.

The Judge then sentenced the prisoner to "Have his bangs cut with the big blade of a pen knife, and to be locked up at Dogwatch Hollow until after election."

The court then adjourned and the spectators left for their homes well satisfied that justice had been done.

Scraps about the Weather.

The heaviest wind of the season had a monopoly in the air line in this vicinity last evening, and blew the animate and inanimate about promiscuously.

This morning the first ice of the season was observed, by the early risers, on street puddles.

A few flakes of snow fell to-day. Our gymnastic climate will probably settle down for its Winter's work pretty soon.

Elizabeth's First Shipment of Tin.

The first shipment of American tin plate from the new plant of the Welsh firm of Morewood & Co. in Elizabeth was made last night.

The firm shipped 20,000 pounds to a house in Indianapolis.

DUNELLEN POLITICS.

Made Them Pay for the Music for a Republican Meeting, and Have the Laugh Turned on Them.

The Democratic leaders of New Market and the Republican leaders in the adjoining village of Dunellen, arranged to hold mass meetings, both on the same night, last Thursday.

The Democratic leaders got ahead of the Republicans and engaged the only band to be had, and directed that it should march by where the Republican meeting was to be held just before the meeting was called to order and try by the music to attract those at the Republican meeting to the Democratic meeting, the object being to leave the Republican speaker without an audience, so that the leaders, whom it was known intended to attend the Plainfield "smoker," would be blamed.

Somehow the Republican leaders got wind of the scheme Thursday afternoon. They said nothing, but got word to most of the Republicans, and quietly chartered a train of cars for Plainfield.

Then when the band started through the village and the Democrats were being induced to fall in, Republican emissaries got in among them, and told them to hurry to the depot for a free ride to, and a free smoke at the Crescent Rink, Plainfield.

The band kept marching through the village, and as fast as groups would be attracted to follow, some one would whisper to them and they would just as quickly be quietly turned off to the depot.

This was kept up until the cars were literally packed, when they started to Plainfield, not only disrupting the Democratic meeting, but even making the Democratic leaders pay for furnishing the music they served the Democrats to the Plainfield Republican meeting.

The speaker, Prof. Roberts, who was to address them at Dunellen was brought along, and was not only given a bigger audience than he would have had in that enterprising village, under the most favorable circumstances, but the Dunellenites had an opportunity to show their wonderful lung power, and they elected queens of their speaker and drew the tables on the chairman of the Plainfield meeting, who started to have fun at their expense by saying, on introducing Prof. Roberts: "Our friends from Dunellen, fearing that the meeting in Plainfield, have brought their speaker along with them." This was said in a self-complacent, self-satisfying tone. But when Prof. Roberts got started and could be heard all over the vast hall above the whirling, shouting, and talkative people, but one question seemed upon everyone's lips. It was: "Who is he?" and the right to have seen the Dunellenites smile.

The Republicans, after having outwitted their Democratic adversaries in their attempted sharp practice, they then had a rousing meeting, eclipsed their friends of the Queen City by a speaker able to command the attention of such a big audience.

At New Market when the Democratic leaders discovered that they had been baffled, and their meeting fizzled—well its bada's much interest for them for awhile. They felt tired, and it is feared they will not get over that tired feeling in time to see the Republicans sweep the county next Tuesday.

BITTEN BY A SAVAGE DOG.

Mr. J. B. Martin, His Son and Howard Doty Injured.

A bird dog owned by Mr. J. B. Martin of Grand avenue, suddenly turned on him while he was feeding the animal this morning, and severely bit his hand. His little son, who was standing near, was the next victim, and the dog bit through the cuff of the leg, badly tearing the flesh.

Fortunately for them both the dog was chained, and before the brute could do any further damage they succeeded in getting out of its reach.

Howard Doty, a boy in the employ of the Plainfield Street Railway Company, who heard of the dog's ferocious fame, volunteered to shoot the canine. Before doing so, however, he attempted to pat the dog on the head as he did the animal bit him on the arm, making a slight wound. Doty then shot the dog.

Mr. Martin says that school children have been continually teasing the dog for some time past, and that the animal had been made savage in this way. The dog showed no signs of hydrophobia, the disorder says, and he does not consider the wounds dangerous.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The railway mail clerks have right on their side in the petition to the United States government for a safer pattern of mail car. The present one is crushed to splinters in case of a collision, and is so near the engine, that the danger of being burned or scalded to death is added to that of being crushed out of life. In case of railway accidents where anybody is killed, in a majority of cases it is the faithful railway mail clerks and express messengers. If safer cars can by any means be constructed for them it ought to be done at once.

Unparalleled extremes of weather have ruled in the country during the month of October. On the Atlantic coast the temperature has been almost summer-like in its mildness, frost keeping off till remarkably late in the season. At the same time, during the week ending with the middle of October, a snowstorm never before equaled in severity at this season of the year visited the region about Denver. We can beat the world on climate as in other things.

THE DEMOCRATIC CAUSE

An Address to the Country by the National Committee.

CHAIRMAN HARRITY INTERVIEWED

The Manager of the Cleveland and Stevenson Campaign Tells What He Thinks the Result of the Efforts That Have Been Put Forth in Their Interests Will Be.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Chairman Harrity, of the Democratic national committee, and Chairman Dickinson, of the Democratic campaign committee, have issued an address to the American people on the political situation. It says that as the presidential campaign will soon end, it is right and necessary to say a few words to the people of the United States. The address then takes up the tariff question, and of it Messrs. Harrity and Dickinson say:

"Since 1865 less than a thousand men in this country have been, by means of the individual or corporate wealth under their control, the masters of the tariff system. Their power has been sufficient to enforce the continuance and increase in time of peace of taxes on necessaries of life originally imposed in a time of war only because of the actual needs of the government.

"Under the system of war taxes thus continued the conditions of life in this country have essentially changed. The wealth which under former laws was distributed among all classes engaged in industrial life has centered in the hands of a few. These have accumulated fortunes unequaled in any European state. You know this is true. You know that this class controls and uses the government. It is a band of moneyed men combined for sordid purposes and actual ruling the Republican party. The federal officeholders are part of its machinery. Its method of operation is intimidation of workmen and the corrupt use of money. It succeeded in 1888 in defeating Grover Cleveland by such methods before you became aware of the danger. You are not now ignorant of the peril.

"You will not remain passive spectators of this scene. The people of the state of New York, remembering the high character and public services of Grover Cleveland, and knowing that his election is a certain guarantee of a wiser, purer and better government, will rally to his support. Those Republicans in the state of New York—and there are many—who love their country and despise the men now controlling their party will come to his aid, and he will win an overwhelming victory in his well beloved state.

"The farmers of Indiana, cheated more than once by the base methods which are being used once again to control that state, will show that the thousand beneficiaries of federal legislation cannot again, by fraud, knavery and purchase, obtain the electoral vote of that state.

An Appeal for Votes.

"The substantial yeomanry of New Jersey, justly incensed at the attempt to defeat their will by the open bribery of the base at elements of their population, will teach the thousand contributors a lesson they will never forget.

"The farmers and workingmen of Connecticut, robbed of their rightful state government, will remember their wrongs at the polls in November, and the people of Delaware and West Virginia, resenting the attempt now made to corrupt and intimidate many of their number, will follow their example.

"You will bear in mind that you owe to the few men who maintain the present corrupting and iniquitous system of taxation and continuing threat of the force bill. That was a measure introduced for the purpose of forfeiting Republican partisan schemes. Under it they could have placed the federal judiciary for political purposes, and have employed an army of federal officials, paid for out of the public treasury, to control the coming presidential election and all elections for members of congress. Failing in that nefarious plan, they now again threaten you with their panacea, and raised the campaign fund whose the government, under their force bill, would have supplied them with.

"But do not deceive yourselves. President Harrison is in favor of the easy method of carrying federal elections which that measure would legalize. Every one of the Republican leaders who are conducting the campaign does not, we are sure, deceive you.

"You must on Nov. 8 make a choice which will vitally affect the interests of your country. The individual vote of each one of you is of supreme importance. Under Grover Cleveland as president the highest and controlling motive and rule of his administrative action, and of the whole Democratic and independent vote united in his support, will be the greatest good to the greatest number, and public office will be sacredly regarded as a public trust.

"We ask every one of you to labor without ceasing for the election of Grover Cleveland and Adlai E. Stevenson, and for a Democratic administration."

HARRITY INTERVIEWED

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The work of the presidential campaign being virtually ended, Chairman Harrity of the executive committee of the national Democratic committee in an interview declared this state of the situation to be a representative of the United States.

"The Democratic national committee considers the situation very favorable for the success of the Democratic ticket. We have good reason to believe that the result will be entirely satisfactory. We have based our claim on keep ourselves conservative, accordingly modified as to the various conditions existing in all the states, and only in those that are considered safe. We will not advise up to the present hour justify us in claiming that Mr. Cleveland will be elected. Indeed the prospects for the Republican national ticket are so discouraging that the committee has much for the reason that the wagers made upon the election contain the admission that New York will surely give her electoral vote to Mr. Cleveland by a decisive majority.

"The causes that exist in New York to produce the condition of affairs must be found elsewhere, notably in New Jersey and in Connecticut. If New York shall vote for Mr. Cleveland by a large majority we now predict, Indiana, New Jersey and Connecticut are almost certain to do likewise. This is also true to a very great extent in Illinois. Furthermore, it is shall carry New York by a very large majority, it will not be surprising if Wisconsin, Illinois and Iowa shall give their electoral vote to Mr. Cleveland. I regard Wisconsin as reasonably certain to give a Democratic majority in any event. Our friends are quite hopeful of good results in Illinois and Michigan, and I think they have reason for their hope.

The Southern Campaign.

"As to the campaign in the southern states," continued Mr. Harrity, "our committee has reason to feel gratified with its work. Desperate efforts have been made by the Republican managers to secure the electoral vote of Alabama, but from the best information we can obtain from conservative judges we have reason to believe that the Republican friends will be doomed to great disappointment. The Democratic electoral ticket in Alabama will win by a good majority. In West Virginia the fight has been close and hard, but our friends in that state no longer regard the issue in doubt.

"It is understood that the Republican managers have expended a good deal of money in West Virginia, but I am assured that they will awaken to the fact on Tuesday that their money has been spent in vain. We have a splendid organization in that state, with men of intelligence, firmness, sagacity and courage in command. They believe that West Virginia is still Democratic, and we have entire confidence in their judgment.

"The campaign in Delaware involves the election of a United States senator as well as the electoral vote and a congressman. A good deal of money has been poured into that state, much of which has been raised in Philadelphia. Our Democratic friends have been fully advised of the movement of the Republican managers and are on the alert. Our leaders there are active and energetic, and we feel assured that Delaware can still be counted as among the Democratic states.

"On the whole," concluded Chairman Harrity, "the Democratic managers have reason to feel satisfied with the outlook. We are vain enough to think that no blunders have been committed, and that nothing has been done to bring reproach upon the party, the candidates or the managers. We await the election with equanimity, feeling morally certain that the vote on Tuesday will result in Mr Cleveland's triumphant election

TAMMANY HALL AROUSED.

Deputy Sheriffs Appointed to Cope with Supervisor Davenport's Marshals.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The arrest of Commissioners Charles Sheehy and Jim Simmons, through the efforts of Chief Inspector of Federal Elections John I. Davenport, on the charge of being concerned in the registration of jumpers on Blackwell's island, has aroused Tammany Hall, of which organization the commissioners are members. The local committee of thirty having charge of the canvass in the county met and adopted a resolution referring to the arbitrary arrests of citizens at the instance of John I. Davenport, and providing for the appointment of a committee of five lawyers to wait upon Sheriff Gorman, the police commissioners and district attorney, and confer with them as to what the federal officers keep within the limits of the law, to secure the right of franchise to all citizens, and maintain peace and order at the polls on election day. The committee of lawyers after a consultation, sent a letter to Chief Supervisor of Elections Davenport, which is in part as follows:

"We understand that it is contemplated by you to make certain arrests of electors of this county for alleged ill gal registration. It has frequently happened that you have withheld making arrests for alleged illegal registration until election day, and, as we are informed, have held the person so arrested until the election was over, thereby causing the elector to lose his vote, even though entitled to cast it.

As you can just as well execute your warrants for illegal registration now as on election day, we have to request that you will forthwith issue and execute any warrants you may intend to issue for illegal registration, in order that the electors entitled to his discharge, shall receive the same in time to cast his vote.

The letter then quotes from opinions by Judge Choate and Justice Blatchford to the effect that where a man can be arrested before election day as well as not, he ought to be so arrested. If there is any doubt in the matter as to where he could have been arrested before that day, it must be presumed to be for the purpose of preventing him from voting and consequently unlawful."

Sheriff John J. Gorman has begun the work of swearing in a corps of special deputies for use in case of emergencies, and says: "If necessary I will exercise the power the law gives me and order the assembling of a posse comitatus."

Hill in Elmira.

ELMIRA, N. Y., Nov. 5.—Senator David B. Hill's arrival here was announced by the booming of cannon. The house of the crowded into the opera house and several hundred were unable to gain admission. Judge Taylor introduced Senator Hill amid tremendous cheering that lasted for several minutes. After discussing the issues of the campaign Senator Hill said that one of the issues of supreme importance, he had made its nominations. "Then my guns are turned against the common enemy. Grover Cleveland [cheers] needs no eulogy at my hands. His record has passed into history, and no Democrat, no Republican, no citizen need blush for any part of that record. The duty of the hour is to support Democratic principles and regularly nominated candidates."

Cleveland in Jersey City.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 5.—The Cleveland demonstration at Oakland rink last evening was in the nature of an ovation. The rink has a capacity of 5,000 persons, but the crowd that was packed within its walls can safely be estimated at fully 1,500 in excess of that number. Ex-Senator William Brinkerhoff presided, and the list of vice presidents represented every one of the twenty-one counties comprising the state Mr. Cleveland made a short address, and expressed pleasure in speaking in his native state. Senator McPherson also spoke briefly. After the meeting a reception was held at the Democratic society rooms, and over 4,000 persons shook hands with the Democratic standard bearer

BELLEVILLE, Nov. 5.—The biggest meeting of the campaign was held here last night. General Adlai E. A VICTORY FOR MERCIER

The Ex-Premier's Trial Results in a Verdict of Not Guilty.

QUEBEC EXCITED OVER THE CASE.

A Remarkable Demonstration in Honor of the Vindicated Statesman When the Result Became Known—The Jury Only Consulted for a Few Minutes.

QUEBEC, Nov. 5.—The famous trial of ex-Premier *Mercier and M. Pecaud re*sulted last evening in the vindication and acquittal of the accused. Such public excitement as has been generated over this case was never before witnessed here.

Ex-Premier Mercier and M. Pecaud were charged with having defrauded the province of $60,000 and a wings bank of a like sum. The jury retired at 5.40 p. m. On their return ten minutes later the clerk of the court first challenged the jury in French "Non compable," replied the spokesman. Then the clerk challenged the jury in English, the spokesman replying. "Not guilty."

Not Guilty.

After Mr. Belleau had finished addressing the jurors Judge Wurtele made his charge to the jury, which was very favorable to both Mercier and Pecaud. He advised them not to take any cognizance of the first count in the indictment, viz., for having conspired to defraud her majesty, as it was clearly proven that the no such Langlais contract was in reality no contract at all, as it was not signed by the lieutenant governor. Consequently the government, not being bound by that contract, could not lose anything, and therefore the conspiracy charged could not have conspired to defraud her majesty.

The second count for conspiracy to defraud Lacaisse d'Economie was the only one upon which the jury could deliberate.

His honor repeated the charge in French, and asked the jurors what time they would require to bring in a verdict. "Ten minutes," replied the foreman, and the immense crowd present then knew that the jurors had decided upon their verdict.

It was whispered around that a demonstration would be given to the defendants as soon as the verdict was rendered. Therefore, while the jurors were deliberating, Judge Wurtele requested the spectators not to make any demonstration, as he would be obliged to punish somebody for contempt of court if such an attempt were made.

The jurors returned to the court at 6 o'clock, and, as was expected, rendered a verdict of not guilty for both defendants.

An Ovation to Mercier.

Messrs Mercier and Pecaud were immediately surrounded by their friends, who were anxious to congratulate them. Many spectators awaited the defendants at the court house door, and on their exit they were cheered to the echo. Mr. Mercier was then escorted through several streets, being carried on the shoulders of some of his sympathizers, and upon reaching the residence of Mr. Lemieux, one of his counsel, the ex-prime minister addressed a large crowd, and was followed by several other orators. Mr. Mercier said to the cheering multitude:

I thank you, gentlemen—I thank you infinitely for this spontaneous movement of friendship. I thank you, moreover, for having saved me from my persecutors. The persecution was conducted by Messrs. Pacaud-wood, the residence of the lieutenant governor of Quebec, and was continued by men up the looming of perjured witnesses and co-cupy; but thank God that the great voice of the people has spoken and I am still a free man.

While Mr. Mercier was speaking the cheering was kept up unceasingly, and cries of "Hurrah for Mercier!" "Down with tyrants!" etc., came from every direction.

A grand torchlight procession is being prepared for this evening in this city, and Mr. Mercier will leave for Montreal on Sunday evening, when his friends are making preparations to receive him.

THE REPUBLICAN LISTS.

CHAIRMAN HACKETT INTERVIEWED

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—The following statement has been issued by the Republican national committee:

"The instruction of acting Attorney General Aldrich to United States marshals and the citations from the law governing their employment at the polls, together with the penalties prescribed for interference with them while in the performance of their duties, have brought consternation to the camp of Tammany. It is the belief that with the proper precaution which will be taken a fair election can be held in this city.

"There has come to the Republican national committee from various sources information that the reserve crop of campaign lies for issuing the day before election is very prolific, and unusually sensational articles are to be published, presenting what purport to be facts from all the western states for publication in the east, and the reverse for publication in the west, when too late to be contradicted. Republicans all over the land should be prepared for this line of action.

"Be on your guard; believe only that which is consonant with your common sense or accompanied with unimpeachable testimony, and do not change the conviction that has come by honest thought, but vote as your conscience dictates and as you think to be right. You have the assurance of this committee, based on reliable and confidential information all over the country, that the sentiment of the Republican party will be reflected by a constitutional majority that shall be beyond question."

Among the callers at Republican national headquarters were Senator Proctor, ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt and Chauncey M. Depew, the latter having returned from a four days' journey through New York state, where he has been on a stumping tour. To a United Press reporter he said:

Depew's Prediction.

"From the changes that have taken place and the certainty of a full Republican vote I am confident that the Republicans will come down to Harlem with a majority of something like 100,000. Men of both parties have talked with me frankly and I have gathered my information from perfectly reliable sources. The prediction, you will find, will come true."

Mr. Depew will make a few more speeches before election. On Monday night he will speak at Peekskill, as he has done the night before election ever since he left Yale college.

Mr. J. Frank Supplee, of Baltimore, who has been speaking in New York and Brooklyn, said at Republican headquarters that in the twenty years he had been coming to this city he had never seen so much interest taken in a presidential campaign as is manifested in this one—not even in the Blaine campaign of 1884. The bankers, insurance men, wholesale dry goods men and other classes of business men are strongly for Harrison, and this feeling even extends to importers, who are satisfied that the McKinley act, contrary to their expectations, has caused them an increase in their business.

United States District Attorney Mitchell and a host of Federal officials, with John Z. Davenport and Marshal Jacobus also, sing them as to the law which governs the ballot. It points out that the United States law is paramount in a clash with any state law, and shows that Mr. Sheehan's proclamation is not based on law.

Mr. Mitchell said to a United Press reporter: "Mr. Sheehan's proclamation, which was practically to resist the authority of the federal marshals, was ill advised and was simply an incitement to riot. The United States marshals will be supported by the military if need be."

State Senator Cantor said that he would not be surprised if in some districts there are clashes between the federal and state authorities. He does not advocate anything of the sort, but thought it impossible to conduct the election without

HACKETT INTERVIEWED.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5.—Mr. Charles Hackett, chairman of the executive committee of the Republican state committee, was seen by a reporter, and he consented to answer a number of questions. The first was:

"What is the outlook in the state?"

"It looks better known the Republican prospect to be brighter at this period of the canvass. It is much more encouraging than it was before the election in 1888, and is in every way far more satisfactory than it was on the Saturday before the contest in 1888. The Republicans carried the state in both of these years, they will carry New York this year.

"We shall come down to the Harlem river with a larger plurality than we did in 1888, and there is no reason to believe that the Democratic pluralities in New York, Kings, Queens and Richmond will exceed those which Mr. Cleveland received in these counties four years ago. I believe that Mr. Harrison will get at least 90,000 plurality above the Harlem. I do not believe that Mr. Cleveland's plurality below the bridge will vary materially from the 71,031 he received four years ago."

"You appear very confident, Mr. Hackett. Have you any objection to stating the grounds for your belief?"

"Not the slightest objection. I base my confidence in Republican success on the reports which I get from all parts of the state. These reports come from a variety of sources—from friends who have traveled recently in various sections of the state, and who have looked into the political situation in the localities they have visited, and from private letters and business firms here from their agents in the state as well as private letters from people in the country to friends here. The tone of all this news is that President Harrison has gained in strength since 1888 and that Cleveland has lost ground. But while I call simply news though it is undoubtedly good news."

Every Republican Vote Registered.

"My reports from all parts of the state corroborate it. These reports are from campaign speakers, county and town committees, from several hundred correspondents scattered through the counties and from our own agents who have visited all points in the state. These different reports agree in stating that Republicans are working like beavers and confident of doing better than ever.

"During this week I have received replies from several hundred correspondents who had been requested to answer various questions. The replies show that about nine Democrats will vote for Harrison to one former Harrison man who will vote for Cleveland. These statements from my own correspondents are squarely confirmed by the reports from about 300 correspondents of an establishment in this city, which asked its agents some time ago to give its manager similar information. Their replies came from other localities than those covered by my people, but they also showed that the Democrats coming to Harrison outnumbered the Republicans going to Cleveland by more than eight to one.

"Then there is the registration. We are convinced that the Republican vote in the state is registered. No sensible man will deny that the registration in New York, Albany, Troy and Elmira is not what the Democrats expected. On the contrary, it is distinctly favorable to Republicans. We shall poll our full vote on election day everywhere in the state, and everybody knows that a full vote in New York means a Republican victory."

"Are you sure you will get out your vote in the country? Registration in the rural districts is one thing, but voting is quite another, you know."

"I understand that point perfectly. You may rest assured that the Republican vote will be out. Everything has been done to make certain that it will be out, and it will be at the polls in greater force than it ever was."

Will Have a Fair Count.

"I practically answered this question at the beginning of the conversation. The Republicans will poll a larger vote in this city by a number of thousands than they ever did. They are entitled to the usual normal increase in their vote, and this year the normal increase will be swelled by the votes of hundreds of business men who are opposed to a change, by the votes of hundreds of workingmen who have heretofore been Democrats, but who do not believe in free trade, and by the votes of hundreds of dissatisfied Democrats who are convinced that the election of Mr. Cleveland would be a misfortune for themselves.

"We shall poll from 117,000 to 120,000 votes in this city. That is not all. We mean to have those votes honestly counted. Many of our friends fear that the only danger lies in the strong probability that we shall be defrauded after the polls are closed. Perhaps they are right.

"But Republicans in the state and in the nation may be sure that every possible precaution will be taken to prevent such a crime. We mean to have a fair count, no matter what it costs, and when the news goes out to the country on election night it will be the best news for Republicans that was ever sent from this city."

In conclusion Mr. Hackett said: "The Republican party will cast many thousand more votes in New York city than it ever polled before. The Republican party will cast many thousand more votes in the state than it ever polled before. The Republicans will come down to the Harlem river with a larger plurality than they did four years ago. The Republicans will carry the state by a larger plurality than they did in 1888."

MAGIC LANTERN SCREENS.

Curious Effects Due to the Phenomenon of the Persistence of Vision.

A curved screen for the projection of lantern pictures is the invention of Mr. Stuart Reese, of the London Physical society. Instead of the usual surface of cloth or paper it consists of a single strip of wood (see A, Fig. 1) painted gray in the center and shading off into white at the extremities, and mounted so that it can be revolved. If a picture from a magic lantern is focused upon this strip of wood while at rest, of course only a small section of it will be visible, but if the strip is rapidly revolved the entire picture will appear, and the effect will be that of a translucent screen, on which the pictures is apparently suspended in the air.

This remarkable effect is due, explains Popular Science News, to the phenomenon of the persistence of vision. If we look at an object and it is suddenly removed we do not cease to see it at once, but the impression remains in our eye for a short time, which varies under different circumstances, but is always a small fraction of a second; so that if, for instance, a visual impression remained on the retina of the eye for a tenth of a second it would be necessary to rotate the strip of wood ten times every second to give the effect of a continuous screen—or rather, in the present instance, five times a second, as there are two arms to the strip of wood and every part of the picture appears twice during each revolution. The same phenomenon of persistence of vision can be illustrated by rapidly revolving a piece of glowing charcoal—the ignited end of a match, for instance—when, instead of a moving point, a circle of fire will be seen.

An interesting modification of this apparatus is to make the screen double, as shown as B. If a picture is projected toward these screens it will appear on both, or a different picture may be thrown upon the second screen from another lantern (Fig. 2). The "wheel of life" and many similar toys depend for their action upon this principle of optics.

An Amusing Spectacle in Bird Life.

In a special ornithological bulletin of the United States National museum occurs the following account of the dance of "the prairie sharp-tailed grouse," of Manitoba, quoted from the unpublished notes of Mr. E. E. Thompson:

After the disappearance of the snow and the coming of warm weather the chickens meet every morning at gray dawn, in companies of from six to twenty, on some selected hillock or knoll, and indulge in what is called a "dance." This performance I have often watched, and it presents the most amusing spectacle I have yet witnessed in bird life.

At first the birds may be seen standing about in ordinary attitudes, when suddenly one of them lowers its head, spreads out his wings nearly horizontally and its tail perpendicularly, distends its air sacs and erects its feathers, then rushes across the "floor," taking the shortest line, and, instead of stamping its feet so hard and rapidly that the sound is like that of a kettledrum, at the same time it utters a sort of bubbling noise, which seems to come from the air sacs, beats the air with its wings and vibrates its tail, so that it produces a loud, rustling noise, and thus contrives at once to make as extraordinary a spectacle of itself as possible.

As soon as one commences, all join in, rattling, stamping, drumming, crowing and dancing together furiously; louder and louder the noise, faster and faster the dance becomes, until at last, as they madly whirl about, the birds leap over each other in their excitement. After a brief spell the energy of the dancers begins to abate, and shortly afterward they cease and stand or move about very quietly until they are again started by one of their number leading off.

A Good Use for Boiler Scale.

The time honored adage that it is an ill wind that blows nobody good finds another illustration in the use for boiler scale, which has heretofore been regarded as an unmitigated evil. The Railway Review tells that a superintendent of railway machinery has found a way of using this scale to good advantage in making floors for the shops. It is spread over the floor and then hammered down solid, and then thoroughly soaked with water. On becoming thoroughly dry it forms a floor as solid as could be obtained by a good grade of cement floor. It can be very cheaply made and readily repaired, and affords a means of usefully disposing of a material supposed to be utterly worthless.

A New Tin Alloy.

An alloy of ninety-five parts of tin and five parts of copper will enamel readily with glass, and, according to The Pharmaceutical Record, may also be used for coating metals, imparting to them a silvery appearance. The alloy is prepared by pouring the copper into the molten tin, stirring with a wooden mixer and afterward remelting. It adheres strongly to clean glass surfaces, and has nearly the same rate of expansion as glass. By adding from ¼ to 1 per cent. of lead or zinc the alloy may be rendered softer or harder, or more or less easily fusible, as required.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

HOW TO CLEAN OILCLOTH.

Methods Recommended in The Industrial World.

Never use soap in the water when cleaning oilcloth. It fades the colors and breaks up the paint. Ammonia also is to be avoided, because it gives the cloth a dull, dead look. If a brush is used it should be a soft one, but it is better not to use any, except in cases when the oilcloth has been long neglected or poorly washed for some time previously. Take a clean flannel cloth and apply clean warm water, which is finally to be removed by soaking it up into the house flannel again after it has been wrung out. The oilcloth is then wiped dry with another piece of clean flannel.

After the oilcloth has become thoroughly dry, apply to it some warm linseed oil. The housekeeper who tries this for the first time will probably use too much, and make the cloth so sticky that every article of dust will adhere to it. Only a very little is to be used and slightly rubbed into the cloth, giving it a handsome gloss. Skimmed milk is sometimes used in place of oil, and it gives the cloth a beautiful gloss. Too frequent washing, no matter how well it is done, will not improve oilcloth in the end. Usually this is the kind of treatment it receives, for few housewives seem to recognize the difference between dusty oilcloth and a dirty one, and treat both the same. After it has had a thorough sweeping, if it looks dull and dusty, go over a little at a time, with a dry cupcloth, and it will look as bright as though washed, and will wear a great deal longer.

Glass and Silverware.

Much of the table glassware in old English shapes and cuttings. Mauve has been a fashionable color in Paris all season, and now we have mauve glass. The new forms in glass vases are slender and columnar, Sheffield-like bottles mounted on standards, with handles tipped with gold, are seen. Pierced work is now in such vogue that the newest lamps have great globelike bodies of pierced metal mounted on columnar standards of marble, enamel and onyx.

There are decided novelties in silver fruit dishes. One is a low, round bowl with raised and perforated work. A fruit dish intended for an apple or two, a few peaches and a bunch of grapes and suitable for only a very small dinner is platelike and mounted on a central standard. The edge of the receptacle is a rich band of raised work with perforations, and the dish has a distinct stamp of elegance. A large flaring fruit dish has a smooth surface, and the ornamentation is formed by three incrustations. Some fruit bowls are basin shaped with raised flutes half way up, and a plain insteron border above. Articulated leaf spoons grow in numbers every day. A specimen is a lily leaf for the bowl and two twisted tendrils with buds for the handle.

Pickled Pears.

The little brown Seckel pear is incomparably the best for the following pickle, according to a writer in Good Housekeeping: "To one quart of vinegar put 2½ pounds of sugar, and for spices a tablespoonful each of ground cinnamon and cloves, a pinch of mustard seed and a small piece of ginger. To this put five pounds of fruit, cover and simmer until tender. Then take out the pears, cook the syrup down, pour over the fruit and seal in glass jars."

An Orange Dessert.

Prepare some oranges by cutting them about a third of the way from the top and taking out the pulp. With these make a jelly. Following is a good recipe for it: Soak half a box of gelatin in a cup of cold water. When soft, add two teacupe of boiling water. When entirely dissolved, add one teacup of sugar, the juice of six oranges and two lemons. Strain this. Fill the orange skins with this jelly, replace the upper part and tie with a narrow ribbon.

Anchovy Eggs.

Boil three fresh eggs for ten minutes, allow them to cool, then peel and cut in halves. Carefully scoop out the yolk, and mix with it a tablespoonful of cream and a teaspoonful of anchovy paste. Beat these ingredients well together, and then fill each little half egg with the mixture. Place the eggs in a cool oven for a few minutes, and then serve when cold on a dish strewn with mustard and cress.

Banana Shortcake.

Cream one-half cup butter and one cup of sugar, stir in one beaten egg, half a cup of milk, two cups of flour and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in two round tin cake pans. When cold spread a pint of whipped cream sweetened to taste, into which has been stirred one large banana sliced very thin. Lay the other over it and serve hot.

A Pretty French Knickknack.

This little novelty in way of a pincushion has its substantive shoe foundation cut out in cardboard and covered with yellow satin.

A SHOE PINCUSHION.

It is covered in ribly velvet, while the bow is an artistic combination of the two colors, and forms an attractive and useful knickknack for the toilet table.

Escalloped Cauliflower.

Parboil a head which has been broken into small pieces. Butter a pudding dish and place in it a layer of cauliflower, then sprinkle fine bread and cheese, then another layer of cauliflower. Alternate in this way until the dish is full, then cover with bread crumbs and bits of butter. Bake twenty minutes.

Chicken Toast.

Take two tablespoonfuls of cold chicken, chopped fine, add salt in sufficient water to make a cupful of the whole; thicken slightly with cornstarch in melted butter, pour over a slice of nicely toasted bread and serve hot.

A Sure Thing.

A witty individual one morning wagered that he would ask the same question of fifty different persons and receive the same answer from each. The wit went to first one and then to another until he had reached the number of fifty. And this is how he won the bet. He whispered half audibly to each:

"I say, have you heard that Smith has failed?"

"What Smith?" queried the whole fifty, one after another, and it was decided that she bet had been fairly won.—Tit-Bits.

Willie Knew.

The teacher, who had given a lesson on wool and told the class that wool comes off the sheep and is made into blankets, clothing and so on to keep us warm in cold and windy weather, proceeded to question little Willie, who had been rather inattentive during the lesson.

"Now, Willie," said the teacher, "whose does wool come from?"

"Off the sheep's back, teacher," replied Willie.

"And what then?" inquired the teacher. But Willie could not answer.

"What were these made from?" asked the teacher, touching Willie's knickers with his blackboard pointer.

LET EVERY CITIZEN DO HIS DUTY.

The polls will be open to-morrow from six o'clock in the morning until seven o'clock in the evening. Voters who do not vote in the morning run considerable risk of losing their votes.

It is a very important election, both State and National.

In the State it is important to break down the ring which has run things with such a high hand since it got unrestrained power.

In the nation Republican success means Protection and hence encouragement to home industries. It means honest money, and it means a fair ballot, while Democratic succes means Free Trade, and that means that home industries must have wages reduced to the same level as is paid the pauper labor of Europe, to compete with that pauper labor, or those home industries must go out of business.

The Republican principle of Protection has brought us our present prosperity—the greatest the world has ever known.

Democratic free trade has always brought disaster. So has Democratic wild cat money. And the Democratic idea of elections may be seen in States in the South where they have unrestrained control. There the bullet rules the ballot. The Republicans want fair play for all.

AT THE "ROUND UP"

OF REPUBLICAN MEETINGS IN UNION COUNTY.

Judge Wheeler of Red Bank Gives the Final Talk in the Rink Saturday Night.—An Illustrated Address which was Very Interesting and Instructive.

Mr. Stephen A. Ginns, President of the Common Council, was made chairman of the meeting. In his introductory remarks Mr. Ginns referred to an article he had read a short time ago of his conversion to the Democratic party. "For thirty years," he said, "I have been a Republican, true to the Republican principles and have always voted the Republican ticket." Mr. Ginns said that though his conversion has not taken place, he hoped that there were some in the audience who would become converts to Republicanism before the meeting was over.

Mr. F. E. Marsh then read a list of the vice presidents of the meeting, which was approved by the people present.

Judge Wheeler said that he was proud of the honor of being present at the "round up" of the campaign in Union county. One candidate for Governor comes from Union county, and I hope that every voter in this building will vote to send John Kean, Jr., to conduct our business at Trenton. Trenton has long been the seat of political bosses and political trickery. It should not, and will be if you elect the right man, the centre of business in the State.

For the first time in the history of political parties we have a party for Free Trade, pure and simple. The Democratic party proposes to lower our laboring men to an equal with the pauper labor of Free Trade England. They want to give us wild cat currency and red dog banks, which would ruin our country.

Judge Wheeler then commenced a series of stereoscopic views in connection with his talk, which proved both interesting and instructive.

Washington, the first President of the United States, was the first picture shown in speaking of the "Father of his Country" Judge Wheeler said that "he left his home at Mt. Vernon and went to New York city, where, at the corner of Wall and Nassau streets, he took the oath of office, and in his first message to the first Congress he recommended that a tariff bill be passed for the purpose of raising revenue, and for fur nishing protection to American industries. That policy is what the Democrats of to-day declare unconstitutional.

"Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, favored Protection. Thomas Jefferson, who framed the Declaration of Independence, believed in Protection. Although he was the father of Democracy he advocated in his sixth annual message to Congress that the surplus revenue be used to build up our canals, rivers and manufactures.

"Andrew Jackson, in his letter to Dr. Coleman, of April 26, 1824, said that 'heaven had smiled upon and given us industry and independence. And same Providence had blessed us. He has filled our mountains with iron and other ores. He has given us soil on which to raise hemp and wool. These we ought to protect.' Jackson was a Democrat."

John Calhoun, in 1833, declared that the tariff bill of 1832, signed by Jackson, should be repealed. Henry Clay came forward with a compromise tariff bill. This bill in four years' time ruined the country. Banks failed, manufacturing ceased, and farming became unprofitable.

In 1840 the people realized that something must be done to bring about a change of the condition of the country, so they started up the cry of "Tippecanoe and Tyler Too," and elected General Harrison. Before Harrison could accomplish anything for the relief of the people he died. Tyler, then Vice-President, became president. He refused to sign a protective tariff bill passed by Congress in 1842, which Harrison had recommended, before his death, and so he vetoed it. A strong Congress passed the bill over his veto. The country grew and manufacturing prospered as a result.

Polk, when he was elected to the presidency, declared that the tariff on cotton and wool should be lower, and in 1846 a tariff bill was passed which brought ruin on the country. In eight years 758 banks closed, and the people were starving.

Then came Abraham Lincoln. He selected men for his cabinet which made the strongest cabinet in the history of the country down to the present one. Among the members of Lincoln's cabinet was one who was the promoter of the National Banking system, which to-day is being attacked by the Democratic party. President Lincoln's cabinet was the strongest down to the present time.

President Harrison has selected men for his cabinet who have upheld our flag and conducted our foreign affairs on courteous and safe lines. It has been four years of prosperity, and we hope next Tuesday to have him continued four years more.

Free Trade is ruinous. Our Democratic friends tell us we should have wool, iron and lumber on the free list. We must protect these because they are a product of labor and capital. The Republican party believes in protecting anything that we can produce in this country, and to let in free of duty articles that we do not produce in this country.

The United States is now the third largest woot growing country in the world. One-twelfth of our people are wool growers. In 1888 the tariff was taken off of wool and 12,000,000 sheep were slaughtered and 79 mills shut down. The duty was put on again and 500 cotton mills started, and in one week's time wages were increased seven per cent.

Prior to the passage of the McKinley Bill we sent 3,000 miles for our tin. Now Swansea, New South Wales, and we have paid South Wales for tin three hundred million dollars. They charged three-eighths of one per cent.

us $14.75 a box for tin. A duty of fifteen per c.nt. ad valorem was placed on tin fifteen years ago, and immediately a tin factory was started in Ohio and one in Pittsburg. Three years from that time South Wales reduced the price of tin from $14.75 a box to $11. The American manufacturers reduced tin to $11 a box. New South Wales reduced their price until lower and sold at four and five dollars a box. This killed the tin business in this country until the passage of the McKinley Bill. Now tin mills and factories are springing up all over the United States. Only recently one was built right here in New Jersey, at Elizabethport, where they turn out 1,000 lbs. a day. Last week 20,000,000 lbs., were shipped from that mill.

It will take four years more to properly build up the tin business, and at the close of President Harrison's next term it will be increased until we can manufacture 4,000,000 lbs. every three months.

The manufacturers are paying twenty to twenty-five million dollars more wages to American workmen.

Blaine's Reciprocity has increased our imports of flour to Cuba from 7,936 lbs., in 1891, to 67,000, in 1892.

IMPORTATION OF FLOUR TO CUBA.

The speaker here showed the difference of the condition of the working class in the United States and England and Ireland, concluding with a view of Harrison and Red.

He was born at Harris' Lane, Middlesex county, December, 1808, and was nearly eighty-four years of age. His wife survives him. He learned the hatter's trade and was engaged in that business at different times until about thirty years ago. He was fourth of a family of eight children. His brother, Abner Coriell, the youngest and only survivor of the family, resides at New Market, where he has been Post-master under every Republican President, also Justice of the Peace for many years. His father, Richard Coriell, and his mother, Susan Smalley, were both born before the Revolutionary war. His father died in 1838, and his mother ten years later. His grandfather, Abraham Coriell, a zealous member of the Presbyterian church at Round Brook, died in 1838 at the home of Newton, (now Randolphville) aged 91 years. Shortly before his death he showed Mr. Coriell the ruins of the house where he had baked bread for the Revolutionary soldiers. Mr. Coriell joined the Baptist church at Samptown in 1830, and on the removal to Plainfield, in 1834, united with the Baptist church in this place. When a young man he saw and shook hands with Lafayette. Lafayette, Richard E., and W. Wallace Coriell and Mrs. E. J. Wesley Ashmen of this city are his children by a former marriage. An older daughter, the wife of Morgan Bird, died in 1886. There are six grandchildren, sons of Frederick W. Bird of East Front street. The Coriells of New Jersey are descendants of Samuel, Daniel and Elias Coriell, three brothers who emigrated from the island of Corsica and settled at Coriell's Ferry, now Lambertville, New Jersey in 1665.

Democratic Extravagance.

Their own Congress has appropriated, thus far, at the rate of $40,000,000 more than the billion-dollar Congress.

While the Democrats shout about the extravagance of the McKinley bill, the Mills bill actually increased the taxation over the McKinley bill by seven per cent.

They propose, however, to rearrange this taxation so as to raise as much or more money, but to raise it without regard to Protection for American labor.

Under the proposed rearrangement, American labor would receive decreased pay, and be subject to increased taxation with a decreased ability to meet it.

A Load of Furniture Burned.

As a man employed by Mr. J. E. Yose was engaged moving the furniture of Mrs. J. Stevens, from Short Hills to this city, Saturday, the truck load of goods caught fire by a spark from the driver's cigar. The flames gained such headway before they were noticed that it was impossible to extinguish it, and the truck and its contents were burned. There was nothing left but the wheels.

To Somerset County Voters.

Vote for the poor man's friend, H. N. Spencer, for Surrogate. He has never, in any instance, charged costs on overdue taxes between Dec. 20th and Feb. 1st which amounts to from $225 to $250 per year.

POLITICAL PICKLES.

The Dollars of Our Daddies, Which Democrats Want us to Return to.

The following extracts from the "New York Bank Note List and Counterfeit Detector" of October 2, 1863, show the condition of the money afloat in New Jersey at that time. It will be observed that the genuine money of nearly all banks was subject to a discount and in many cases worthless, and that there were many counterfeits on every bank of any standing.

So far the making of tin plates in America is small, but it is quite likely that it will increase, and to a considerable extent, if the McKinley bill is successful at the forthcoming election.—From the London Examiner, Oct. 15, 1892.

It is certain, however, that at the present moment America is the most prosperous country in the world despite our assertions and Protection is ruinous. If I had been an American myself I should have advocated Protection. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating." Protection pudding has provided a more plentiful meal for the Americans than Free Trade pudding has.—Henry Labouchere, Member of Parliament, Editor of Truth, and Champion of Gladstone and Home Rule for Ireland.

The coming presidential election, then, is one of supreme importance to believers in free intercourse between nations. The official party who prepared the Democratic platform for the presidential election at Chicago did not dare in their platform to go back to pure free trade, and they drew up a halting resolution for adoption which the Democratic Congress would not accept. The congress, after discussing the subject, formed another committee and unanimously adopted a platform which should warm the heart of every Free Trader, because it was Free Trade in principle.—Sir Lyon Playfair at the annual Meeting of the Cobden Club.

For Irish-American Voters.

The inhabitants of the Emerald Isle are certainly a magnificent race, especially when their biographer wants to run for alderman. They never lie, steal, cheat, rob and murder, get drunk, perjure themselves, quarrel and fight, they would be all of these if they did not

EDITORIAL NOTES

Will it not be rather confusing, as it were, to the youthful American mind to see New York celebrating the discovery of America by Columbus on the 12th of October while the rest of the country celebrates it on the 21st?

Since the war there has not been as much of confusion and changing of votes in the political parties as there is in this campaign. Republicans are coming out for Democratic candidates. Democrats announce that they will vote the Republican ticket. Many lifelong members of the two leading parties are pondering and saying themselves that historic question. 'Where am I at?'

One of the most appropriate Columbus celebrations in all the country was that at Pittsburg where a beautiful grove of trees was planted and named 'Columbus grove.' School children sought to plant such parks in every neighborhood before the autumn is over. They will stand in honor of the great discoverer when perhaps even this mighty republic shall have gone down.

The number of acres which will be open to settlement under the recent agreement with the Comanche Kiowa and Apache Indians is nearly 4,000,000. It is situated in the southwestern corner of Indian Territory. For this land the government paid the Indians $2,000,000. The members of the three tribes named will take lands in severalty and the new tract is what is left after they have chosen their farms. It will soon be opened to settlement, then there will be another boomers rush. The Indian territory is being gradually carved up and parceled out.

Public Decorations.

Mere display of painting is not decoration. The Columbus celebrations developed the fact, however that this is the American idea of it. A hundred yards of muslin stamped in red, white and blue and stretched across the front of a building is shown. It is likewise patriotic and therefore we respect the motive of the one who puts it there but it is not decorative.

In the older countries public adornments on festal occasions are the object of serious care and attention. The best artists are secured to plan the window displays, the triumphal arches and the marches. The result is an artistic display which lingers in memory like a dream of beauty. We want some of these dreams of beauty for America. Nothing is too good for us.

Enormous size lavish abundance is the American idea of the right thing on all occasions. Even if we wish to praise enthusiastically a play a ball a church ceremonial we involuntarily say it was a 'big thing.' That is the highest praise *we can bestow: not mere size and atmo*sphere but artistic merit itself. American cities during the Columbus celebrations looked like a kaleidoscopic spectacle in color without the beautiful kaleidoscopic figures. The most artistically decorated buildings were perhaps the great dry goods stores. The artists who arrange the shop windows had been employed here with fine effect.

Two Presidents' Wives.

The lamented death of Mrs Harrison was caused primarily by an attack of grip from which she never entirely rallied. But in the quiet of her own old home she would have had a better chance to fight for her life. She would perhaps have pulled through as it was only for her determination to stand up under all the exactions made on her as a president's wife. A determination that was heroic kept her at her post till the season was over and the politico-social circle at Washington had scattered for the summer. Then even she herself discovered for the first time how weak she was. But by that time there was only left the sad waiting for the end. With the passing of Caroline Scott Harrison there went out of life one of the purest, sweetest and noblest of women. *A typical American woman she de*voted to her family yet with a broad warm interest in all things human.

Remember the reader of history recalls a scene of stately beauty and splendor when the idolized wife of President Elect Andrew Jackson died. She too died because her husband's presidential honors bore too hard on her, but her death came about in a cruel and terrible way. Aspersions had actually been cast upon her own pure character by her husband's political opponents and it killed her. Parton says she fell a victim to indecent party contention. One may hope that our politicians have grown less brutal and ferocious since then.

Mrs Jackson died from a fearful attack of heart trouble in December before the general was inaugurated in March. Jackson would not believe that life had really departed. His wife was to him all that Mrs. Harrison has been to the present president of the United States and he never recovered from the blow of her death. Hours after the physicians had pronounced Rachel Jackson dead after her lifeless body was prepared for burial the poor old general hoped she might come back. He pointed to the table whereon her body lay and said, 'spread your blankets upon it. If she does come to she will lie so hard upon the table.'

But she did not 'come to.'

*Renan was an agnostic, but even re*ligious women will forgive him after reading this remark of his. "I often fancy that the judgments which will be passed upon us in the valley of Jehoshaphat will be neither more nor less than those of women, countersigned by the Almighty."

Apparently it is not necessary to wait for electricity to propel railway trains 100 miles an hour. Steam is nearly equal to it now. An express train between Buffalo and Rochester lately trav*eled ten miles at the rate of ninety-five* miles an hour, making a mile in less than thirty-nine seconds. The only question to be settled is whether electricity cannot accomplish the fast travel with less dust, noise and expense.

In South Dakota this year Indians vote for the first time and enjoy the sensation of casting their ballots for the great father. A law passed by congress declares that when Indians take farms in severalty red males twenty-one and over shall be classed as American citizens. Considerable political log rolling has been done among the Sioux Indians and Wahpetons of the Lake Traverse region, who took lands in severalty two years ago. It will be interesting to know whether the Indian will become a Democrat or Republican, or whether he will listen to the honeyed eloquence of the People's party orators.

Breathing.

The average human being gets about one-fourth as much air into his lungs as he needs, certainly not more than that. A lady of Boston was thought to have consumption was told to begin and breathe slowly and deeply taking in at each breath all the air her lungs would hold: breathing only through the nose. In twelve hours a marked change for the better was noticed. She coughed less than she had done in a month, her eye had a sparkle, her face had begun to lose its parchment color. She had the grit to continue the same deep, slow breathing, and that was the end of her consumption.

It is laziness that prevents us from getting the air we need. It is a bore, and troublesome at first to remember to fill your lungs as full as they can hold with air at each inspiration letting the resulting contaminated air slowly and gently out at the nostrils but there is magic in it for the individual who will continue. The Bible saying that the breath is the life is exactly true. We draw into our bodies through the nostrils the very spirit of life itself. Thin blood is so because it is starved for oxygen. Give it plenty of that to work on, and its purifying fires will cleanse your body and set you free. Good, rich blood will take the place of the old, starved, thin fluid, your complexion will become white and red, your whole being elastic. Try it. Take in air like an ox drinking water—by the gallon—and you will see what wonders it will work. Then keep it up.

New St. Louis.

St. Louis is already the fifth in size among the cities of the land, and would be the fourth if Brooklyn were rated what she is in fact—the largest number of New York." writes Mr. Julian Ralph in Harper's Magazine. He tells us about the remarkable second growth which the fine old city has taken on within the past ten years. The inhabitants now claim a population of 500,000, and even its rivals do not deny to St. Louis 470,000 residents.

Mr Ralph's story illustrates strikingly what a city may become when its own citizens begin to hustle for it. A few years ago progressive men of St. Louis began to consider that their city was getting left in the march of progress. They resolved it should not be. The Merchants exchange inaugurated the new movement with a boom. They began to advertise their city. They started the Autumnal Festivities association which prepares a sort of Columbus celebration for St. Louis every fall, coming just after the leading crops are harvested. It has brought to the town money, fame and business.

A new tide of migration has set toward the southwest in the past decade. This passes through St. Louis and leaves its contribution as it goes. The city is the heart of a vast agricultural and mining territory whose future development cannot be fixed by the imagination at present. The town is not all huddled together, but its business district covers a large territory. It has 234 miles of street railway tracks, and most of them are traversed by electric and cable cars. New York would open its eyes in surprise at the size of these electric street cars. Some of them are twice as large as New York street cars. But a stranger from the east feels more at home in St. Louis than in any other western city. Mr Ralph says. He hastens to explain, however that this is nothing against St. Louis.

In a comparatively short time he prophesies that the city on the Mississippi will have a million inhabitants. Her greatest manufacturing industries are beer and tobacco. The city has the largest brewery on the continent, if not in the world, and she is at the head of the list in the trade in chewing and smoking tobacco.

St. Louis has one heart's desire at present. It is that the United States government *should so improve the Missis*sippi river from St. Anthony's falls to the gulf that it will have a channel twenty feet deep at all seasons of the year.

Does It Spoil the Child?

The Boston Sunday Globe has conferred a general favor by publishing a symposium which, if it does nothing else, gives information on the real origin of that lying old saw. "Spare the rod and spoil the child." Mr. John Kneeland, a scholarly member of the Boston school board, says it appears in a line from Hudibras. Most people think it is in the Bible.

It is encouraging to find that none of the writers who contribute to the collection is in favor of whipping children as a punishment. All of them except one are members of the Boston school board and this one is Mr. Edwin P. Seaver, superintendent of the public schools there. Mr. Seaver tells us that it is within the memory of living persons when school regulations began to be promulgated *forbidding the whip*ping of girls. Before that it was by no means uncommon to see a girl of marriageable age receive corporal punishment at the hands of a man not many years older than herself. If girls have not been spoiled since the practice of switching them in school was abandoned then perhaps boys would not be either.

Mr R. C. Metcalf speaks of the incorrigible boys who are too often got rid of by dismissing them from the schools and letting them run the street, whence in time they graduate finished criminals. They should not be dismissed. They should be put in a school to themselves where the wisest, strongest and most experienced teachers will have the task of reclaiming them and making men of them. This suggestion ought to be put into practice in all cities. In a school by themselves such boys could not corrupt other pupils, and they would be forced to behave themselves. If these boys were taken out of the general public school for its own well being and theirs, then in the judgment of Mr Metcalf corporal punishment might be abolished at once.

Mrs. Louise H. Hopkins, another member of the board, calls attention to one significant fact. In the schools where foreign children are taught English by the speaking and object lesson method there is never any need of whipping. The children are so interested in their lessons that they do not think of misbehaving. In the manual training departments the *same is true. 'Children who are occu*pied with productive work which interests them and develops their faculties have no temptation to mischief, and the relations between teacher and pupil are so natural and sympathetic that disobedience is unthought of." Here is a column in one sentence. If the course of study is such as to interest the pupil then the pupil is never unruly. Give the worst boy in a city something to do that he likes as well as mischief, and he will become gentle and tractable. This is the kindergarten idea, and the true idea of education. Mr. Seaver says: "In the kindergarten the rod is never used, and never will be so long as teachers are faithful to the doctrine of their great leader Froebel."

The right way seems to be to let the children understand that the rod can be used when necessary and then never use it. The right kind of a teacher can find methods of punishment that are better than the brutalizing process of whipping. She can gradually so interest her pupils minds that no punishment at all will be necessary. Whether parents can bring up their children without whipping depends on the amount of brains and intelligence possessed by the parents. The more brains, the less whipping, plenty of brains, then none at all.

A historic movement has been proceeding so quietly for the past ten years that few have noticed it at all. This is the return of the Jews to Palestine. So many have come thither that it begins to look almost as if the Bible prophecy were to be fulfilled. The ancient land now contains more than 100,000 of the chosen people. One of the first effects of this movement is an upward tendency in the Jerusalem real estate market. The country is being irrigated and cultivated. Waterworks of an improved pattern are being constructed, and electric lights of the Yankee type are already flickering from the street corners of the Holy City. Railways will soon crisscross Palestine like spider webs, and the improved system of agriculture which the wide awake Israelite immigrants have already introduced will give them business. There is no more hopeful sign on the whole horizon of civilization than this new movement of the Jews to Palestine.

Just wait till we get that great electric railway between Chicago and St. Louis. The cars will have very large driving wheels, will carry only high class freight in addition to passengers, presumably only high class, and will run 100 miles an hour. To prevent one train from running into another the road is divided into 10-mile sections each alternate section having the current switched off. To kill two birds with one stone, the power houses for the road are at the mouths of coal mines owned by the company along the road, and the mining is to be done by electricity.

In India when an eclipse of the sun occurs the natives regard it as a solemn religious event, and troop from all parts of the country by the thousand to bathe in the sacred Ganges while the shadow is on. It would not be a bad idea if some people had that kind of a superstition in the United States. They would get a bath at least once in their lives.

READY FOR THE BATTLE

The Campaign Ended and the Verdict at the Polls Awaited.

A GLANCE AROUND THE COUNTRY.

Reports from All of the States About Which the Element of Uncertainty Hangs or Which Are of Peculiar Interest in the Great Struggle of Tomorrow.

NEW YORK, Nov. 7.—It was intimated today by prominent Republicans at the Fifth Avenue hotel that a combination has been effected with certain candidates, whose names were not given, which would materially affect the result in New York city in favor of the Republican electoral ticket. The parties giving out this information were not inclined to go into details, but say that a surprise has been prepared for the Democrats.

It has also been discovered that the pasters sent out by Tammany Hall are wider than the size prescribed by the statute. It is claimed that these would be in effect a marked ballot, and would have to be thrown out by the inspectors as such.

The Republicans at state headquarters have gone carefully over this statute by counties, and have figured the result down so fine that Chairman Hackett predicts a plurality of 18,300 for Harrison.

On the other hand, a tabulated statement of the estimated result in the sixty *counties prepared by Democratic statis*ticians gives Cleveland a plurality of 29,500.

"The Republicans are confident that Tammany will not carry the city by over 85,000 votes, although the sachems talk of having 75,000 plurality. All talk of Hill Democrats knifing Cleveland has died out, but it is expected that many New Yorkers who usually vote the Democratic ticket did not desire a change in the administration, and in the absence of party enthusiasm will remain at home on election day.

"In 1888 Harrison came down to the Harlem river with a plurality of 85,464, and Republicans say he will not have less than 90,000 this year. To meet this vote the Democrats must have over 70,000 plurality *in this city, as Kings, Queens and Rich*mond are not counted upon for more than 19,000 by the most sanguine Democrats. Republicans therefore base their hopes of success in this state on their belief that Tammany cannot obtain a plurality of 70,000 votes.

FASHIONS

NEW EVENING BODICES.

Zouave and Eton Jackets of Lace to Be Worn Over Colored Slips.

Among the new evening bodices hardly anything prettier can be found than the model illustrated here, which is made of soft black silk, with a yoke of the same material in pale blue, covered with a dainty trellis work of narrow black ribbons studded with small jet sequins. The sleeves are made in the favorite fashion—full and baggy at the top, but tight in the lower part—and the flounce around the shoulders is black lace. The deep belt is black silk and the buckle gold. A pretty bodice for full dress occasions is of cream surah silk, the fullness of which is drawn under a deep belt like that of the one just described. The neck is cut low and quite round and trimmed with a frill of cream lace embroidered with pearls.

BODICE IN SILK, LACE AND JET.

*Other becoming bodices are of soft, del*icate colored silks, closely veiled with lace or the new spider web net. A good example is in pale blue, entirely covered with cream lace and finished with a pretty corselet belt of black velvet ribbons. Dressy blouses for day wear are of tartan silk or shot glace, and with immense sleeves and perhaps a plaited frill round the shoulders. One of the most delightful adjuncts to evening dress are the lace sortave and Eton jackets trimmed with bright ribbons. These are intended to be worn over colored slips. A pretty zouave is in cream lace, with short sleeves of the same, mixed with peach colored ribbons and a peach colored sash. A lovely combination for a tea jacket is moss green and coral pink, and a new model is of coral surah, with a moss green velvet band round the collar, waist and bottom of each sleeve. It has a lace corselet, a rather deep lace flounce below the waistband, lace ruffles hanging from the sleeves, and a soft, light bow at the neck. Another jacket is cream surah, with a deep row of narrow tucks, forming a sort of Swiss belt, and lace trimmings.

ELEVEN BLOODY DEATHS

The Last of the Texas Jaybird-Woodpecker Gang Killed.

SHOT DOWN BY A NEGRO DESPERADO

The Murder of United States Marshal Smith Leaves the Last Party to a Feud That Left a Trail of Blood and Riot Across the Lone Star State.

RICHMOND, Tex., Nov. 7.—The killing of Deputy United States Marshal Tom C. Smith in the Indian Territory by a large negro on board a train removes one of the most central figures of a Texas feud. At least a score of widows and several score of fatherless children owe their condition to Smith, for during his lifetime he committed many murders—at least he killed many men. His death recalls the notorious Jaybird and Woodpecker feud of this (Fort Bend) county.

The Jaybird faction was composed of the white Democracy of the county, while the Woodpecker party embraced white office holders who had been elected with the aid of negro votes and who controlled the politics of the county.

It was the desire to wrest the county from the control on the part of some of the Woodpecker officers that brought about the conflict. Feeling got so intense that personal encounters were numerous, and everybody in Richmond went armed.

The Feud Culminated.

While going home one night Henry Frost, who was known as the king of the Jaybirds, was shot. This added fuel to the fire, and a general fight seemed inevitable, but was suppressed. Next came the killing of Ed Gibson by Kyle Terry, nephew of Judge Terry. The whole of south Texas denounced this murder.

Finally, in the summer of 1890, the feud culminated in the battle on the streets of Richmond, in which the leaders on both sides were killed, several wounded and the Woodpeckers driven from the county, leaving the Jaybirds in full possession.

James Gurney was sheriff of Fort Bend county, and had also killed a man named Sherard. Under him was Tom Smith and another deputy named Mann. On the day of the final fight, as Garvey was coming out of the court house, the ball opened by a bullet from the Jaybirds, and Garvey fell mortally wounded. Smith, Mason, Wesley, Parker and others of the Woodpecker faction at once got into the action.

The Gang Wiped Out.

Smith grabbed Garvey's carbine, after he had been shot down, and went to work with telling effect, killing Henry Frost, the Jaybird king, and wounding several others, among them Volney Gibson, brother of the one assassinated by Kyle Terry.

When the fight ended Garvey, Frost, ex-Sheriff Hackney and a negro were dead and J. W. Parker, a lawyer, who the Jaybirds held responsible for all the trouble. Deputy Sheriff Mason, Volney Gibson and a Texas ranger were wounded by the Jaybirds, and the Woodpeckers at once became exiles.

Then followed the wholesale arrest of the citizens of Richmond by the United States authorities. When the cases came up in Galveston both sides were on hand, and as Kyle Terry entered the court house at Galveston he was shot to death by Volney Gibson. Volney Gibson died of consumption, and now Tom Smith is dead, leaving virtually none of the actual participants in the feud. A strange and sudden fatality has overtaken them all.

THIRTY-FIVE MEN DROWNED.

The Whaling Bark Helen Mac Crushed in an Arctic Ice Pack.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 7.—The steam whaler Belonga, which arrived here from the Arctic, brings the news of the destruction of the whaling bark Helen Mac, Captain Thaxter, and the loss of thirty-five of her men. Only five men were saved.

On Oct. 6, in latitude 71.30 north, longitude 169.30 west, the Helen Mac was crushed in the ice. The ice came in a rush and without warning. The steam and her boats were crushed to splinters, the officers and men having no time to lower a boat and get away.

The fifth mate, Ward; a boatsteerer, the cook and two sailors were the only men saved. They clung to the mainmast as it went over the ice. The rest of the crew, including Captain Thaxter, were either crushed to death or drowned. For forty-eight hours the five men clung to the mast, being finally taken off by the steam whaler Ocea.

FEARFUL TRAGEDY IN ALASKA.

TACOMA, Wash., Nov. 7.—The steamer Chilkat arrived here yesterday from Alaska. She left Fort Wrangle Oct. 22, and while there it was learned that four white men had been found in the camp at Port Bairy, Kuprenoff island, with their heads cut off and their clothing stripped from their bodies.

The crimes are supposed to have been committed by Kake Indians, as an outcome of the Edwards trouble last year, when John Edwards, a miner and explorer, was killed by the natives, who fancied he had got the better of them in some trivial matter.

The bodies of the murdered men were horribly mutilated and could not be identified. In two instances the heads had been struck on posts near by, and the flesh had been picked off by crows. The murdered men were miners.

An Interesting Budget of Gossip About Well Known Performers—Tony Pastor, the Kernells, Maggie Cline, Frank Bush, Bessie Bonehill and Others.

VARIETY is enthroned in New York city. Whether its reign will be a brief or protracted one will depend of course upon the manner in which it is presented. One would naturally suppose that the indisputable fizzle at the Casino would have discouraged managers from further attempts in that direction, but the effect, if there has been any, seems to have confirmed the pronunciators of the public amusement appetite to the theory that variety—or vaudeville, if you prefer the foreign term—is the special form of entertainment for which Americans generally, and New Yorkers particularly, have been yearning for, for these many years.

The Park theater is now devoted exclusively to vaudeville, and from what I can gather is making more money than for years past, and the new Empire Concert hall on Twenty Ninth street, adjoining the classical walls of Daly's theater, turns out with delightful speed and a fair proportion of success, for drinking and smoking are popular, and there is a continuous entertainment from o'clock until midnight. A large folding fan takes the place of a drop curtain and incidentally enables the proprietor to evade the provisions of the municipal liquor law. Besides Park and the Empire, the Eighth Avenue and Miner's Bowery theaters, as well as the London and Olympic, are devoted to variety, and they are all prospering.

While people in every line of legitimate theatrical effort are deploring into stars, there is a woeful dearth of first class variety performers, for as soon as most of those remake a decided hit in a one week stand. They rush off and lend a fares comedy or gamination. Therefore while there are exceptions it may be set down as a fact that the really great specialists of to day are relics of the old regime.

Harry Kernell, who was committed to an insane asylum but a short time ago, was perhaps the best Irish sketch man to plagiarize James Owen O'Connor. "that ever trod the American boards." There may be men living who will in time be better than Harry Kernell ever was in his palmiest days, but none of them will acquire such a hold upon the affections of the people. Harry Kernell, at the time of his affliction, was said to have been in receipt of an income of over $10,000 for the season of less than forty weeks.

Harry's brother John is said to have been a New York hack driver. He went on the stage, and when Joe Hart joined Harry and they constituted the foremost sketch team of America. But of course they separated. John is now "featured" in "Joe Hustler," a breezy nothing through which he walks, and in which he seems to please most people—especially John Kernell—immensely. Harry Kernell was an actor of his way, while John was only considered tolerably good because he slightly resembled Harry. Still he must receive a salary exceeding $5,000 a season.

Whenever the word "variety" is mentioned in America one name immediately suggests itself. Where is there who has not heard Tony Pastor, the "American king of vaudeville," with his high hat tipped jauntily forward and sufficiently to one side to appear rakish, sing in that peculiar voice of his a song which none understood, no one cared anything about and every one applauded? Nobody has ever been able to discover the secret of Tony Pastor's remarkable popularity. Many better variety singer than he would be glad to get steady employment at forty dollars a week. My theory is that people are grateful to Tony Pastor for the uniformly excellent specialty entertainments with which he has provided them for more than a quarter of a century, and they tolerate him for his past good deeds. Besides he has come to be regarded as a tradition, and the young theater goer feels that his education has been neglected unless he sees Tony Pastor's company. As "Mr. Pastor" appears at each and every performance, he is seen and heard every year by thousands of persons who regard him only with curiosity.

TONY PASTOR.

Tony Pastor is a New York product, pure and simple. It is said that his father kept a cigar store in Cortlandt street. He had three sons and they all went into the circus business. It is related that Tony sold lemonade for a starter. Whether this be true or not, it is certain that he graduated as a clown, and mighty good one too. Then Tony left the circus business and became a variety performer. He first struck out for himself in a business way when he secured control of a vaudeville house on the Bowery in the neighborhood of Grand street, which is now where the People's theater now stands. Then he got a down town Broadway house, and after a short stay there removed to his present location on Fourteenth street. He is entitled to distinction for being the first manager to pilot a traveling variety show to success.

Some of the well known singers and actors who have at different times served under Tony Pastor would occupy a good deal of space. Among these may be mentioned George S. Knight, Nat Goodwin, Denman Thompson, Gus Williams, Edward Harrigan, Tony Hart, Mattie Vickers, Nell Burgess, Carrie Swan, William J. Scanlan and the dear lady Lillian Russell, who now draws a salary of $1,200 a week as the prima donna of T. Henry French's opera company in "The Mountebanks." It is not surprising that the greater portion of the theatrical profession feels kindly toward "dear old Tony."

The most popular member of Tony Pastor's company, by long odds, is Maggie Cline, the buxom beauty who made "Mary Ann Kehoe," "Throw Him Down, McCloskey" and "Throw Her Down" herself famous at the same time. Miss Cline is said to receive a weekly salary of from $250 to $300. Leaving out of the question the matter of art, and considering only the box office problem, she is worth all she gets. It is not so very many years ago that Miss Maggie Cline was a "chair warmer" in one of those nondescript "first parts" so familiar to frequenters of variety theaters. She received a small—a very small—salary then, and there was nothing about her—not even her Sullivan shape—to indicate that she would ever become a New York fad.

BESSIE BONEHILL.

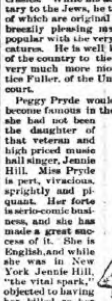
But one day a man named Casey got her to sing a song which he had written. That song was "Mary Ann Kehoe." The words were not beautiful, the music was bosser even, and Miss Cline's method of emitting both did not contain even a suggestion of Patti. Still, to use the vernacular, "the song turn went." "Mary Ann Kehoe," as interpreted by the associate Mayor of the most colossal sort of a hit. Any one who has heard this lady's substitute for singing need not be told that her voice is in keeping with her size—it is large, very large.

On the last day of October, 1889, a "male impersonator," named Bessie Bonehill, made her appearance on the stage at Tony Pastor's theater. Miss Bonehill is an English woman who began her theatrical career at the tender age of six and was the equally tender sal ary of "three bob the week." Why was then a fairy in the Christmas pantomime. By a singular coincidence the numerous biographies of Miss Bonehill to which I have had access all neglect to mention the date of her birth, which interesting event is merely referred to as having occurred in "Broomwich, a small town near Birming ham." But when she came to America after her English triumphs she pleased her audience immensely. She is an all around artist, being equally at home as an elocutionist, singer, dancer or musician, but she prefers doing sketches to make attire.

FRANK BUSH.

Frank Bush requires but a few words. He stands head and shoulders above all of his competitors as the burlesque impersonation of Hebrew character and idiosyncrasies. While his act is not complimentary to the Jews, he tells his stories, most of which are original with him, in such a breezily pleasing manner that he is most popular with the very race which he caricatures. He is well known from one end of the country to the other, and he earns very much more money than Chief Justice Fuller, of the United States supreme court.

Peggy Pryde would probably not have become famous in the variety "perfesh," if she had not been the daughter of that veteran and high priced music hall singer, Jennie Hill. Miss Pryde is pert, vivacious, sprightly and piquant. Her forte is serio-comic business, and she has made a great success of it. She is English, and while she was in New York Jennie Hill, "the vital spark," objected to having her billed as her daughter, but Miss Pryde has now reached that point where she does not require anybody's reflected glory. She is earning money very fast, and is saving it too.



PEGGY PRYDE.

Harry Miner, the proprietor of the People's and Fifth Avenue theaters, New York, and Miner's theater, Newark, laid the foundation of his magnificent fortune with a variety house. He will probably be elected to congress this fall, so it would appear that vaudeville brings political honors as well as "filthy lucre."

WOMEN AND THE BATH

IT IS REGARDED BY THEM AS A GREAT BEAUTIFIER.

How They Use It and Increase Its Effectiveness by Massage—Great Changes Wrought in Recent Years—Beauty's Baths in Other Countries.

There is no doubt that women are beginning to realize more and more the importance of the bath. It no longer continues to be a perfunctory duty, to be gone through with as a matter of course on Saturday night, much as the family wash ing is undertaken on Monday.

The relation of cleanliness to godliness has ceased to be of importance. The bath has grown to be considered, on the contrary, a close adjunct to woman's beauty. The fair sex have learned to study the bath and its effects upon their feelings, and incidentally the action of tepid or hot water on their fair skins and its efficacy in softening and beautifying their complexions.

No longer can it be said that with the majority of American women a bath means simply wiping the face with a corner of a wet towel, even if the statement was ever true.

The women of foreign countries in the past undoubtedly had a greater appreciation of the near relation of the bath to personal beauty than the women of the United States. That a great change in this direction has been wrought is evident from the greater intelligence shown by the American women today in the matter of bathing and their growing predilection for what is known as Swedish massage.

In nearly all the larger Turkish baths or hammam here in New York city special accommodations are provided for ladies, and the proprietor of a well known establishment assured me the other day that he had three women patrons today where he had one a few years ago.

Besides these regular public Turkish baths there are many young women who have very good Swedish rubbers and masseurs in the art of massage. Some of them are also manicures and hair dressers, but primarily they are massage operators.

These young women undoubtedly have a clientele which embraces a class of customers who can afford to pay well for what they want and do not hesitate to do so. Some years ago massage operators found their customers chiefly among invalids or people who were desirous of getting rid of their superfluous flesh. Today many women, young and old, take a thorough massage after their bath three or four times a week, and declare that besides softening and beautifying the skin it rests and soothes their entire nervous system. This massage they receive at home immediately after leaving the bath.

Massage, by the way, is a particular fad among those bright eyed, wholesome young women who affect tennis, riding, fencing and other athletic exercises which come within the feminine province. Immediately after finishing a bout with the foils, a set at tennis or a brisk dash in the park, there is nothing that a young woman finds more delightful than a dip in her porcelain bathtub, followed by the best part of an hour in the hands of an expert operator. When she has finished such a treatment she emerges from her boudoir the life of limb, graceful of carriage, her eyes dancing and her whole face aglow with health, a perfect picture of that of which we are all so proud, a comely American girl full of animal spirits and a native wit which has made her a favorite everywhere.

Long ago the women of the old countries appreciated the advantages of the bath and its power to enhance their personal charms. The almond eyed Japanese beauty, with her darker complexion and gentle manners, gives an added suppleness and smoothness to her skin by a nightly bath, and a morning dip in water as hot as she can stand. This plan, while it is said to work admirably with the Japanese women, would doubtless prove dangerous in this land of colds and rheumatisms.

English girls have never been noted like their American cousins for their taste in dress, but what they lack in chic they make up for in other ways. The healthy, fresh complexions and beautiful skin of English women have been the envy of the world over. Of course in England women go in for riding to hounds and all kinds of athletics, but I have it direct from the lips of an English mother that she believed that the beautiful complexions with which her daughters were blessed were due more than anything else to the plunges which they took in cold water every morning immediately after arising. The dip in cold water is followed by a brisk rubbing until the skin is all aglow and as soft and pliable as velvet. Of course there is considerable shock attendant upon a plunge in cold water, and it should never be attempted by weak or delicate girls, or, in fact, by any one whose skin does not assume a healthy, red hue after being vigorously rubbed.

The Frenchwoman as typified, at least, by the true Parisienne is nothing if not luxurious in her tastes. She pays the greatest attention to her bath and is also an ardent devotee of massage. After her morning bath, which she takes in lukewarm water, she indulges in a hasty shower bath, after which she lies down for her massage. Her passion for perfumes then leads her to be lightly sprayed with violet water, while scented orris powder is sifted into her hair by a carefully brushed out again later by her maid. After all this sort of thing is over you can imagine what the delightfully fragrant picture of health and sweetness the French belle presents when her toilet has been completed.

In Brazil the women are said to be partial to bathing in milk, but, never having been there or ever having had the pleasure of the sequaintance of a Brazilian belle, I cannot speak with authority on that point. It is well known, however, that milk has an excellent effect upon the complexion and is also very efficacious in softening the skin. It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to how the bathing should be indulged in, for what would be good for one would be dangerous for another. The best way is to remember that the bath is not to be regarded as an aid to cleanliness alone, but rather as an aid to health, personal attractiveness, to say nothing of the delightful sensation which are commonly supposed to attend upon early rising.—New York Herald.

One Way of Quieting a Child.

I was teaching my child—about five years old—to read. She did not wish to read at that time, and began to make a series of foolish noises, remaining at the same time perfectly dry eyed. I turned to do some writing, when, after a time, finding I paid no attention to the noise she was making, she said in her sweetest voice, "Don't I interrupt you, mother?" Upon my answering, "Not in the least, my dear," the noise was stopped, and she quietly resumed her reading.—Fanny Kemble in "Further Records."

A Little Game of Poker.

The following is Mr. Shuggevan's account of a little game of poker he participated in while down south:

Den we got down to playin and had a jacker, and de jacker was a dollar a trip, but I didn't put none in. All de odder mugs did though. Dey kept givin me cards just de same, 'cause de dealer didn't want to have no doctor's bills to pay. When der was about sixty dollars in de pot Sneakthief Facey says, "I'll open it for the limit."

"I'll raise yer ten dollars," says I.

"But yer can't do it; five dollars is de limit. Dat ain't no poker," says he. Being an ignorant cuss, his grammar was bad.

"De blazes I can't," says I, "I'rowin a chair at him.

"Cards!" says de dealer.

"Give me six," says I, holding up t'ree. "I'll stand," says Facey.

I fetched out me wad and plunks down a two dollar bill. Facey done the same and says, "Call I see." I reaches out me hand and rakes in de pot and stuffs it in me poke.

"Here's de hand wot wins dis jacker," says I, showin two queens and me flat.

"Two queens don't beat no four aces," says Facey, getting hot.

"Ye're a liar," says I, "and if you give me any guff I'll take the breese out of your whiskers."

They all laughed at me little joke and dat money kept me for two days.—New York Herald.

CITY COMMON COUNCIL.

THE REGULAR NOVEMBER MEETING HELD LAST EVENING.

A Number of Communications Presented.—Two Ordinances Pass on Second Reading.—Monthly Reports of City Physician, Treasurer, and Collector Received.—Routine Business.

The City Common Council met in regular session last evening. President Gaines, and Councilmen Bird, Case, Erickson, Fisk, Frazee, Marsh, See and Weber were present. Councilmen Gallup and Jonathon were absent.

The minutes of the two previous meetings were read.

During the reading of the minutes Mr. Marsh moved that the reading be temporarily suspended. Carried. He further moved that the regular order of business be suspended. Mr. Marsh moved that the bills and claims be referred to the proper committees without reading and afterward to the Auditing Committee, one member of which be allowed to report. The motions were all seconded and carried.

Upon motion the reading of the minutes was resumed and regularly approved.

A communication from residents of Hillside avenue asking that hack fares be reduced from fifty to twenty-five cents, was referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health.

A petition for a light on West Third street between Central avenue and New street was referred to the Committee on Streets and Public Health with power.

A petition for a light on Berkman street, between Front and Second streets, was referred to the Committee with power.

E. H. Ford, agent for Warren Ackerman, in a communication asked permission to erect a shed on East Sixth street. As the petition did not state the size of the building it was referred back for correction.

A communication from the W. C. T. U. showing illustration and plans of their proposed drinking fountain was referred to the committee on Streets and Public Health.

Mayor Gilbert, in a communication nominated Jeremiah Cross as special policeman. The nomination was upon motion confirmed.

A communication from Corporation Counsel Craig A. Marsh regarding the claims of E. H. Thorn for damages caused by an alleged collision with Zephyr Hook and Ladder Truck whereby his carriage had been injured, said the city was not legally liable to pay the claim. The communication was, upon motion, received and placed on file.

A communication was read which stated that cancelled bonds of the Fire Department had been destroyed. Ten of the bonds were for $500 each and nineteen for $1,000 each.

The report of the City Physician, J. A. Allis, was received and placed on file. It showed that a total of 105 visits had been made.

The monthly statements of the Collector of Taxes and of the City Treasurer for September were read and ordered received and placed on file.

Mr. Fisk read a statement of the Finance Committee which showed a balance in the General Fund of $1,019.15, in the Fire Department Fund $250.80 and $72.37 in the Poor Fund.

He said that next month's budget will require for the General Fund $5,680.08, for the Fire Department $730.54 and for the Poor Fund $470.

Mr. Fisk moved that the General Fund return $400 of temporary loan to the Poor Fund. So ordered.

Mr. Fisk moved that $4,500 be borrowed, on a ninety days note, for use of the General Fund, in anticipation of 1892 taxes. Carried.

Mr. Fisk moved that the Mayor be authorized to borrow, $450, on a ninety days note, for fire department purposes. Carried.

Mr. Case reported back the Mayor's veto of the ordinance for the laying out and opening of Sycamore street, and offered a new ordinance, which he explained had been carefully drawn by Corporation Counsel Marsh to meet the objections of the Mayor. The ordinance passed two readings and was upon motion ordered duly engrossed and advertised, notice to be given to the property holders.

Mr. Case presented a new ordinance to macadamize West Third street from Madison avenue to Plainfield avenue, in place of the previous ordinance which had been reported back. The ordinance passed two readings and was ordered duly engrossed and advertised.

Mr. Erickson moved that a vote of thanks be extended to Mr. J. F. MacDonald for his efficient services to the city in procuring a suitable site for the engine house. So ordered.

Mr. Fisk nominated William C. Ayers as Commissioner of Appeals to succeed Manning W. Vermeule, deceased. The nomination was, upon motion, adopted.

Mr. See stated that the overcoats for the hose drivers of the fire department cost $22.50 each and moved that an additional appropriation of $10 be made to cover a total of $90 instead of $80. Carried.

Mr. Marsh offered an amendment to section 1 of the ordinance to macadamize West Third street, making it read "fifteen cents per linear foot on each side of the street" instead of "thirty cents per linear foot. The amendment caused some discussion and previous ordinances were referred to showing that the correct phraseology was the same as embodied in the ordinance submitted. Mr. Marsh thereupon withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Case offered a resolution to appropriate $1,000 from general fund for work on streets, which was adopted.

Mr. Marsh's motion to have placards of "private" and "no admittance" printed for use on the doors of the Council antechambers was carried.

Mr. See asked if the report of the Special Commissioners on the widening of Peace street had been submitted, stating that the street was now almost impassable. He was informed that nothing definite had yet been done.

The Auditing Committee reported all bills correct and the clerk was, upon motion, authorized to draw up warrants.

Council adjourned at 9.25 o'clock.

BREVITIES

—Policeman Frederickson last night arrested a man by the name of Crosby for being drunk.

—Workmen have just finished curbing the gutter on one side of Park avenue, from Fifth to Sixth streets.

—A bowling match has been arranged between the Crescent League and the Park Club, to take place Thursday evening next.

—A regular meeting of the Plainfield Bicycle Club will be held on Monday, Nov. 14, at eight o'clock, p. m., in the club house.

—The flower show at the Short Hill street house near Springfield will be continued until Nov. 9th. Numbers of Plainfield people have visited the house.

—The Somerset Wheelmen of Somerville, have joined the West End Athletic Society. They will have their own officers, however, as a cycling division.

—President Harrison has issued his Thanksgiving proclamation, and like all his official documents, it is in every way excellent. The day he sets apart is Thursday, the 24th of this month.

—The Elizabeth and Plainfield Street Railway Company has asked permission of the Elizabeth Council to operate its line with electricity. The matter is now in the hands of the Street Committee.

—Among the most remarkable inventions at the recent paper exhibit at Berlin was a set of paper teeth made by a Lubec dentist in 1878. They have been in constant use for more than thirteen years, and show absolutely no wear whatever.

—The preacher who undertakes to divorce his pulpit from politics, is virtually admitting that the laws of morality have no application to political action. Such an admission is, logically, a defeat of Senator Ingalls' statement that the Golden Rule and the Decalogue have no place in politics.—Exchange.

—During the past few years the business of accident insurance has greatly increased in this country, and nearly as many men now hold accident policies of some kind as there are those who hold life policies. By experts it is considered a pretty good form of insurance.

—The Democrat leaders announced last week that Senator McPherson would address a mass meeting in Music Hall last night, though they knew last week that he would not be here, using his name to deceive the voters. Ex-Gov. Fairchild and A. M. Murphy addressed the meeting, which was well attended.

—A boy selling pea nuts had no measure. He sold eight for a cent, but inquirers thought them dear and did not buy. Later he said, "I give for a cent as many as you can take up in your hand," and this apparently more liberal offer built up a lively trade. The boy had discovered that taking one person with another, the average handful was less than eight. Advertisers may learn a valuable lesson from this incident. A great deal depends upon the way an offer is worded.

Park Avenue Baptists' New Pastor.

The Rev. J. W. Richardson, late of Brooklyn, the newly elected pastor of the Park Avenue Baptist church, is expected to begin his labors in that church next Sabbath, where he will preach both morning and evening.

The evening service, while including a sermon by the enthusiastic preacher, will take the form of a praise service, at which Mrs. E. E. Spicer, from Brooklyn, who so often delighted lovers of sweet music, will sing the soprano solo, "I Will Extol Thee," from the Oratorio of Elijah, and assisted by the church choir will render the "Inflammatus" from Stabat Mater.

The evening service will begin at 7:45 o'clock

That Flower Show.

The ladies of the Seventh Day Baptist church, are to have a flower show at No. 17 Crescent avenue, as advertised elsewhere.

A few hours to-night could be passed there very pleasantly.

THE NEWS' PREDICTION.

Reasons for the Faith Within Us—Studies of the Figures, on the Electoral and the Popular Vote—Comparisons and Deductions.

In the campaign of 1888 THE NEWS had the honor of being not only the first paper in the United States to predict Harrison's election, but also to predict that it would be the greatest Republican victory since 1872. This prediction we kept in our columns for months before the election took place, so firm were we in the conviction that it would be verified.

More than this, we gave beforehand the vote by States and came the closest of any paper in the country, so far as we know—certainly closer than any of the New York papers.

For the greater portion of this campaign we have felt that hind sight would be safer than foresight.

The reason for this uncertainty was not so much the attitude of the leaders, as it was the vote of 1890. It showed the importers to be a new element of power, whose strength had not even been suspected. Perhaps, even to this day, how the principal cause of Republican defeat in the Congressional elections of 1890 was made to operate is not suspected by many even thoughtful people.

The importers concluded that they would concentrate their strength in an effort to prejudice the women of the country against the tariff, before its good effects were felt, and rely upon the women influencing voters.

It was worked in this way: The importer would say to the retailer the price of these goods is increased so much because of the McKinley bill. It might be just as well to impress that fact upon the women's minds when they come to buy. It will help the cause of Free Trade. The usually keen-sighted women did not see that the increase would disappear as it has as soon as the bill got fairly in operation.

The plan worked as it was expected it would and the Republicans were caught napping.

It is very clear now how great this influence was. The following will show it better:

	Importe r——
	—Retailer—		—Retailer—
	Women—	Women—	Women—	Women—
	Husbands	Fathers	Husbands	Fathers
	Brothers	Friends	Brothers	Friends

Now consider that idea extended throughout every village in the land. It touched the pocket—that most potent and sensitive agency.

But we have now so much confidence in the good influence of the Republican policy that we offer this prediction of the result of to-day's election, certain that the prediction will not be near as wild as has been published the other way in leading New York Democratic and Mugwump organs:

The Electoral Vote.

The Democrats were encouraged by the result of the Congressional election of two years ago.

They selected Cleveland as their standard bearer because of his supposed strength with the masses, who seemed to give him the popular vote, as appeared to be shown in the campaign of 1888.

Now, bad as the times are, and notice where Cleveland's majority comes from. Where would it be without Texas? There the bullet rules the ballot, and Republicans are murdered—as in the case of Congressman Clayton for "creating information as to the polls, and demanding that all votes be honestly counted as cast. Repeaters in Texas vote over and over again on different names each time, the names being those of men who have been dead for years, and in this way probably alone making enough votes to deceive the confiding as to public sentiment.

Even with the intimidation in southern States generally, Harrison, omitting Texas, had nearly 50,000 majority on the popular vote. Texas alone—the Free Trade State because of its cotton and cattle interests—gave Cleveland his majority.

Here is the table:

Studying this table and the causes named we feel confident that Harrison will be elected by a larger majority than before. And because of a better chance this time for an honest election in New Jersey, we are confident that too will go Republican.

The Electoral College.

To leave the domain of what may be and enter the arena of what is, a study of the status of the electoral college will prove interesting.

Its increased representation of 43 votes this year, which brings the number of members up to 444, as against 401 in 1888, was caused by the admission to statehood of the territories of Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Washington and Wyoming. These states will have 9 electoral votes each this year, except South Dakota and Washington, which will have 4 each. The remaining 23 new votes are distributed among the older states under the new congressional apportionment bill—the result of the census of 1890.

The states which went Republican in 1888 gained under the new apportionment the number of electoral votes following:

California	1	Nebraska	3
Connecticut	1	Oregon	1
Illinois	2	Pennsylvania	2
Kansas	1	Wisconsin	1
Massachusetts	1
Michigan	1	Total	16
Minnesota	2

The states which went Democratic in 1888 have gained under the new apportionment the votes following:

Alabama	1	New Jersey	1
Arkansas	1	Texas	1
Georgia	1
Missouri	1	Total	7

	'92.	'88.		'92.	'88.
Alabama	11	11	Montana	3	..

There is a very heavy vote.

Everything points to an over whelming Republican victory.

PERSONAL.

Miss Pack, of Connecticut, has accepted a position as teacher in the Bryant school.

Messrs. W. MacLoughlin and E. Johnson left this city for a day's hunt at North Branch, this morning.

Invitations have been issued for the marriage of Mr. S. E. Springer and Miss Emily Phillips, both of this city, on Tuesday, Nov. 15.

The marriage of Mr. Charles Grant and Miss Lizzie Path, of Scotch Plains will take place to-morrow afternoon, at the home of the bride's parents, in that place.

Another handsome residence is to be added to Plainfield's long list. Mr. Frank O. Herring of Ninth street has given out contracts for the building of a house on Park avenue, opposite that of Mr. M. F. T. Pinch's.

Yesterday's Wreck.

The wreck on the Central Railroad near Fanwood, which occurred yesterday afternoon, referred to in yesterday's NEWS, was a disastrous affair, as was at first supposed. Seventeen gondola coal cars were piled up, blocking all but one track. It took until early this morning to clear the track. It was caused by an engine of a coal train running into the caboose of another train. The engine was considerably damaged also.

Plainfield Will Do Its Duty.

At the recent political mass meetings in Plainfield, the Republicans outnumbered the Democrats five to one. Look for a big republican majority for the whole ticket in Plainfield this year. And it may as well be understood that Westfield and Crescent and Roselle will not be in the background.—Elizabeth Journal.

—The silver dollars of 1798, 1838, 1839, 1851 and 1852 are worth $25 each, while that of 1807 is valued at $15. Silver half dollars of 1798 and 1796 are worth $25 each.

"SMOKER AND ENTERTAINMENT."

A Successful Affair Given by the Crescent League.

The Crescent League held a "Smoker and Entertainment" at their club house last evening. The rooms were crowded with members and their friends, who enjoyed themselves indulging in the "weed," while there were being entertained with musical and vocal selections.

The first number on the programme was a vocal march song by Messrs. G. O. Stevens, B. E. Teel, W. Runyon and E. T. Barnes, which was exceptionally well rendered.

The "Surprise" of the evening, on the programme as selected, proved to be an agreeable surprise in the form of a boxing match between two young men from the Hudson County Athletic Club.

Mr. F. S. Green gave a recitation entitled "Anger and Exasperation," which was hugely enjoyed by those present.

"Like the Woodland Roses" rendered by a quartette composed of Messrs. M. C. VanArsdale, G. O. Stevens, W. Runyon and E. T. Barnes received well-merited applause.

An instrumental solo by Mr. McClymont, which was followed by a vocal solo by Mr. W. Runyon, and some popular airs by the pianist wound up the evening's entertainment. Every one of the large number present agreed that they had spent an enjoyable evening.

A BIG RACK TRACK DEAL.

No event in sporting circles since the transfer of the Saratoga race track to the owners of the Guttenburg race course has as much significance as the recent leasing of the Monmouth Park track by a new syndicate, which will control that property for the next five years.

For about six months past a party of five wealthy Jerseymen, whose names are withheld by request, two of whom are residents of Newark, have been conducting negotiations with the Monmouth Park Racing Association for the purpose of obtaining control of the great racing property at Branchport, and the result of the conferences has been that the new syndicate has accepted the terms of the racing association to pay $100,000 a year for five years and obtain sole control of the property for that term. The reason for the transfer is not stated, but it is said that the racing association, while netting a good interest on their investment, were satisfied to grant a lease for the track to the new syndicate in order to be relieved of the annoyances to which they have been subjected by law and order people.

Each of the five members of the syndicate has subscribed $20,000, which will be paid at once to the racing association as the first year's rental for the property. It is computed that the income from the lease will net the association about 10 per cent. on the original investment.

BIG FIRE AT METUCHEN.

The Greason $10,000 Residence Totally Destroyed.

A large and costly house belonging to Mrs. George Greason of Metuchen was burned Saturday morning.

The fire had gained such headway before the fire was discovered that it was impossible to subdue them.

Mr. G. W. Newman had just rented the property and lost all of his household goods.

There was no water near the place, as the house is situated between this city and Metuchen, in the country.

The Hook and Ladder Company of Metuchen turned out and tried to save the building, but the scarcity of water rendered their help useless.

The house was valued at $10,000 and it is said was well insured. It is not known what caused the fire.

"Dead Broke" Wylie Wins His Bet.

Harry Hilliard Wylie, the "dead broke" cyclist, bumped up against a wheel in front of the City Hall, Chicago, at 5.05 o'clock Sunday afternoon, having pedaled his way from New York to that city in less than twenty days.

Wylie made his trip on a wager with two New York sporting men, one of its provisions being that he was to beat his way and not spend a cent for either food, drink or lodging.

Wylie had a barrel of fun and lived on the fat of the land at that. Landlords were glad to have him shake his hat for meals and lodging.

Wylie arrived in this city on the morning of October 17th. He presented his card to a Plainfielder. On the back of it was written: "Please deliver to Mr. Wylie one good square meal of a night's lodging, and charge the same to account of humanity. Respectfully, Put your good nature, No. 7 Hope street, Kingdom Come." He got a "good square meal" and passed on.

John Kean Jr., and the Chinese Question.

In regard to a circular which had been issued by the Democrats in reference to John Kean, Jr.'s stand on the Anti-Chinese Bill, the following letter was received by a Plainfielder in answer to a letter he sent the Gubernatorial candidate, in which he enclosed one of the circulars:

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 5, 1892.

Frederick Wilcox, Esq.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter just received with enclosure.

I did vote for the anti-Chinese bill, which afterwards received the approval of the President and is now the law in force.

Respectfully,
JOHN KEAN, JR.

PILING UP THE VERDICT

The Battle of the Ballots After a Remarkable Campaign.

THE NEW FACTORS IN THE FIGHT.

A Review of the Conditions That Have Obtained to Make the Present Election One of the Most Unique in the History of Our Great Country.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—With the battle of the ballots this closes with the lengthening shadows of today there passes into history one of the most remarkable presidential campaigns in many respects that this country has ever witnessed, and not the least singular phase of the contest is the fact that the excitement and enthusiasm which ordinarily culminate in the fierce struggle to vote votes after the months of campaigning have been selected in this instance reached a climax with both the great parties in the nominating conventions, which were preceded by partisan factional bitterness and strife to control the choice of those bodies that were almost unparalleled.

In this connection it is worthy of note that as in each convention there were practically but two candidates—Harrison and Blaine, and Cleveland and Hill—so in each convention did a majority clear the defeated candidate was the most magnetic leader. The mention of his name eliciting by far the wildest manifestations of applause from the spectators than did that of his successful competitor—the demonstration in the case of James G. Blaine having been beyond all precedent.

Then came the heartburnings, more pronounced than usual, of the legions of defeated partisans of the "Plumed Knight" and the "Statesman of Albany," and the conventions were succeeded by an era of "innocuous desuetude," of political activity. Democrats asserted that the success of Maine was striking and that his friends would desert Harrison. Republicans charged that Hill was disgruntled and that his followers would be disgruntled. But in due time came Blaine's letters and his speech at Ophir farm, and Hill took the stump, earnestly advocating the election of Cleveland.

A Clean and Studious Campaign.

The croakers thus silenced, the campaign was launched in dead earnest. Both national headquarters became a daily scene of feverish anxiety and intense activity, but as a rule all over the country the great mass of the people seemed to be out of touch with the spirit of wild enthusiasm that usually marks a presidential canvass, and thoughtful study of the issues presented apparently supplanted the "whooping up" methods that had gone before. The silent voter will prove a great factor in the election today.

The campaign has been noteworthy also in its cleanness of discussion. The speakers have as a rule confined themselves to an analysis of the platforms of the two parties, and vituperation has not been tendered as the current coin of argument. Indeed, White-law Reid has in several of his speeches referred to Grover Cleveland in most flattering terms, and Senator Hill has repeatedly eulogized President Harrison in his campaign addresses. The gloom of death which was cast over the canvass was as feelingly referred to by Democratic meetings as it was by Republican assemblies, and the illness of President Harrison in the heat of a presidential contest marks the first instance of its kind in our political history.

A unique feature of the campaign has been the suspicion with which the general result has been regarded by the betting fraternity—those who, as observers, so carefully and carefully analyze conditions and stake their money, not on sympathy, but to win.

They evidently were completely at sea, for not until about the closing days of the campaign were bets any way freely offered or taken, and even then they were mostly in comparatively small amounts and on even terms. It can be recorded as a fact, too, that despite all the brag and bluster to the effect that hundreds of thousands of dollars were being placed over only a few bookmakers, the betting has been remarkably tame and out of all proportion to the amounts similarly wagered in previous presidential contests.

Three New Factors.

The most striking characteristics of this election, though, are the three new factors which it brings into national politics, and which may in some measure account for the uncertainty that pervaded some political circles and caused the betting caution in the professional bettor's cranium to assume abnormal proportions.

These are the advent of the People's party in the great and northwest, the extended use of the Australian or kindred system of balloting, and the decision of the United States supreme court which permits Michigan to select her presidential electors by congressional districts instead of collectively.

To what extent these features will accrue to the benefit of the Democrats or Republicans the story of the ballots silently piled up today will tell. The People's party undoubtedly has an able leader in the death of Colonel Polk. Had he lived some of the dissensions that have obtained in that party would either never have occurred, or would have been smoothed over and a better showing made than is now likely to result.

However, as it is, the leaders of the Populists are making big claims. They not only declare that they will elect enough congressmen to give them the balance of power in the next house, but confidently assert that their party will carry half a dozen states and that the electoral college of a majority of votes, thus throwing the election for president into the house of representatives. How correct these claims are remains to be seen.

To some extent, too, both of the great parties have played into the hands of the People's party. For instance, in a few of the Southern states, where the Populists had gained a foothold and the Democrats were supposed to be weak or wavering, the Republicans refused with the People's party, hoping thereby to wrest the states involved from Cleveland; and in some of the western states, where Republican success was endangered by the advent of the Populists, the Democrats have withdrawn their electors in favor of the People's party candidates, believing they will thus succeed in defeating the votes of those states for Harrison.

Which of the parties will be the gainer by these tactics, is another problem, the solution of which lies buried in the nation's safety valve—the ballot box.

Michigan's Problem.

Should Michigan's vote has always been cast for the Republican nominees for president and vice president. In the election today, by the operation of Miner law, the presidential electors are selected by congressional districts for the first time, and the state will thus be lifted out of the Republican column and its representation in the electoral college divided. Here again the People's party steps in as a factor, for while under the old law the state would be either Republican or Democratic and the Populists shut out from its electoral representation, there is a possibility in today's contest that one of the People's party electors may be chosen.

And this brings us face to face with another very large element of uncertainty, in case Michigan's one possible Populist electoral vote, or any other combination of People's party electoral votes, gave the balance of power in the electoral college to the latter party by depriving the Republican or Democratic electors of a majority vote.

There are 444 electoral votes. The number necessary for a choice by the electors is 223. If when the electors vote in their respective states for president no candidate receives 223 votes there is no election by the electors, there is no election by the electors, and the choice of the next president is determined by the house of representatives. In the house of representatives the vote is taken by states, all the representatives from each state having only one vote, and the ballot is continued until the house of representatives, voting by states, elects.

Every state has an equal vote for president in an election by the house of representatives, and there would be no question who would be elected should the election devolve on the present house of representatives. The present house is about two-thirds Democratic, and by states shows a large Democratic majority, making the result, should the election fall in the present house of representatives, a sure thing for Mr. Cleveland.

A Possible Complication.

This assurance that the house of representatives would elect Mr. Cleveland, should it have the opportunity, makes an additional complication in the possibilities of the situation. Should it be apparent that neither Mr. Cleveland nor Mr. Harrison carried a majority of the electors, the Weaver and Harrison electors would know that, in casting their votes for the candidates of their respective conventions, they would really be voting for Mr. Cleveland as surely as though they gave their votes to him direct.

There is no legal obligation on an elector to require him to cast his vote for one more than another man, provided they are both qualified under the constitutional requirements. The constitution provides that the president must be a native born citizen, over thirty-five years of age and for fourteen years a resident within the United States. That is the only restriction beyond the moral or personal obligation to bind the individual electors. No courts would sustain the right of an elector voting for Harrison or a Harrison elector from voting for Weaver.

The theory of the constitution is that the president is really elected by the electors, who are chosen by the people on account of their superior wisdom, intelligence and judgment to meet and agree among themselves on the best man for the office. There is no legal restriction on their choice further than that the man whom they vote for shall be eligible under the constitutional requirements.

In previous elections the electors have been held by the ties of their pledge and their personal honor to vote for the man for whom they were elected to vote. In this election the question may arise as to how far these ties are binding on the part of the electors, the object of their pledges by observing them literally. In other words, it may be a question of great political moment whether the Harrison and Weaver electors must vote for Harrison and Weaver, or whether they could honorably combine and vote for some one else.

The Elector's Implied Pledge.

It has already been discussed among politicians eminent in the counsel of their party what should be done in case this contingency should become a fact. It seems to be a general opinion among politicians that the Republican national committee would have the power to release the Republican electors from the implied pledge to vote for Harrison, and that the national committee of the People's party would have the power to release the People's electors from voting for Weaver. That would leave the electors free from their original pledge, but there would still remain the implied obligation to vote in accordance with the wishes of the majority of their party, and this obligation may be still further extended to pledge them to vote as their national committee suggested.

Much the more would this new obligation rest should conventions of the Republican and the People's parties be called to meet between election day and the meeting of the electors to decide in convention what the wishes of their parties were and what they wanted to have their electors do. It would then be a question for the Republicans to consider whether they would rather have some man on whom they and the People's party would agree or Mr. Cleveland.

For the first time in a presidential campaign the Australian or reform ballot system is in use in over thirty states. While all three parties claim to be benefited by the introduction of this system, it is almost universally conceded that the initial operation of the law is accompanied by a reduction of nearly 2 per cent. in the vote cast. And while it is fair to assume that this reduction will be equally divided between the parties, yet that assumption has yet to be demonstrated, and thus another element of uncertainty is established.

The State Elections.

Besides the battle for presidential electors which is going on in every state of the Union today, elections are also holding in all the states for members of the house of representatives with the exceptions of Maine, Oregon and Vermont, where representatives have already been chosen. In the case of Vermont the senatorial contest has also been decided, Senator Proctor having been selected some months ago as his own successor.

The various states are balloting for officials as follows:

Alabama,	Iowa,
Arkansas,	Ohio

The House of Representatives.

In importance only second to the election of a president and vice president is the control of the United States senate and congress. The national house of representatives at present consists of 224 Democrats, 86 Republicans and 8 Farmers' Alliance men. There is one vacancy in the California delegation (Republican), occasioned by the resignation of Joseph McKenna; one in that of Maryland (Democrat), occasioned by the election of Representative Gibson to be United States senator, and three others (Democrats) caused by deaths.

The overwhelming Democratic majority every one expects to see reduced by the results of the election Tuesday. To what extent the managers are just as widely divergent as they were as in respect to the vote to be cast in the electoral college for president and vice president.

Upon one point, however, both Democrats and Republicans appear to be agreed, and that is that the Farmers' Alliance, or third party, will send about a score of representatives to the Fifty-third congress.

Democrats expect them to come from the northwestern and far western states. Republicans assert that the larger part of them will come from the south. Republicans concede that the Farmers' Alliance representatives will hold the balance of power in the house in the next congress, and Democrats, on the other hand, maintain that they will control the house by a Democratic majority ranging from 30 to 35 votes. The total number of Democratic representatives whose election is claimed as sure by the party managers is 183, or only 4 more than a majority of the total house, whose membership will number 356.

This claim includes 6 from Alabama, 3 from Connecticut, 2 from Massachusetts, 6 from Michigan, 3 from New Jersey, 27 from New York, 6 from North Carolina, 7 from Pennsylvania, 13 from Texas, 8 from Virginia, 2 from West Virginia and 6 from Wisconsin. There were conceded to the Republicans 129, the remainder being classed as doubtful or committed to the Farmers' Alliance candidates. The estimated number of these latter was 20, leaving 34 districts to be battled for by the two great parties.

The Balance of Power.

The claims of the Republican congressional managers are not so definite as those of their opponents. The Republican congressional campaign committee say they are certain of only 142 Republican representatives and 138 Democrats, leaving, after deducting twenty-four Farmers' Alliance districts, fifty-two districts in the doubtful column.

This claim includes 15 congressmen from New York, 15 from Ohio, 13 from Illinois, 3 from Indiana, 7 from Kansas, 2 from Kentucky, 1 from Louisiana, 10 from Massachusetts, 6 from Michigan, 1 from Missouri, 3 from Nebraska, 2 from New Hampshire, 8 from New Jersey and 17 from Pennsylvania.

All but one district in North Carolina is in the doubtful column on account of the Farmers' Alliance, all of West Virginia are doubtful, and seven districts in Pennsylvania are doubtful.

There were 37 representatives elected to the Fifty-second congress by less than 1,000 plurality—15 Republicans and 22 Democrats.

It cannot be argued, however, respecting these that a change of 500 votes or less in each of the several districts would reverse the result of the election of two years ago, for the reason that many of the districts, because of new apportionments under the last census, no longer exist in the same form that they did then. But it is undoubtedly true that as many of the new districts on the basis of the rate of that year are as close now as those were then.

Taking all these figures into consideration, if the Farmers' Alliance sends as many representatives to congress as both the old parties are willing to concede, the probabilities are that the balance of power in the next house will lie with that party. Should these concessions prove to be too liberal, the Democrats will control by a greatly reduced majority. That the Republicans will regain control is apparently out of the question.

The United States Senate.

The legislatures of twenty-two states whose members will be chosen today will have the selection of successors to fourteen Republican and eight Democratic United States senators whose terms expire March 3, 1893.

The Republican senators who go out are Felton, California; Hawley, Connecticut; Dawes, Massachusetts; Stockbridge, Michigan; Davis, Minnesota; Sanders, Montana; Paddock, Nebraska; Stewart, Nevada; Hiscock, New York; Casey, North Dakota; Quay, Pennsylvania; Allen, Washington; Sawyer, Wisconsin, and Warren, Wyoming.

The Democrats are: Gray, Delaware; Pasco, Florida; Turpie, Indiana; Cockrell, Missouri; Blodgett, New Jersey; Bate, Tennessee; Faulkner, West Virginia, and Mills, Texas.

Of the Republican senators whose terms expire, Hawley, Stockbridge, Paddock, Stewart, Hiscock, Allen and Sawyer represent states which are claimed by both sides.

The expectations of the Farmers' Alliance, if they are well founded, place the seats of several senior senators in jeopardy, and the complexion of the next senate may undergo a considerable change as a result of today's election. The Republicans look to retaining the senate, whatever the presidential result may be, as a bulwark against tariff legislation. The Democrats are planning to increase their representation in the upper house, and the Farmers' Alliance is scheming to secure the balance of power.

The Democrats claim that they will elect legislatures which will return Democrats in place of all Democratic senators whose terms expire, and also in place of the Republican incumbents in New York, Connecticut, Michigan and Wisconsin, and the Farmers' Alliance expects to capture senatorships in Nevada, Nebraska and Washington.

This would mean a loss to the Republicans of seven United States senators, and would make the upper house stand: Democrats, 43; Republicans, 40; Farmers' Alliance, 3.

Will Cause Some Lively Figuring.

This would practically give the Farmer's Alliance the balance of power in the senate, as they could, by voting with the Democrats, give them a working majority, or by voting with the Republicans give them a majority of 3.

The Republican leaders, however, do not concede the loss of any of the seven senatorships. They admit that these states will be close so far as the legislative vote is concerned, but claim their chance of winning in these states is better than that of the Democrats. They are particularly confident of the result in Connecticut, Nebraska, Michigan and Wisconsin, and they are reaching out in other states after Democratic senatorships.

In the former state Senator Higgins is going for the election of a Republican colleague in place of Senator Gray.

In West Virginia Stephen B. Elkins has made a personal canvass, upon which he predicts the election of a Republican legislature as well as the Harrison electors. This would result in a Republican successor in place of Senator Faulkner. The Republicans are also confident of gaining a senatorship in Indiana.

In New York the redistricting of the state by the Democratic legislature resulted in an advantage which may give them the choice of Senator Hiscock's successor, even if the state is carried for Harrison.

The Republicans admit that the Farmers' Alliance will gain the Nevada senatorship, but say they are chasing rainbows when they claim Nebraska, Washington, Montana and Wyoming.

Taken altogether there will be some lively figuring on the status of the three parties in the senate when the votes are counted tonight.

FASHIONS

Fashion Ignores the Stout Woman.

It is a painful thing to inform the stout woman that fashion is treating her with greater neglect than ever. But such is the case. In fact the people who make the new things seem to be ignoring her altogether, and what with short waisted sweeping skirts, shadow, shoulder frills and big sleeves it is difficult to see that the poor thing will do presently.

A PARIS EVENING GOWN.

The "baby" frock in the illustration will be one of the prevailing styles for evening wear, and surely no one would like to see a stout lady in a dress like that. It may be made of flowered brocade, with a yoke of embroidered net, and watered ribbon sash, or of crepon or silk crepe over silk, with sleeves and yoke of brocade. The sleeves would, to most eyes, be prettier if finished with frills of cream lace. This sketch came from Paris, and the designer of it tells that this kind of simple, short waisted robe is quite the latest thing there.

Items About Bridal Gowns.

Ivory satin makes a much more becoming wedding dress than dead white brocade, its beautiful soft sheen not being half so trying to the wearer's face, which, as a rule, is either extremely red or absolutely without color.

A lovely wedding gown worn recently was of ivory satin and had an empire velvet belt, fastened in front with a diamond clasp, and large velvet sleeves with deep lace frills. The bodice was cut a little low at the throat and lightly trimmed with lace, and the skirt had a moderate train.

The New Gold Bracelets.

The new gold bracelets are extremely pretty. They are sectional, but closely fitting. Some of these are covered with raised dots and have the appearance of a coarse cord on one band; others have the folded tape designs seen in sleeve buttons; others, knots of gold and plaitwork. An altogether new design is a snakelike arrangement of oval coins.

Fashion's Echoes.

Magenta pink is one of the new shades for evening dress.

Shot serge is becoming and serviceable material for a winter dress.

Metre antique in shot effects is to have a revival, to replace satin for handsome gowns.

The new shot velvets and shot satins will be much used for trimming gowns and bonnets.

New evening bodices are very light and lacy in appearance, and are usually ornamented with either bibs or frills of lace.

The latest item from Paris is concerning a nameless dress skirt made from a double width of material just manufactured. The long heralded fuller and shorter walking skirt is also seen in the new Parisian imported dresses.

NEW ORLEANS TIED UP.

The Crescent City Paralyzed by a General Strike.

ALL BUSINESS AT A STANDSTILL.

No Light, Bread, Conveyances or Newspapers and the Water Supply Threatened. No Violence as Yet, but the Armories Are All Under Strong Guard.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 8.—This city is in the throes of the greatest strike it has ever known, and the situation is becoming decidedly serious and promises to grow worse. Business is practically paralyzed, and the city is in darkness, without bread and newspapers and at a standstill.

The strikers are in complete possession of the city, having succeeded in closing up all business.

There are now the following unions striking: Rice Workers', Painters', Horseshoers', Carpenters', Coal Wheelers', Grain Shovelers', Printers', Clothing Clerks', Teamsters and Lumber Yardmen's, Machinists' and Stationary Firemen's, Musicians', Cracker Bakers', Longshoremen's, Steamship Scrapers', Factory Girls', Paper Hangers', Salesmen's, Car Drivers', Tailors', Bakers and Confectioners', Retail Shoe Clerks', Mail Clerks and Newspaper Carriers' and Freight Handlers'.

The decision of the Typographical union to join the striking phalanx has nerved the other bodies which were neutral in the matter, and all of the labor unions which signed the call for the general strike are now out except the Cotton Laborers'.

The latter are a most important part of the original amalgamated council, but in the face of so idle summer, the loss to labor which a strike would entail and the opposition of the powerful Cotton exchange which would be aroused, the cotton unions have been allowed to remain at work.

It is understood, however, that the men are ready to quit work when the committee gives the word, although the instructions are that even if the order comes the men are not to quit any job sided they have reached a stopping place.

Not a street car is running, no work is being done and the only sign of activity is at the wholesale grocery district, against which the strike is principally directed.

Little Violence Yet.

The new men there are willing to remain at work until violence is so general as to make it unsafe for them to continue. The stopping of their labor would lead to the closing of the wholesale groceries till the strike is well over, the merchants saying that they are ready to close for from thirty to ninety days and fill their country orders from the west.

The strike of the printers has the effect of closing all the newspapers except The Daily States, which the printers have been fighting for several years. There were reports that an attempt would be made to stop the paper from appearing, but the place has been well guarded and the paper will be issued as usual.

The opposition made through the governor to arbitrate the question of hours and wages, but to take the question of unionism entirely alone, has not yet been responded to by the labor side, but it is hardly thought that it will be accepted, as the cry of unionism is made the rallying cause of the labor bodies. The merchants also say that they will not recede further than the demands of Odendahl, of the board of trade, a short time ago, "It is not unionism we are fighting, but the abuse of unionism and the dictatorial demand that nonunion men can be employed."

The governor is keeping his staff within call and the militia is ready to come out at short notice. There is but little violence of any kind as yet, and nothing to warrant the sending of troops to re-enforce the police.

The Light and Water in Danger.

Considerable consternation was caused by the information that the men employed by the water works company were to follow the lead in the gas works. If the water supply is cut off there will be great danger from conflagrations, whether due to natural or incendiary causes. The governor informed himself, and it was announced that the water supply of the city would not be cut off.

The simultaneous strike of the street car men and carriage drivers has left the people without means of getting from one part of the city to another. The bakers went out leaving the people without bread.

The gas men also abandoned the field this morning, and announced that they would be unable to supply the city or private consumers with gas, and that the company gave notice that there was great danger of explosion, due to the mixing of gas and air in the pipes, and warned all persons not to light gas.

The electric light workers, despite orders to the contrary, absented out, so that New Orleans will be without light of any kind in the streets. The heads of the militia companies have been removed to places of greater safety. A guard is stationed at the armories to protect them.

CHICAGO ANARCHISTS ACTIVE.

An Inflammatory Document That Causes Apprehension in the City.

CHICAGO, Nov. 8.—Chief of Police McClaughry has information that anarchists have distributed thousands of circulars throughout the city within the last three days calling for a memorial meeting at Ulrich's hall on Nov. 11. These circulars have been carefully placed in the hands of foreign born workingmen, who are of socialistic tendencies. The circular says:

"We should set fire to the roofs which give shelter to our enemies and destroy those who made Nov. 11 possible."

The writer urges agitation and a renewed declaration of war against those who govern. Threats are made against Judge Grinnell and a number of police officers. Chief McClaughry will detail officers to attend the meeting, and any demonstration of an unlawful character will be promptly suppressed. The circular causes some apprehension on the part of the citizens.

A CRUEL RUMOR DENIED.

Rev. Dr. Talmage Says His Wife Has Not Become Insane.

NEW YORK, Nov. 8.—In view of the statements printed in several papers that Rev. Dr. Talmage's wife had become insane and had left him and fled to Connecticut, the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage has requested the United Press to say for him that the entire presentment is a fabrication from beginning to end.

Mrs. Talmage has been visiting the scenes of her childhood and telegraphed him to join her in New Haven. Her health is perfect, and any insinuation that her mind is affected is untrue and cruel in the extreme.

He further says that if the statements had referred only to himself he would not take the trouble to call attention to them even as untruths, but he felt that he must defend his wife from misrepresentation.

Dodds Again Victorious.

PARIS, Nov. 8.—A dispatch from Porto Novo says that Colonel Dodds, commander of the French expedition in Dahomey, captured Fort Muako, near Cana, and completely routed the Dahomeyan army. The French loss was seven killed and sixty wounded.

Robbed on the Fall River Boat.

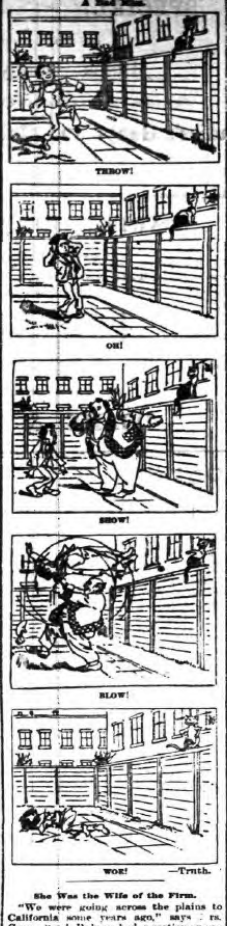
Before the Beak.

"Why did you not deliver up the pocketbook on the day you found it?"

"It was too late."

"And the next day?"

"It was empty."—Avvisatore Alpino.



She Was the Wife of the Firm.

"We were going across the plains to California some years ago," says Mrs. Crane, "and Robson had a section on one side of the Pullman car and Mr. Crane and I had the section directly across the aisle. During the day I did what I could to entertain Robson, for his wife had been detained at home by their daughter's illness. Part of the time I was playing cards with Mr. Crane while Mr. Robson went forward to smoke, and then again I was playing cards with Mr. Robson while Mr. Crane was in the smoking car. This seeming impartiality seemed to confuse the other occupants of the car, and I had great fun listening to their talk. It seemed hard for them to determine which of the two gentlemen was Robson and which was Crane. For a long time the discussion threatened to become acrimonious, but finally it was determined, to the apparent satisfaction of all that 'the little man' was Crane and 'the big man' was Robson. 'But who is the lady?' inquired some one. And then I heard another somewhat answer in a suppressed but confident tone, 'Oh, she's Robson and Crane's wife!'"—Buffalo News.

She Acknowledged Her Difficulty.

With the fashionable craze for tailor made gowns, shirts, waistcoats and scarfs, there is nevertheless an occasional girl who cannot master a four-in-hand or tie a black satin scarf as it should be. One of these went into a gentlemen's furnishing store the other day to buy a scarf to wear with her English costume. After she had looked at them, she said:

"Oh, dear me, I shall never be able to tie this! Why can't I have one that is already tied, with hooks behind?"

Very firmly the answer came to her, "But, madam, no gentleman would think of wearing a ready tied scarf."

"Oh, but," said she, "I am afraid I never shall be a perfect gentleman."—Christian Advocate.

One Sign.

At dinner recently an old fogy had been harrying the company with stupid and unpleasant remarks about natural history. Finally, in his peculiar tone of voice in which theological questions are uttered in the pulpit, the fogy said, "Has an oyster brains?" "Certainly," replied the host, "for an oyster knows when to shut up."—Argonaut.

Too Good as Ear.

PHANTOM LIGHTS.

The light-ship which is seen at sea illuminating the sky on a summer's night has not escaped the notice of the folklorist, and certainly many quaint stories have been drawn from its appearance. Indeed all kinds of strange stories have long been current in connection with lights seen at sea—some of which have a tragic element. A Welsh legend tells of a phantom light which appears at times on the beach and generally before a shipwreck, and in Cornwall similar stories are told by the fishermen. Thus, on the Cornish coast a light is occasionally said to be seen hovering mysteriously about around a certain stone locally known as Madge Figg's chair. According to common report this light is the ghost of a wrecked lady whom Madge stripped of her jewels.

On the same coast phantom lights, called Jack Harry, are so named from the man who discovered them, and Hunt gives the following narrative concerning them: "Some five years ago, on a Sunday night, the wind being strong, our crew heard of a large vessel in the offing, after we came out of chapel. We manned our boat—the Jack—and away we went, the sea going over us at a sweet rate. We had gone off four or five miles, and we thought we were also alongside, when lo! she slipped to wind ward a league or more." Another search was made after her, but she slipped away again and was lost to sight. Numerous fishermen declare in the vicinity of the coast to these strange lights seen at sea, and Moore in his "Lilah Rookh" tells how

Hardly seemed they mortal fires,
Such as lure the seaman's grave;
And fearful spirits, by their wild and changeful ires,
Had o'er the mast been hailing from the main.

Such electrical phenomena at sea were, in days gone by, converted into indications of the guarding presence of St. Elmo, a patron saint of the sailor, in relation to which we find many curious superstitious fancies, which the meteorological science of the present century has not dispelled. French sailors call St. Elmo's light the *Wandering Candle," and with German fishermen it is the spirit of a departed comrade. According to the popular opinion of the seafaring community, so long as St. Elmo's light shines on the mast's head the vessel is under the guidance of this aerial demigod; but, if it descends, a gale of wind or some other disaster is likely to happen the severity being indicated by the depth of its descent. Longfellow in his "Golden Legend," mentions this well known phenomenon:

Last night I saw St. Elmo's stars,
With trembling spiritual fire all at play
On the tops of the masts and the tips of the spars.
And I knew we should have foul weather today.

Origin of the Violin.

The origin of the violin can be traced back to a stringed instrument called the nevenstros, invented, it is believed, in 1000 B. C. by Ravena, king of Ceylon. The crwth, which was in use in Wales long before the Sixth century, and to which the Anglo-Saxons gave the name of fythel, whence our fiddle, was a similar instrument. The violin of modern form was not made until the Fifteenth or Sixteenth century, and its earliest maker was Gasparo di Salo, of Lombardy, and the Italian school of violin making was probably founded by him at Brescia. These fine clan instruments still hold a place among the best ever made.

It was not long, however, after the establishment of the Brescian school when the makers of Cremona began to produce instruments which have been objects of wonder and admiration from their time to the present. The three greatest Cremonese makers were Nicholas Amati, Joseph Guarneri del Gesu and Antonius Stradivarius. To those who at the present time willingly pay hundreds and even thousands of dollars for a violin made by one of these great makers it may be of interest to know that they all were simple hardworking artisans, who sold their works of genius for a few florins.

Popular Superstitions.

We all laugh at superstitions, and yet the most of us feel at least uncomfortable when we find that we have set thirteen at the table, or have met the new moon over our left shoulders, or have done any of the thousand and one things that are supposed to portend evil. The most sensible and practical people in the world will often take particular pains to skim off a patch of bubbles that has risen to the top of their tea, because some one in jest has said it is a "sure sign of money."

It requires a distinct effort for many persons to pass a pin on the sidewalk because of that absurdly bad rhyme:

See a pin and pick it up.
All the day you'll have good luck.

If at the table a little salt is spilled be tween two people the wary avoid a quarrel is for each to take a pinch and throw it over his left shoulder. Salt always has seemed a wonderfully powerful mineral from the time when we were small. Which of us when a child did not firmly believe in that old joke about putting salt on a bird's tail?

Drug Store Names.

Oil of vitriol is not oil.
Salts of lemon has nothing to do with a lemon, but is a salt of the extremely poisonous oxalic acid.
Soda water contains no soda.
Sulphuric ether contains no sulphur.
Sugar of lead has nothing to do with sugar, nor has cream of tartar anything to do with cream.
Oxygen means "the acid generator," but hydrogen is really the essential element, and many acid contain oxygen.
German silver contains no silver, and black lead contains no lead.
Wormseed is a variety of flower buds.
Milk of lime has no milk.
Quicksilver is pure mercury.

Origin of Drinking Healths.

Here is one of the several statements made on the subject of the origin of the very common custom of "drinking healths." In the days when the Danes lorded it in England they had a very common habit of stabbing Englishmen in the throat when drinking. To avoid this villainy a man when drinking would request some of the sittersby to be his pledge or surety while taking his draft. Hence the custom.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THE BYCKERING BIRD.

A Ballad of Three Merry Little Men Who Looked Before They Leaped.

It was three merry little men—
Not one had reached the age of ten—
Who, disregarding every warning,
Set out to bathe one summer morning.

"Beware the frickwone fish's jaws,
The crafty lobster's clinging claws.
You think you're strong and able men,
But if they snap, where are you then?

THEY LAUGHED AT DANGER.

"And heed, oh, boys, this parting word—
Beware, beware the Byckering Bird.
If he presents his little bill
You may, in sooth, fare very ill."

Our merry men skipped off with glee,
And each one cried: "They shan't catch me,
For we can swim, and we can dive,
And fear no bird or fish alive.

"And if a lobster comes our way,
We'll take him by his claws and say,
'Be you alive or be you dead,
You shall be boiled until you're red.'"

The sea was calm as calm could be;
They laughed at danger, did our three;
The Byckering Bird, who lurked below,
Laughed to himself: "Ho, ho! Ho, ho!

"I know they're young, I think they're fat,
And tender, too, I quite hope that.
One for my dinner, one for tea,
And one for supper; that makes three!"

GOOD HEALTH

FILTRATION OF WATER.

House Filters That Are Breeding Places for Organisms of Disease.

Filtration which is a mere straining—as for an example, continuous filtration through sand or animal charcoal—may clarify a water without otherwise improving it in any respect, and if after a time the filter becomes foul the water may be polluted rather than improved, according to Dr. W. G. Tucker, who regards with disfavor most of the old fashioned filtering appliances, which not only give a false sense of security, but often served as breeding places for the growth of living organisms. A house filter which is not daily cleansed is an abomination, being generally allowed to take care of itself and in time becoming a source of real danger.

A few years ago a case of no little interest was reported. Two samples of water were analyzed for a family in which one member was ill with typhoid fever. One of the samples was from the house supply direct, and the other was the same water filtered through the household charcoal filter of the common type. This latter sample yielded a much larger amount of albuminoid ammonia than the former, developing five times as much permanganate of potassium, and wasin every respect objectionable. On inquiry it was learned that the filter had been in use for more than a year, and that in the place where the carbon had formerly resided he had found the water so bad that he had made use of it to filter that which he used for his bath. Filters which allow of easy cleaning by reversed currents of water are free from most of the objections attending the use of the older forms.

Hints on the Care of the Eyesight.

Dr. L. W. Fox gives the following in The Franklin Institute Journal:

Avoid the use of stimulants and drugs which affect the nervous system.

Avoid reading when lying down or when mentally and physically exhausted.

When the eyes feel tired begin by looking at objects at a long distance.

Pay especial attention to the hygiene of the body, for that which tends to promote the general health acts beneficially upon the eye.

Old persons should avoid reading much by artificial light; be guarded as to diet and avoid sitting up late at night.

After fifty, bathe the eyes morning and evening with water so hot that you wonder how you stand it; follow this with cold water that will make them glow with warmth.

Do not give undue despair when you are informed that a cataract is developing; remember that in these days of advanced surgery it can be removed with little or no danger to vision.

Cracked Ice for Invalids.

One thing there is that many nurses apparently do not know, and that is, according to a writer in the Philadelphia Ledger, the value of cracked ice in cases where a prolonged drink of any fluid is next to an impossibility. Finely cracked ice, administered in a teaspoonful of champagne or brandy, has been the rallying point for many a sinking patient, or the ice alone, finely crushed, so that it simply melts away in the mouth, trickling down the throat rather than being swallowed as a draft, is a most useful stimulant. The use of ice itself is quite a different matter from deluging the stomach with a cold fluid. The melted ice is not of the ice water temperature when it is swallowed. People who take cracked ice get the stimulus of ice upon the nerves of the mouth and tongue, and not the flooding by water of the feeble throat and stomach.

ETIQUETTE

WEDDING PRELIMINARIES.

Announcement of the Engagement, Choice of Maids, Best Man, Etc.

It is decidedly better form for a gentleman to gain a parent's or guardian's consent before offering himself to a young lady, especially is it deemed necessary, writes a lady of society and fashion in a little handbook on manners, if he be in moderate circumstances and the lady wealthy. When the engagement is formally settled, the near relatives and most intimate friends are first informed by the mother or young lady herself. A dinner is generally given by the parents, to which some of the relatives of both families are invited. Subsequent dinners are apt to be given by the relatives and intimate friends to the engaged couple.

The gentleman's parents, relatives or friends call as speedily as possible upon the young lady and her parents or guardians.

The wedding day is usually selected by the bride elect and her mother, and the arrangement for the wedding, the trousseau or bridal outfit, the breakfast or reception, the choice of bridesmaids, the style of wedding, etc., are all left to the bride's taste. Lately it has become the fashion to curtail the length of engagements, and unless there is a prospect of the marriage taking place within six months the announcement of the engagement had better not be made public.

Bridesmaids are selected from the families of the bride and groom and from the intimate friends of the bride, the maid of honor being the sister of the bride or the most intimate unmarried friend. Groom, best man and usher should dress according to the hour of the day in the same fashion as for any other entertainment, but they should be dressed as nearly alike as possible. The best man is the choice of the groom elect—usually his brother or most intimate friend.

Ushers are selected by the gentleman, though the lady is usually consulted in the choice. Six is the number ordinarily, and their duties are to show people to seats in the church and to present the guests to the bride and groom at the wedding reception. The ushers walk up the church aisle in pairs, then the bridesmaids, followed by the bride on her father's or guardian's arm. The groom enters the church through the vestry door, followed by his best man, who stands beside him during the ceremony, holds his hat, etc.

The Block System.

The railroad was doing a rushing business, so much, in fact, that the editor of the paper where the general offices were felt it incumbent upon him to make a suggestion to the general manager.

"You should, with the amount of business you are doing," he said very wisely, "adopt the block system."

"Been doing it for three months past," replied the manager briskly. "Road's been blocked from end to end with freight trains, so that we couldn't handle a passenger train through on time, but we've done it somehow and haven't had an accident yet."—Exchange.

Reversing the Order of Things.

"Can't we have a little music?" asked a guest of the lady of the house.

"I—I don't know," was the hesitating reply. "You may if you don't make too much noise."

"What are you afraid of?"

"Well, the fact is the servant girl has company down stairs."—New York Press.

R. M. STOVER, DEMOCRAT, OF PLAINFIELD, ELECTED SURROGATE.

It is best to always take the brightest views of things.

It is some comfort to know that Plainfield and North Plainfield went Republican yesterday. It is very small comfort, but it is better than nothing.

But the further you look away from this section, the more Democratic become the outlook as the writing.

The politicians of this Assembly District re-elected George Kyte, and Henry N. Spencer of North Plainfield, the Republican candidate for Surrogate, received the largest Republican majority ever given any candidate in North Plainfield township, but it was not large enough to overcome the large Democratic vote at the other end of Somerset county.

If they did as well elsewhere throughout the State and the United States Kean would be Governor of New Jersey, Harrison President of the United States for another term, and THE NEWS' prediction of yesterday would have been more than verified.

It is some comfort to us in view of the outcome to know also that we were not alone in our opinion of the outlook for Republican victory, and that the most astute Republican National leaders were themselves as greatly deceived.

The people have declared that they do not want Protection and that they do want Free Trade. That was the issue.

This is a great country, and whatever it is for the best, though some of us may not be able to see it that way.

But we must all try and make the best of it. It is tit for tat. We can now better appreciate the feelings of the Democrats over their overwhelming defeat four years ago.

A Smithfielder: Mr. Jerry Garretson, has the honor of being the first to nominate Mr. Cleveland, and this when Mr. Cleveland's chances were extremely dubious, and now Mr. Cleveland is expected to reward his friend in need with the office of post master, or something else acceptable for which he may be qualified.

The Democrats are very happy, and they have a right to be if the telegraphic accounts are true. We would not detract one jot or tittle from their victory but we won't give up yet.

At noon word comes that the telegraphic wires were cut during the night and instruments attached by gamblers who sent the false reports to influence betting.

The wires are working this afternoon correctly and give Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, and Indiana to the Republicans.

The Tribune has a bulletin out to that effect.

Cleveland's plurality, 8,930.

Fifteen arrests were made in Trenton for bribery at the polls. Among the prisoners required to give bail to answer such charges are Major Michael Hurley, the Democratic "boss" of Mercer county; John Webb, a letter carrier, and William H. Skirm, son of the Republican candidate for state senator in this county.

Mercer county gives Harrison 1,200 plurality; Kean, Rep., for governor, 1,300, and Gardner, Rep., for congress, 1,100. Hutchinson, Rep., is elected to the assembly in the First Mercer district. Skirm, Rep., for state senator, carries the county by 1,500.

The New York Tribune correspondent says that Werts, Democratic candidate for governor, is probably elected by 3,300, and that Cleveland's plurality will be 7,000.

FOOTBALL YESTERDAY.

LEAL'S DEFEAT THE COLUMBIANS BY A SCORE OF 16-10.

An Interesting Game and Some Very Clever Plays—The Columbians Had One Good Trick and Played It Successfully Twice.

THE foot-ball game yesterday between Leal's of this city and the Columbians of Brooklyn, on the Crescent League grounds, was witnessed by the largest number of spectators of any foot-ball game there this year. Leal's team won. The score was 16-10. The playing of the winning team was very good.

The Columbians, in the beginning of each half, by the same trick, scored a touch down, but missed the goal, through poor kicking.

They formed the usual V, and, while Leal's team was expending its strength in breaking that, sent the ball around the end and scored. These, however, were the only good plays made by the Columbians.

At the end of the first half the score was 10-10.

Three of the Columbian men were stunned by falls.

Several brilliant runs were made by Dean Ryder, Harry McGee and Albert Simmonds of Leal's, each man carrying the ball half the length of the field, by clever dodging and good sprinting.

Twice the Columbians made disastrous fumbles, dropping the ball. Each time a Leal man fell on it.

Dean Ryder, the full back, missed several chances for good kicks through the side and poor passing of the ball to him.

The players and the positions occupied by Leal's team were as follows:

Mr. Henderson, right end; G. Peck, right tackle; E. Brown, right guard; C. Mitchell, centre; Atwood, left guard; Thomas, left tackle; W. Abbott, left end; H. Ryder, quarter back; A. Simmonds, right half back; H. McGee, captain, left half back; D. Ryder, full back.

THE OPEN FIRE.

Many people are now enjoying the open fires before the cold begins in strengthen and the steam-heater or furnace are to be made use of; yet the majority do not manage these open fires with even ordinary wisdom, says the New York Tribune. There is a temptation to meddle with the open fire which the wiser among us are constantly warned of, and is just this continual poking of the fire that gives it its bad reputation as needing constant care. If we give our open fires the same chance that we give our heater, it will keep equally well, provided the chimney has been properly built and the draught is right in all particulars. No open fire should be touched oftener than twice a day, morning and evening. At such times it should be thoroughly cleared till it is freed from all ashes, and filled up to the full capacity with coal, being careful to keep the coal as high as possible at the back of the fire, in order to equalize the force of the draught between the front and back, and in order to give as broad a surface of glowing coal as possible. If the grate will not do this, there is something technically wrong about the chimney draught or of the coal, or else the individual who builds the fire is addicted to the pernicious use of kindlings. If the draught of the chimney is right, a blower is a foolish contrivance which serves to send the heat up the chimney and prevent it getting into the room. If the draught is sluggish, where without the use of a blower, it is stronger and lasts about three or four times as long, while it sends into the room a proportionately greater amount of heat. The English dog-grate, which may be wheeled in and out of a fireplace of any size ample enough to hold it, is the very best contrivance for the use of couples where it is desirable to burn either wood or coal at different seasons of the year.

"The Result"

SATISFACTORY—THE WINNING PARTY THE FUTURE SERVANTS OF THE PEOPLE!

The great victory was not won by fraud or bribery; or by misrepresentation and false promises; or by vile epithets and mean personalities.

But on the other hand, the fairest and most righteous means have been used by the successful party.

Every promise has been faithfully fulfilled as far as possible, and a strict adherence to right and justice maintained. Fair and polite treatment of the people, honesty and uprightness in all their methods, have won for the party this much desired and coveted success.

The victorious party named above is not a political party at all, but one of our most successful and enterprising Dry Goods merchants, who only a few years ago commenced business here in a sr all room on East Front street.

To-day EDSALL'S, No. 20 West Front street, is well and favorably known all through this part of the State, as the leading establishment in the Dry and Fancy Goods line. The growth has been remarkable, and bespeaks for the proprietor commendable push and energy.

In view of this success in the past, Edsall has decided to make greater efforts still, during the next year to double the volume of trade.

This, of course, means less profits to the business and more money in the pockets of the patrons.

His elegant stores are thronged with buyers, who are well pleased and satisfied with their purchases, and say that they find it much to their advantage to buy at home, instead of going to New York.

In a few days the public will hear more about how we expect to increase our trade to double its present amount.

In the meantime, come in and see the elegant new Bric-a-brac and Novelties we are now showing in the new archway, and the hundreds of other beautiful and seasonable articles through each department at

NEW YORK, Nov. 9.—Grover Cleveland has once more been elected president of the United States. According to the returns he will receive in the electoral college 276 votes against 145 for President Harrison. The detailed electoral vote follows:

From the best information obtainable the following table gives the result in the various states. Later returns may, of course, change the result, and this table also shows the indicated standing of the Fifty-third congress:

Late reports indicate that the Democratic majority in the next national house of representatives will be less than 30. It will be greater than 15. New York and Republican appear to have elected but ten of the thirty-four congressmen, a Democratic gain of one. New Jersey and Connecticut have not apparently changed their present division of delegations, except that the Democrats in New Jersey have gained to the additional number accorded by the new apportionment.

The result has rolled up almost solid dele gations from every state. Alabama has an additional member in the Fifty-third congress, and so it is a Democratic gain, also Arkansas.

Georgia gains a new member and reworks the district now represented by Watson (Alliance, Democrat). The Republicans gain one in New Hampshire, eight in Ohio and one in Oregon. Although the Republicans carried Rhode Island on the presidential ticket, the reports are that as usual the congressional vote was made to conform to another election.

Owing to the absence of reports from the central and western states and the uncertainty as to the results in many congressional districts, it is impossible even to attempt to approximate the total representation of the several parties in the next house, but it will be largely Democratic.

The Sun says: "The elections through out the Union resulted in sweeping Democratic victories. Mr. Cleveland is elected president and a Democratic house of representatives was chosen."

Some of the features of the election were the very great majorities rolled up by New York and Brooklyn, the cutting down of majorities in the strong Republican counties in the interior and the great change in the vote generally throughout the west ern states.

In the south the Third party cut a sorry figure, their most crushing defeat, perhaps, being in Georgia, where Tom Watson was beaten by 6,000 by his Democratic opponent.

Not a Third party congressman was elected. Only in the Seventh South Carolina district is in doubt, and there the chances favor the Democrats. In Florida, Senator Call's Ocala platform and anti-Force bill Democrats swept the state, and the Third party was in a hopeless minority.

In Arkansas the Third party fusion with the Democrats had no effect save one of disastrous success. In Mississippi, also a former Alliance hotbed, the entire Democratic congress delegation was elected, as was also Governor Virginia, where Weaver received fewer votes than Bidwell.

Harrity's Claim.

William F. Harrity, chairman of the National Democratic committee, said on the election: "The returns received leave no doubt in the minds of the election of Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Stevenson by decisive majorities in the electoral college.

"The indications are that they, as already reported, receive the electoral votes of every one of the southern states. We are also entitled to those the electoral votes of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Indiana as previously claimed.

"No furtherance claim that Mr. Cleveland has carried Illinois and Wisconsin, and that Mr. Harrison has lost some of the for western states.

"Returns generally indicate great Democratic gains and great Republican losses. The people of the country are entitled to congratulations upon their great victory."

What The Sun Says.

Returns from 259 precincts out of 2,809 in the state show Republican gains averaging 12 to the precinct, and the indications from these meagre returns are that Harrison has carried the state by a plurality between 25,000 and 30,000. B. M. Taylor, Republican candidate for secretary of state, defeats W. A. Taylor, Democratic candidate, by the same plurality.

Democratic congressmen are elected in six districts, and the indications are that the Republicans have elected the fifteen other members of the Ohio delegation.

Democratic congressmen are elected as follows: Third district, Houk; Fourth, Layton. Fifth, Bowdle. Twelfth, Outhwaite. Thirteenth, Haire. Seventeenth, Richards.

Republican congressmen are probably elected as follows: First district, Storer. Second, Caldwell. Sixth, Hulick. Seventh, Wilson. Eighth, Strong. Ninth, Ashley. Tenth, Enochs. Eleventh, Grosvenor. Fourteenth, E. G. Johnson. Fifteenth, Van Voorhis. Sixteenth, Horrman. Eighteenth, Morgan. Nineteenth, Northway. Twentieth, White. Twenty-first, Dick.

The town of Harrison, Whitelaw Reid's own district, went against him by five. In 1888 it went six in favor of Harrison.

As the returns came into the national Democratic headquarters they were duplicated by special wire to Mr. Cleveland at his house on Forty-first street.

Returns indicate considerable Republican gains. For example fifty-four precincts of Indianapolis show a gain of 411 over the vote of 1888. If this were continued throughout the state, there would be a small Republican majority. But the Democratic claim gains in the counties, which, if correct, more than offset the Republican gains in the capital. Ex-Gov. Gray telegraphed the National Democratic committee that Cleveland would have 10,000 to 12,000 majority.

The Tribune's Claims.

The Tribune this morning says: The result of the election is in doubt at midnight. The returns from most of the states are meagre and insufficient to warrant an absolute conclusion, though the probabilities at this hour are that Harrison and Reid have not obtained a majority of the electoral votes.

Connecticut is believed to be Democratic by a plurality of from 1,000 to 2,000 on the presidential ticket with the governorship and legislature in doubt.

Returns from the far west and north west are late and fragmentary indicating, however, the choice of some People's party electors in several states.

Massachusetts has chosen Harrison electors and probably a Republican state ticket, thus displacing Governor Russell. All the rest of New England is Republican, with the possible exception of New Hampshire.

Whether or not the solid south has been broken is still uncertain. The Republicans claim Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland and West Virginia with greater confidence.

It is possible that the election of a president may devolve on the house of representatives.

Congress is Democratic by a large majority.

NEW YORK.

The Indications Are That Cleveland Has Carried the State by About 40,000 Plurality.

NEW YORK.—The indications are that Cleveland has carried the state by about 40,000 plurality, that the assembly will consist of 71 Democrats and 57 Republicans.

The weather was perfect in all parts of the state. In some of the northern counties the roads were very muddy, and that may have affected the voting.

It is the opinion of the total vote in the country districts fell much below the vote of 1888, but in New York it stayed at home to one Democrat to that the Cleveland majority increased in nearly every part of the state.

There are many surprises, but the great est surprise is in Chemung county. Senator David B. Hill's home, where a Democratic majority of 570 in 1888 is now a Republican majority of 1,000. Also in Orange county of 870. Dr. R. P. Bush, the speaker of the present assembly, who represented the county seven years, is defeated.

Albany county did as bad. The majority for Cleveland there is only 500, while in 1888 it was 1,675. Albany sent three Democrats to the present assembly, but in the next it will have only one, a clear loss of two seats. For months past there the Democrats have been quarreling, and in spite of all efforts to restore peace the fight was carried to the polls.

Tammany Hall made a clean sweep. Gilroy was elected mayor over Einstein by a vote of 12,508 to 97,047. Cleveland had a majority of 74,793 in the city. New York city with Richmond and Westchester counties sends a solid Democratic delegation of the representatives to congress.

Kings county gave Cleveland a plurality of 29,981 and cast 1,300 votes for Weaver and 1,500 for Bidwell. Three Democrats congressmen were elected.

The following appear to be the congressmen elected from the entire state:

First—John J. Gardner, Dem.

Second—John W. Chaney, Dem.

Third—Joseph C. Hendrix, Dem.

Fourth—William J. Coombs, Dem.

Fifth—John H. Ketcham, Dem.

Horatio S. Sanford is elected mayor of Long Island City. He defeated Patrick Gleason, the present incumbent, by about 900 plurality.

New York state is Democratic by not less than 30,000, and has elected a Democratic assembly.

New Jersey has probably gone for Cleveland by from 5,000 to 8,000, but Kean, Rep., claims his election as governor.

The following table shows the pluralities by counties:

PENNSYLVANIA.

The Majority for Harrison and Reid in the State Will Be in the Neighborhood of 70,000.

PENNSYLVANIA.—The Philadelphia Press says:

Pennsylvania has gone for Harrison and Reid. The returns indicate that his majority will be more than 70,000, and more complete reports may carry it to a figure somewhat larger. The Republican state ticket, including John Dean, for justice of the supreme court, and William Lilly and Alexander McDowell, for congressmen at large, has received about the same majority although there are districts where Judge Dean has run considerably ahead of his ticket.

An important part of the Republican victory is the election of twenty-one Republican congressmen out of a total or thirty. In the present house the Democrats have eleven members from Pennsylvania. The legislature is also strongly Republican, the majority on joint ballot promising from the returns so far received to be considerably above two to one. The vote in most quarters has been a pretty full one, and the experience with the new ballot law appears to have been without serious difficulty.

It is impossible at this hour to make any calculation as to the extent of the vote cast for any of the outside party organizations, although there were three electoral tickets in the field besides the Republican and Democratic nominations—the Prohibition, People's and Socialistic-Labor.

Pennsylvania elected thirty-two presidential electors, thirty congressmen and a full state ticket, and a United States senator to succeed Mr. Quay. The state will give Harrison more than 50,000 majority, Philadelphia giving 30,000. The legislature will be largely Republican.

CONNECTICUT.

The Democrats Claim the State by About 1,000 Plurality—There Will Be No Election of State Officers.

CONNECTICUT.—This state has gone for Cleveland. In half the state Cleveland runs 737 ahead of 1888. This does not include the cities. The vote in these town stands: Harrison, 21,752; Cleveland, 20,024. In 1888 the vote was Harrison, 21,655; Cleveland, 19,165.

One hundred and one towns give Cleveland 19,077. Harrison, 31,774. This shows a Democratic gain over 1888 of 1,472. The Democrats claim the state for Cleveland by about 1,000 majority. There will be no election of state officers by the people. The legislature will probably be Republican.

New Haven gives a democratic majority of 2,500. The vote polled is 90 per cent. of the total registry list of 21,000 throughout the state. Mr. Morris, the Democratic candidate for governor, is running ahead of Cleveland. Mr. Merwin appears to be running behind his ticket.

The city of Waterbury gives about 1,000 Democratic majority. Bridgeport is Democratic by about 1,000 majority. Returns of Haddam shows a gain of one Democratic representative.

Complete returns from the state, gathered by the Southern New England Telephone company, give Cleveland 5,320 plurality and 5,000. Democratic candidate for governor, 1,469 majority.

THE CENTRAL STATES.

ILLINOIS.—As returns come in it is conclusively demonstrated that Illinois cast the heaviest vote in the history of the state Apathy prevailed in every precinct throughout the state during the campaign, but this gave way in an unprecedented activity, and all parties appear to have polled practically their entire vote. The surprise of the day in Chicago is the little disparity between the Cleveland and Altgeld vote.

It was expected that Altgeld, the Democratic candidate for governor, would run behind the presidential ticket by many thousands, but returns as far as received do not indicate this result. The scratching has been unusually heavy, but not so gen eral as it would have been had this not been the first election under the Australian ticket. Voters desiring to scratch often refrained from so doing for fear of a fault or spoiling their ballot through error.

The Chicago Tribune, Rep., says: "Returns received by The Tribune up to 10:30 o'clock indicate that Cleveland, for president, and Altgeld, Dem., for governor, have carried Cook county by at least 20,000. Later returns may reduce this majority, but of course not enough to affect the result.

GEORGIA.—Returns from all the counties of this state show a Democratic plurality of 25,000. This gives Georgia's 13 electoral votes to Cleveland. Richmond county will give Black, Dem., nearly 9,000 majority over Tom Watson. Returns from other districts indicate that the Democrats will carry every district, and that Georgia will send a solid Democratic delegation to the next congress.

KENTUCKY.—The thirteen electoral votes of this state go to the Democrats. The returns are coming in slowly, but enough have been received to show that Cleveland's plurality is 20,000. His plurality in 1888 was 28,698. All congressional districts, except the Eleventh, are Democratic. The Eleventh is still in doubt.

LOUISIANA.—The figures on the vote in ninety-nine parishes thus far received show a plurality for Cleveland of 30,000. The Cleveland plurality four years ago was 24,548.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Owing to the delay caused in the count by the Australian ballot, which is being tried for the first time, definite figures cannot yet be given. Both committees claim the state.

MARYLAND.—There was only one district in doubt in Maryland—the Sixth district—formerly represented by Mr. Compton, secretary of the Republican national committee, where George S. Welling, Rep., contested the representation against William McMahon McKaig, Dem., the sitting member. The district gave Cleveland last election by McKaig by less than 800 in a total vote of nearly 34,000. Latest returns are that he has carried Washington county by 300, has gained heavily in Cleveland county and is re-elected by an increased majority.

Congressmen have been elected in the other five districts as follows: First—Robert Brattan, Dem., for Fifty-third congress, and John B. Brown to fill vacancy in Fifty-second congress. Second—Jesse E. Wallace, Dem. Third—Harry Welles Rusk, Dem., re-elected. Fourth—Isador Rayner, Dem., re-elected. Fifth—Barnes Compton, Dem., re-elected.

The state has given a larger majority than usual for Cleveland.

ALABAMA.—Cleveland has carried this state by a majority of about 30,000. The indications are that the fusionists have elected congressmen in the Second and Fifth districts; the Democrats in the First, Third, Sixth, Eighth and Ninth; Fourth and Seventh doubtful.

TENNESSEE.—Grover Cleveland carries Tennessee by a handsome plurality. Peter Turney is elected governor by 50,000. Buchanan, the third party candidate, polled only 20,000 votes. The Democratic vote was full, but the Republican vote was light, and failed to come out. The legislature will be Democratic, and the congressional delegation is seven-eight Democrats and two Republicans.

MISSISSIPPI.—This State casts its electoral vote, as usual, for the Democratic electoral candidates. The Democratic nominees are therefore returned by a plurality of 50,000. Four years ago the Cleveland plurality was 53,675.

MISSOURI.—The Missourians voted for the Democratic electors. The returns from the 114 counties show a plurality for Cleveland of 20,000. Only a few of the 1,200 returns from the city are coming in slowly. The indications are that Cobb, Dem., and O'Neil, Dem., and Barthold, Rep., for congress, are elected in the First, Fifth, Eighth and Tenth districts respectively.

NORTH CAROLINA.—Benjamin H. Bunn, Dem., re-elected in the Second district. Indications are that William A. Branch, Dem., is re-elected in the First district; that Benjamin F. Grady, Dem., is re-elected in the Third district, and that Henderson, Dem., in the Seventh district. The state has been carried for Cleveland by a good majority.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—The indications *are that the Democrats have elected con*gressmen in every district, the only close vote being in the Seventh district, which will require an official count. Cleveland's majority in the state will be 30,000.

TEXAS.—The weather was bad throughout the state. The vote will probably not exceed that of 1888, when Cleveland's plurality was 186,000.

VIRGINIA.—Indications are that the state will give 30,000 Democratic majority. Wise, Dem., for congress will have 6,000 to 7,000 majority.

DELAWARE.—This state elected three presidential electors, one congressman, and a legislature to choose a successor to United States Senator Gray. The count here indicates Democratic gains. It looks as though the state would go Democratic. Senator Gray is elected. Latest returns:

The returns from Sussex county are coming in slowly, but it is probable that the whole Democratic ticket has been elected by a small majority.

In some of the "Hundreds" negroes broke down the guard lines and undertook to take their votes, but were forcibly repulsed. Money was freely used in buying votes and keeping voters away from the polls.

Later returns show that this state remains Democratic on electors, congress and legislators.

SOUTHERN STATES.

West Virginia Returns Coming in Slowly, and the State Is Claimed by Both Parties.

ARKANSAS.—Returns cast to the presidential candidates, as far as it has been reported, shows a plurality for Cleveland of 20,000. This gives him the eight electoral votes of the state in the electoral college. In 1888 Cleveland carried the state by a plurality of 27,210.

FLORIDA.—The Democratic presidential electors have been elected in this state. The returns received show the plurality for the Cleveland ticket to be about 4,000. Later returns may reduce this plurality, but of course not enough to affect the result.

States senator to succeed Henry L. Dawes, Rep. A heavy vote was polled all over the state. Fifty-three towns and 190 precincts of Boston give Hale, Rep., for governor 60,928; Russell, Dem., 50,807. Russell's plurality, 9,879.

Governor Russell's friends claim that he will carry the state by 1,500 plurality, while the Republicans express confidence that Haile will have several thousand plurality. Russell is running ahead of Cleveland and Haile behind Harrison.

Returns come very slowly, and no congress districts are as yet certain. The Indications seem to point to the election of McEttrick, Independent Dem., in the Tenth district. Harrison carries the state by a reduced majority.

MAINE.—One hundred and seventy-seven towns in Maine give Harrison, 42,090; Cleveland, 31,495; scattering, 3,094. The same towns in 1888 gave Harrison, 48,247; Cleveland, 32,090; scattering, 2,207. Republican plurality now 10,595. Republican plurality then 16,157. If the remaining towns come in with the same rate of loss, the vote will stand: Harrison, 64,000; Cleveland, 49,500; scattering, 5,000. Total vote, 118,500.

RHODE ISLAND.—The total vote of the state, lacking twenty districts, gives Harrison 18,345; Cleveland, 16,552. This state goes for Harrison.

Indications point to no election of congressmen in this state.

WESTERN STATES.

Kansas Will Probably Go Republican by About 20,000.—The Populists' Tactics Delay Returns.

KANSAS.—There is little probability of any definite returns from Kansas being received until late today. The Populists have insisted that the law providing that each ballot shall be checked up complete when taken from the box is complied with to the letter. This has resulted in delaying the count to such an extent that no figures of any consequence have been reported.

The precincts heard from all show decided Republican gains. Four towns in the Seventh district, Wichita, Winfield, Newton and Nickerson, all of which gave Levy, the Simpson bandwagon, majorities in 1890, have each given majorities for Long, Rep.

The Republican state central state committee claims the election of all the eight Republican candidates for congress and a majority in each branch of the legislature. Levy and his state ticket are electoral tickets. A similar claim is made by the fusionists.

It the proportion of gains made by the Republicans in the few precincts heard from is kept up throughout the state the Republican majority will not be less than 30,000.

The Republican state central committee claim the state by 20,000 plurality. The chairman of the Populist party concedes nothing.

NEVADA.—It is conceded by all parties that Weaver carries Nevada by 1,500. Newlands, silver party, is elected to congress. Result as to legislature not yet certain, but it is generally believed the silver party will have a majority which will insure the election of Stewart to the United States senate.

COLORADO.—The returns are coming in very slowly, especially from the interior of the state, owing to a lack of railroad and telegraphic facilities in many counties. The returns thus far received for electors for Weaver, the Populist candidate for the presidency, by a majority which cannot yet be estimated.

NEBRASKA.—The returns are still very fragmentary, owing to the new election law and poor accounting. Figures so far received indicate that Weaver will carry the state by a few thousand.

CALIFORNIA.—Returns received are too meagre to forecast the result in this state. They indicate that Harrison will have a gain of 100 for Cleveland over the vote of 1888.

At 5 o'clock when the polls closed in this city a number of voters could not cast their ballots, and the total vote in many precincts showed a falling off from the registration figures.

A great deal of trouble was caused by the lack of ballot boxes, and although 130 were distributed many voters were unable to get their votes in in time.

The election passed off very quietly, though twenty arrests were made by United States deputy marshals for attempts at illegal voting and for breach of the peace. The estimated total vote of the city will be 60,000. An unusually large vote was cast throughout California, and the new ballot law was generally satisfactory.

Kissing Time.

Margery sat in the large alone,
A "disconsolate chair" she blew,
And "nor" she cried, and "nay" she cried
As down the petals flew,
"What's which, sweet Margery?"
"Half your kissing time,
So you are just too late."

"Half your kissing time!"
Said Willie, sore, downcast,
"I don't believe your clock is right,
It must be fast, too fast."
And asking her sweet hand in his,
And picking up the flow'r,
He showed her how to put it back
Exactly half an hour.

But that is fifty years ago;
They both are old folks now.
They move leisurely down the lane,
While first they made their vow.
Those quaint old words, they linger still,
But with a sweeter sound,
'Tis never "half your kissing time"
When love's true wheels go round.

The Bird Saved the Young Bird.

In the mountain districts of Pennsylvania two wrens had built their nest under the eaves of an old farmhouse, and there they reared a small and interesting family. Among the attaches of the farmer's household was a white cat, and when the wrens became so tame that they used to hop around the piazza in search of crumbs the cat would lie in wait for them, and several times came within an ace of catching the small birds. When the farmer noticed this he kicked the cat, and she finally learned that it was dangerous to fool with the wrens.

When the baby wrens grew larger one of them one day fell out of the nest, and, being too weak to run and unable to fly, lay helpless on the grass. The cat saw the accident and was rapidly seize the bird, but seeming to remember the lesson taught her, when she reached the helpless little thing she only touched it daintily with her paw and then lay down and watched it. Presently there came a black and yellow garden snake toward the fluttering bird thing. The cat was dozing and was awakened by the fluttering of the bird. In a instantly she rose and struck at the reptile with her paw. This was an enemy the snake did not appreciate, but it was built ugly, so it darted forward and attempted to seize the bird under the very shelter of the cat's head.

Like a flash the cr[illegible] snake just back of the head and killed it with one bite. When the farmer happened along in the afternoon he found the cat crouching in the grass sheltering the bird, and ten feet away was the dead snake. This made it clear that the cat had carried the bird away from the snake, and the young adventurer was soon restored to its anxious parents.—Brandon Bucksaw.

England's Rulers.

First William the Norman, then William his son,
Henry, Stephen and Henry, then Richard and John.
Next Henry the Third, Edwards one, two and three,
And again after Richard three Henries we see.
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess,
Two Henries, sixth Edward, Queen Mary Queen Bess;
Then Jamie the Scotsman, then Charles, whom they love slew,
But revived after Cromwell another Charles too.
Then James the Second ascended the throne,
And good William and Mary together came on.
Till, Anne, Georges four and fourth William, all past,
God sent England Victoria; may she long be the last!

—Selected.

His Relations Puzzled Him.

Charlie is a little boy with a peculiarly mixed lot of relations. He has among others a great aunt, a stepuncle and some stepbrothers and sisters, to say nothing of a grandfather and a great-grandmother. The other day, after his brother had left the house to escort a young lady home, Charlie said, "Mamma, if Harry marries will he be my brother just the same as he is now?"

"Certainly," said mamma, "why do you ask?" "I thought maybe he might be my stepbrother or a grand or great something or other," and Charlie gave a little sigh as if he felt that life held some puzzling problems.—New York Recorder

Didn't Break the Rule.

Tom had been kept in at school for talking out loud.

"Why did you do it, Tom?" asked his mamma. "Didn't you know that it was against the rules?"

"No," said Tom. "Teacher only said I mustn't whisper, and I didn't."—Ex change.

The King's Drum.

This spirited picture, by Mr. G. W. Joy represents an incident of 1798, when the drummer boy, having been ordered to beat his drum for the enemy, destroyed the parchment, saying sturdily, "The king's drum shall never be beaten by rebels." The engraving is very fine. It would be very suitable, if tastefully framed, for the walls of a boy's own room.—Harper's Bazar.

Married Women and Girls' Secrets.

"There is nothing so exasperating in the whole world as to tell a profound secret to some woman friend and discover a day or two later that her husband knows as much about the affair as you do," said a young girl to us the other day. "You see, one forgets that because a girl is married she must retail everything to the man whom she has favored with her hand, and if you have been chums for years it naturally follows that you go on telling her little secrets in the old time way, until a few shocks teach you that things are very different from the good old days when there was no third party to be taken into our confidence. Really, I think it is very mean of them; don't you? Of course it isn't anything for a wife to tell her husband all the little happenings of her own life, but when it comes to revealing other women's secrets I think it positively dishonorable.

"I know when I am married I will keep all the little confidences made by my girl friends locked fast in my own breast, for I am never going to mortify them as I have been by learning that a certain escapade or love story that was too good to keep entirely to myself, yet not the thing to spread broadcast, had become common property because my friend had told her husband, who told someone at the club, etc. Sometimes I really think that the only way to actually keep a secret is not to tell it to any one, but there is no fun in that. The first one to whom no one else knows it, but of one thing I am certain, I will never trust a married woman with anything I care to keep entirely between ourselves."—Detroit Tribune.

Mrs. Browning's Habits.

Mrs. Browning wore her hair in long ringlets, which, falling very much over her face, and when seen in profile suggested the unpleasing idea of blinders that hardly cut across the graceful curves of brow and cheek. It was this style of arranging the hair that made Mrs. Browning look, not only fascinating—for that would have given a touch of sentiment—but strangely out of fashion. Her slight, pretty figure was rather disguised than set off by the garments that fell sloping about her; but, thank heaven, she was entirely free from the bad taste of the self styled clever women who acknowledge themselves to be fallen as women by aping a masculine style of dress and address.

In conversation Mrs. Browning seemed reserved, with a certain proud aloofness of manner; at the same time there was a listening reticence in her attitude that did not help the playful tossing to and fro of talk. Occasionally she flung her remarks into the midst of the discussion, and such remarks were weighed, measured and full of some definite purpose. It was evident that Mrs. Browning had not thrown off the habit acquired in the years of silence in her darkened chamber of conversing in a one sided way with the best books, which is vastly different from conversing with the best men.—Chicago News.

Home Dressmaking.

The sensible woman, she who has the best taste and knows just how to make the best of it, is learning, if she doesn't thoroughly understand it already, to have her dresses made at home. There never was a time in the history of clothes when so much dressmaking was done at home. Women have grown tired, oh, so tired, of the sameness of custom dressmaking. The mistress of the household selects some young girl or woman who is handy with her needle, then she goes studiously to work and plans her own wardrobe. First of all she tries her hand on an inexpensive dress, and if she makes a success of it, which she is very likely to do, she goes on from one degree of perfection to another.

Three-fourths of the difficulty about dressmaking likes in the fact that women do not realize what natural figures they are in the clothes they wear. Once let the full consciousness of this dawn on them, and the work is done; for never afterward will they consent to look ridiculous, or what is even worse, commonplace, while harmony, symmetry and beauty can be had by working for it; for whatever bad fellows and wabbles may be, the American woman isn't lazy, especially when it comes to matters of adornment.—New York Ledger.

What a Wise Mother Can Do.

A wise mother can take ten minutes every day and read to her children a few words on astronomy, geology or physiology. Not dry statistics, which carry no knowledge to the little minds, but the names of planets and stars, their places and the mythological story connected with them; stories of the strata of rocks, with coal and other minerals buried beneath clay and stones; how the hot waters and the cold are deep down under us, waiting for man until he needs them and discovers their hiding place; stories of our own bones and nerves, muscles and blood; the course of our food from the mouth to the stomach; how fresh air invigorates us, and stimulants dry up the tissues. It is astonishing how easily little children learn the long words and use them intelligently. All these subjects and a hundred more are brought before them every day in a rightly conducted kindergarten.—Home Journal.

The Secret of Entertaining.

A man does not enjoy the feeling that what interests a girl he has no knowledge of and rather than make mistakes will remain silent, for men are very sensitive to ridicule and are not going to let a girl laugh at them if they can help it, but touch on his favorite hobby and he will think you charming, simply because you have introduced a topic on which he feels at home. No matter what it is, if you simply *arrive at the keynote there will be no trou*ble about entertaining him, and in this easy way you will have established your reputation as a charming, intelligent, well informed woman, when, in all probability, you will have learned little to no approval or say yes and no at proper intervals.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Women and Men.

As a rule women require one hour of sleep more a day than men. Fewer of the latter reach the age of fifty than the former, but after and the sterner sex has the best of it. It has also been found that single women live longer than single men, while married women on an average live two years longer than single ones.

A woman's chance of getting married is calculated to be only 25 per cent, when it she reaches her fortieth year. As there are still more men than women in the United States, more of the fair sex should emigrate. As it is four men emigrate to one woman. There is said to be only one sudden death among women to eight among men.—Chambers' Journal.

When Whipped Cream Is Nice.

Whipped cream is a delicious adjunct to deep apple pie, and should be sent to the table in a glass bowl. It is nice with any cold dessert, jelly, blanc mange, etc., with a little Jamaica rum to flavor it.—New York Journal.

ANOTHER LOST OPPORTUNITY.

Two young clerks left their down-town office in a hurry one evening last week to attend an entertainment in Forty-fifth street. The luckily they had been detained by business a good deal beyond their usual hour for dinner, and as they wanted to reach the entertainment on time they decided, as they crawled up town on an average five avenue elevated train, the best place to get the quickest sort of a luncheon, just enough to stay their hunger till the entertainment was over and they would get a "square" meal.

The junior partner of their employer's firm was on the same train with them on his way to the Grand Central station, *where he would board a train for his subur*ban villa in Westchester county. He had traveled over that road twice a day for years, and being that kind of a man who makes friends everywhere he goes he knew almost everybody on the road. He moved into the plans of the young fellows hetartily, and recommended them to go to the restaurant in the Grand Central station.

"You will get a meal good enough quickly enough," said one of the clerks, "there'll be so many travelers there, all in a hurry, like ourselves."

"I'll arrange for you," was the answer, and when the restaurant was reached the junior partner led the way. Going up to the proprietor, he grasped his hand, asked about the man's sick brother, referred to a real estate deal they both were interested in, whispered something else in his ear, then slipped a bill into his hand and asked that they be served as quickly as possible. Then he darted away to catch his train.

Almost before they knew it, the clerks were led to a table, chairs were thrust under them and two waiters were pounding the bill of fare with bewildering speed. Each clerk selected one simple dish and hastily devoured. The waiters also brought a bottle of Rhine wine.

"We did not order wine," exclaimed the clerks.

"The boss told me it was for you" said the waiter, as he drew the cork and filled the glasses.

On inquiry it was learned that the junior partner had ordered it before he skipped off. The clerks drank to his health and prosperity. When they came to pay for their meal the waiter said it had already been paid for. When the clerks got over their surprise they discovered that the junior partner had told the "boss" to charge to his account anything they might order.

"What a jolly joke!" exclaimed one clerk, laughing heartily; "but what makes you look so glum?" he inquired of his fellow, who seemed about to kick himself.

"Didn't you notice?" sighed the other, "It's just my luck. I only ordered corned beef hash!"—New York Tribune.

Carlyle's Philosophy.

Carlyle smoked often and complained much of dyspepsia. A friend once ventured to suggest that his smoking might perhaps injure and depress him. "Yes," Carlyle said, "and the doctors told me the same thing. I left off smoking and was very miserable, so I took to it again and was very miserable still; but I thought it better to smoke and be miserable than to "bout"—Argonaut.

1492—Columbus decided to explore Cuba and find the great Khan—and rich gold mines; the people at first fled from their boats, but being reassured by Indians from other islands surrounded, were eager to trade cotton yarn and parrots for trinkets, but Columbus forbade all trafficking not finding anything except gold, kept them to take the natives to reveal the place of treasure; the place was a failure, as their only gold consisted of a few simple ornaments.

FIRST SNOW OF THE SEASON.

Settled Nearly as Fast as It Fell Filling the Streets with Slush.

The first snow of the season in this vicinity fell yesterday. The flakes commenced to fall about two o'clock in the afternoon, and as the temperature was a little too high for snow it melted as fast as it fell, filling the streets with slush and mud. Toward night, however, the temperature fell rapidly and by six o'clock the thermometer registered 20 degrees lower than when the storm began. After that the snow stopped melting and by eight o'clock it was two inches deep. Wet and heavy it fell and the large flakes clung to the telephone, telegraph and electric light wires, causing them to give way under the severe strain. The electric light company's linemen were kept busy all night repairing broken wires as soon as they finished one part of the city rain the wires in one part of the city they would be called to another district.

Many telephone wires were broken down in different parts of the city. A wire at the corner of Front and Somerset streets broke during the night. The damage Manager Runyon had men repairing the damage, also one on the Somerset street bridge.

Mr. J. W. Davis of the Crescent League received word from the captain of the Park Club bowling team that he will be unable to get his team together to night. The game which was to have been bowled to-night between a team of the Crescent League and one from the Park Club, in consequence, has been postponed.

Three Star plates were shipped to Forksville, Pa., on Friday by that enterprising music dealer, Mr. F. M. Hulett of West Front street. Mrs. Morgan is one of the Trustees of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, and the Secretary of the Board, the members of which will attend the funeral of his wife in a body to show their respect. The interment will be at Hillside.

The Pool Tables in a Pool.

The pool tables in the Crescent League Club House were in a pool of water this morning. During the night a leak in the roof of the building let the water from the building ooze through into the room. The tables were a little wet, but not enough to damage them.

THE MILLER CASES.

Defendant Fined in Both Cases—He Escapes Imprisonment.

Frederick W. Miller was this morning fined eighty-five dollars for two illegal sales of whiskey. On the first charge, the jury originally called to try the case were unable to agree. The trouble seemed to be that they were not judges of whiskey and thought there might be some truth in Miller's defense that what he sold was a cough mixture. On the second trial, the Corporation Counsel produced an expert chemist who had analyzed the alleged cough mixture and proved it to be pure whiskey. The jury found a verdict of guilty with a recommendation of mercy. This morning, by advice of his counsel, Charles A. Reed, Mr. Miller withdrew his plea in the remaining case and pleaded non cul. Mr. Reed urged extenuating circumstances as a reason for light sentences in both cases. The court made the fine in the jury case $25, and in the other case $60, or twenty days. Imprisonment in each case if the fine should not be paid.

An Accident Barely Averted.

The track of the Electric Street Railway, at the corner of Front and Peace streets, makes such a sharp curve that it is almost a miracle that more accidents do not happen. Narrow escapes are becoming quite frequent. Only this morning a wagon barely missed being run into. A man was driving up Peace street toward Front, in between the rails of the track, when a car suddenly turned the corner, going toward North avenue. The driver saw his danger and only his quick presence of mind prevented a collision. He hit his horse a hard crack with the whip, and at the same time pulled for all he was worth on one rein, causing the horse to jump and turn so suddenly as to nearly upset the wagon. As the last wheel of the vehicle left the track the car whizzed by.

Building the Trestle.

Yesterday morning the Pennsylvania railroad began practically the elevation of the tracks just south of West Grand street, Elizabeth. The carpenters and crew of laborers were set to work on the raising of the trestles and by noon two of the large supports were towering skyward to a height of twenty-eighteen feet. The work is being rapidly pushed forward, and in a week's time or so the entire trestle from West Grand street to South Elizabeth will be raised. The foundations for the arches at the Morris avenue crossing are almost completed, and the building of these at several of the other street crossings will soon be begun.

CRUMBS OF COMFORT.

COLD, VERY COLD COMFORT THOUGH.

A Review of the Situation—Congratulations for Mr. Cleveland—Condolences for Mr. Harrison—The Details from Later Returns

The clouds are rolling by, brothers. The smoke of the battle is lifting. The little crumbs of comfort which came to us over the wire yesterday afternoon have disappeared.

We received a message by wire late yesterday afternoon that the returns had been doctored. We telegraphed for particulars, and got what seemed a corroboration, as published. But later returns show that we haven't even a straw to grasp.

We have met the adversary, and we are his overwhelmingly, without a doubt.

THE NEWS, which was with the first in the contest, and which has been unwavering throughout, yields at last.

We have been caught in a tidal wave, and hit so hard that we don't known yet what struck us.

There is not a ray of hope left for the head of the National ticket. It is the same with the head of the State ticket.

But stay. We have held our own in Plainfield and North Plainfield, anyhow. The Republican majority in this Third Assembly District of this county of Union is greater than ever before. Here it is:

FOR ASSEMBLY—3d district.

	Kyte, R.	Coles, D.	Franklin, P.	S. L.
Clark	28	38
Fanwood	107	120	1
Linden	386	197	4
Plainfield	1505	1047	69
Rahway	930	672
Westfield	324	326	40
	3,275	2,615	114

Kyte's plurality, 660.

This is 156 more plurality than Mr. Kyte received last year, and nearly 100 per cent more than was given the year before to his Republican predecessor, Mr. Ulrich, whose plurality was 345. There is a substantial Republican gain, although not so much as appears by the figures, because some of the increase comes by Republicans being taken off from another district to make it sure Democratic, as crowding them into this already solidly Republican district.

Then, we can look a little further, and find that this county of Union, which gave 1,382 Democratic plurality for Governor last time, gave this time only 735, a reduction of nearly one-half. That isn't so bad, either.

In the adjoining county of Somerset we have gained one Republican. Dilts for sheriff succeeding a Democrat. Neither is that so bad.

Beyond this, however, in the State the Republicans find themselves overwhelmed by the Democratic gerrymander, and instead of four Republican Congressmen against three Democrats, under the apportionment before the new census, we have by the increased apportionment under the census, only two Republicans to six Democrats. In the State Senate and House of Assembly the Democratic gerrymander gives the Democrats full control by even a larger majority than last year. And this insures the election of another Democratic senator, to succeed a Democrat.

There is no doubt now but that the State of New Jersey is Democratic, and that President-elect Grover Cleveland will have a Democratic Congress with him.

The whole country is Democratic this trip, which nobody can deny.

"So let the old world jog as it will,
We will be gay and happy still."

While we congratulate Mr. Cleveland on his great victory, we at the same time heartily sympathize with Mr. Harrison, who, in addition to his recent severe affliction in the loss of his wife, must sustain so soon thereafter this crushing defeat.

The latest returns give the Democrats 13 majority in the State Senate, and 22 majority in the House. The Senate will be composed of 17 Democrats and 4 Republicans. Of the Democrats 6 were elected on Tuesday, and of the Republicans 2. The names of the members and the years in which their terms expire are given below:

Crushed to Death.

MAIN LANDING, N. J., Nov. 10. (Special.)—While passing beneath an elevator running on the outside of his mill in front of the door of the machine shop Mr. W. Wells was crushed beneath an elevator, which fell from its fastenings on the floor above.

Cleveland's Electoral Vote.

Cleveland	300

Cleveland's majority	136
Cleveland's plurality over Harrison	176

And Ohio Democratic.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 10—(Special.)—It now appears as if Ohio, when the returns from the State are all in, will be found to have gone Democratic. Returns from forty-six districts, a little more than half the whole number, show an increase in the Democratic vote of 18,000.

HOUSED LIKE MR. PEGGOTTY.

That odd feature of Morris county life in Winter will soon begin, namely, the squatting of canal people in canal boats for miles along the Morris canal. The habitations consists of canal boats frozen up and half submerged in the canal with a roof of snow and ice to keep out the cold, and a sheet of ice about them for a piazza. Here men and women live from Winter until late in March, in order to save rent.

The structures look like mounds and the dwellers disappear out of sight much as prairie dogs out West. The women have a costume of their own, consisting principally of a thick red skirt and a blue nubia. These canal houses stretch in a dozen directions. They may be found on the level near Bloomfield, up above Rockaway, at Port Oram, and near Montgomery and Brookdale. The canallers keep away from the villages, for they are objects of annoyance by boys.

It is no trouble to keep warm. Leaves and branches of trees are piled on top of the boat and the snow and ice soon accumulate in sufficient quantities to prevent the blasts from penetrating the inside.

DROWNED IN NEWARK BAY.

There were three men drowned in Newark Bay Tuesday night.

Five fishermen were on the Central Railroad bridge when a train came rumbling over the structure. Three of them became frightened, and fearful that they would be struck by the train they leaped into the water.

The cold water chilled them and before assistance arrived they were drowned.

Their comrades were unable to render any assistance.

The party belonged in Jersey City. Those who were drowned were Thos. Holmes, Thomas Keating and George Reiss. One of the men leaves a wife and four small children.

"The Result"

The great victory was not won by fraud or bribery; or by misrepresentation and false promises; or by vile epithets and mean personalities.

But on the other hand, the fairest and most righteous means have been used by the successful party.

Every promise has been faithfully fulfilled as far as possible, and a strict adherence to right and justice maintained. Fair and polite treatment of the people, honesty and uprightness in all their methods, have won for the party this much desired and coveted success.

The victorious party named above is not a political party as all, but one of our most successful and enterprising Dry Goods merchants, who only a few years ago commenced business here in a small room on East Front street.

To-day EISALL'S, No. 21 West Front street, is well and favorably known all through this part of the State, as the leading establishment in the Dry and Fancy Goods line. The growth has been remarkable, and bequests for the proprietor commendable push and energy.

In view of this success in the past, Eisall has decided to make greater efforts still, during the next year to double the volume of trade.

This, of course, means less profits to the business and more money in the pockets of the patrons.

His elegant stores are thronged with buyers, who are well pleased and satisfied with their purchases, and say that they find it much to their advantage to buy at home, instead of going to New York.

In a few days the public will hear more about how we expect to increase our trade to double its present amount.

In the meantime, come in and see the elegant new Bric-a-brac and Novelties we are now showing in the new archway, and the hundreds of other beautiful and seasonable articles through each department at

EDITORIAL NOTES

This is Dreadful!

If the public school teachers of Buffalo and Cincinnati do not get after Dr. J. M. Rice with a sharp stick for his paper in The Forum about them, it will be simply and only because corporal punishment has been abolished. The doctor tells them that it still reigns supreme in Cincinnati, so he may well tremble for the consequences of his great literary effort.

He says the public schools in Buffalo and Cincinnati still belong to the mechanical order of schools. Buffalo is given over to the corrupt sway of politics in the schools. The board there consists of seven members of the common council. The annual reports of public instruction in both cities contain high flown gratulations on the excellence of the teaching. Buffalo has of course a school superintendent rather more metaphysical in his mind than he of the Pork City is, and therefore we are not surprised to find the Buffalo man talking of the "universally accepted psychological law that the concrete should precede the abstract." How the psychological law of the concrete works in Buffalo we learn from a spelling lesson Dr. Rice heard there. After a spelling contest the teacher said:

"You will now write the words."

This should be followed by a reasonable amount of bustle and confusion on the part of the children, as order was not restored until slates, pencils and rulers had been placed in position. When all was quiet, one of the pupils called out

"I ain't got no ruler."

In answer to this the teacher, without correction of the child's language, said:

"Use the way you don't seen to do it yesterday."

This would be an awful libel on Buffalo. In Cincinnati it was even worse. Dr. Rice says the great evil there is concert recitation. He reports from a reading lesson:

"What is a merchant?" the teacher inquired after one of the children had read the word.

"A merchant is a sailor," answered one.

"A merchant is a man what keeps dry goods stores," said another.

"A merchant is a man who buys cheap and sells dear," remarked a third.

The teacher corrected none of these mistakes in imagination, but when one of the children had read the sentence "I broke the glass and I will pay for it," the teacher said, "What mistake did he make?"

"Teacher," said one, "he said 'glass,' and he ought to say 'class.'"

"Right," said the teacher.

"Old Glory"

"Here is the grand army of the republic," was an exclamation that never sustained more the ups of those who witnessed in Cincinnati the Columbian procession of 20,000 schoolboys each carrying an American flag. It stirred the hearts of old soldiers strangely that moving forest of gallant young saplings with their waving banners of red, white and blue. It made others remember the brave rising Indiana girl teacher who first set the fashion of having the country's flag float over the school house during the hours and defended it with a loaded gun when some ruffians sought to tear the glorious banner down.

Patriotism and every other noble sentiment is fostered by appealing to the better emotions. For a hundred years after 1892 these 20,000 boys and their descendants will tell with pride the story of the school procession in the Columbian year when 20,000 boys carried the American flag through the city streets. And if war should come we may be sure that those 20,000 youths will be among the first to go into battle under that banner. As old soldier says he thinks there ought to be stars and stripes celebration of some kind every year, to keep alive in all our hearts the love of country. So they ought, with patriotic music, flags, historical and heroic tableaux and all that will excite the soul and kindle the imagination.

The Norwegian claim to priority of discovery in case of America is undoubtedly true. There is reasonable evidence that some Northmen under Leif Ericson sailed west ward from their far northern shores to Iceland and Greenland and that they came as far as Labrador. It is believed too, that they set foot on the soil of Massachusetts. But when? The nearest historians can come at it is that Eric visited America some years before the Norman conquest. William the Conqueror took possession of the English crown in 1066. What a rousing celebration we would have had about the Northmen if we could only find out when they touched our shores. Norwegians claim that it was in 1000. If so, then Leif Ericson's turn will come in the year 2000.

Census figuring shows that the whole territorial population of the United States increased 28.35 per cent from 1850 to 1880, while the population of the country has increased a little more than 16 per cent. Does this mean that people wear out more clothes than they did previous to 1880 or that the clothes do not wear so well? Or a matter of these men do we make more cloth at home and import less than we did ten years ago?

The temperance women of Chicago have the courage of their convictions anyhow. An offer of $1,000 a month rent was made to them for the right to put a gilded palace, in which to sell tobacco, in the rotunda of their marble halls in the Temperance temple. But Mrs. Care answered: "Admit the vile weed into our temple of truth and purity? Never."

A BIG TIDAL WAVE

The Democratic Victory Growing Still More Decisive.

EVEN OHIO NOW DOUBTFUL.

McKinley's State Close and Claimed for Cleveland by 1,200.

The Republicans Say It Will Take an Official Count to Decide and Are Hopeful of Results—Wisconsin Surely Democratic and Indiana Apparently So—The United States Senate Likely to Pass from the Control of the Republicans. President Harrison Takes His Defeat Without Any Show of Feeling.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 10.—The situation in Ohio has become interesting to a strained degree, and the excitement is at fever heat over the indications that McKinley's own state may possibly be found in the Democratic camp when all the votes are counted.

The Democratic committee has reports from the county chairmen of thirty-six counties, which show a net Democratic gain for Cleveland of 14,440. This leaves fifty five counties to hear from. At the same ratio of increase the state will go Democratic.

The Republican managers are very anxious and admit that the state will be close, but hope for their results from that which the Democrats claim.

The Democrats claim the state for the Cleveland electors by a plurality ranging from 1,000 to 1,500.

Republicans announce that it will require the official count to decide.

CLEVELAND'S VICTORY.

Late Returns Show the Result to Be More Decisive Than Expected.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—The following has been issued from Democratic headquarters:

"Our advices justify the statement that the electoral vote of Michigan and all of the northern states, Wisconsin and Illinois, in addition to those from New York, New Jersey, Indiana and Connecticut and those from the southern states, will be cast for Cleveland and Stevenson. This will make 269 electoral votes in all. The indications are that California has also gone Democratic, thus giving Cleveland and Stevenson not less than 276 electoral votes.

"It is a glorious victory, and the people of the country are entitled to the warmest congratulations."

At Democratic headquarters it is claimed that the returns show that Harrison has lost almost every state in the far west, and calculations based upon the returns west of the Missouri river indicate that Harrison could not have been elected if he had carried New York and Indiana.

Congress Elections.

Reports from the congressional elections are still far from complete. Statements of the political divisions of the membership in the present congress, as compared with the Fifty-third congress necessarily contain elements of uncertainty that cannot be avoided, but the reports that have been received do not make material changes in the tables heretofore sent out by the United Press.

Democrats claim that they have carried the Wyoming legislature, which thereby secure a successor to Senator Warren, whose term expires March 4 next. This would give a Democratic senate and house and defended it with a loaded gun when some ruffians sought to tear the glorious banner down.

Reports from the congressional elections are still far from complete. Statements of the political divisions of the membership in the Fifty-third congress necessarily contain elements of uncertainty that cannot be avoided, but the reports that have been received do not make material changes in the tables heretofore sent out by the United Press.

Democrats claim that they have carried the Wyoming legislature, which thereby secure a successor to Senator Warren, whose term expires March 4 next. This would give a Democratic senate and house during the next session of congress. And almost certainly give to the third party senators the control of that body. Enthusiastic Democrats, however, claim that their party will have enough additional senators from other western states to give them control of the upper branch of congress after March 4. But a substantial basis for that claim cannot be seen.

A number of changes in the composition of state delegations in the next house of representatives as heretofore given are made necessary by returns received today. The results, however, do not vary materially from the figures given out last night. Secretary Nash of New York district Francis Mervin (Rep.) seems to have defeated Henry M. Bloss (Dem.). This and other changes noted gives the Democratic 223 members in the house; Republicans 122, Farmers' Alliance 10. The Republican column is likely to be increased by the supplemental election to be held in Kansas.

Congratulated by Harrity.

Chairman Harrity, of the Democratic national committee, sent telegraphic congratulation to Vice President-elect Stevenson, Edward Murphy, Jr., chairman of the state Democratic committee; Richard Croker, Lieutenant Governor Sheehan and Hugh McLaughlin and Thomas H. Pearsall, of Brooklyn. The telegram to Mr. Stevenson read:

HON. A. E. Stevenson, Bloomington, Ills.:

I need hardly say to you how my warmest congratulations. Your magnificent work throughout the campaign contributed largely to the result. God bless you.

W. H. HARRITY.

Mayor Grant sent a letter of congratulation to President-elect Cleveland. The mayor said the great oration of Senator Hill in Tammany hall, the heavy work done by Lieutenant Governor Sheehan and Chairman Murphy and the brilliant conduct of John I. Davenport, added to the the magnificent work done by Tammany Hall, were all responsible for the glorious rolling up of such a stupendous majority for Cleveland in New York state. For the work done outside Messrs. Harrity and Whitney were deserving of a large share of credit.

Republican Claims.

The Republican national committee held a conference behind locked doors, and after adjournment the following bulletin was given out:

"From the latest advices received at headquarters the result of the election for president depends upon the returns from Wisconsin, Illinois and Indiana, all of which are exceedingly close, but claimed by the Republicans in each case. With the electors from these states Harrison and Reid will have 236 sure votes."

John S. Clarkson was the first to leave the room communicating. He was followed soon after by Secretary McComas. About 4 o'clock Chairman Carter emerged from the room and said substantially the party victory in Indiana and Illinois. He would stand by his bulletin.

The object of the conference or its outcome Chairman Carter refused to reveal.

Whitelaw Reid Interviewed.

The Republican vice presidential candidate, Whitelaw Reid, was asked by a reporter to what he attributed the Republican defeat. He replied, "To a lack of Republican support."

"How do you explain that?" he was asked.

"Evidently the whole Republican party do not approve the Republican position. If the disaster had been confined to one or two doubtful states other explanations would be possible, but when it extends from Connecticut and New Jersey to Illinois, Wisconsin and California it is clearly due to a popular decency affecting the party throughout the country.

"The question on which such a general feeling may naturally exist is the tariff. Obviously many Republicans think, as they did in 1890, that the McKinley tariff has gone too far. In view of this feeling it is probably best for the country that the Democratic victory should be complete."

"How are you feeling about it personally?" Oh, well, you remember General Logan's reply to the question eight years ago. He said he felt like the boy who had stubbed his toe; he was too old to cry and it hurt too much to laugh. I am extremely sorry for the party people, but when it extends from Connecticut to California it is clearly the first time in thirty years to unrestrained Democratic rule; but personally I have little regret. I intended to get out of public life when I resigned the mission to France, had no intention of re-entering it again, never supposed I should be made a candidate for the presidency, and never asked a single human being to promote my nomination.

"When it came of course I was gratified, but the pleasure to me just where I started last spring to please myself. I am profoundly sorry the Republican party is defeated, but I can bear my own reverse with composure."

Milliken and Boutelle.

Congressman Milliken, of Maine, was too disheartened over the defeat of President Harrison to tell what he thought as to the cause of the Democratic avalanche. The Republican politicians were all profoundly depressed, while the Democratic organs were extremely jubilant over the result. Both sides were surprised at the big Democratic majority in this county and over Harrison's poor showing above the Harlem river. It is a fact that the Democratic managers were surprised at the result of the election in doubtful states and in those that were supposed to be Republican. The calculations and estimates of prominent politicians on both sides were upset.

Congressman Boutelle, of Maine, said: "I do not know how to account for it. Possibly it was due to the ignorance of voters, who had been led to believe that protection was not a benefit to them and that a reciprocity would be a Godsend. They may regret their action. I am all the more surprised on account of the high opinions entertained among my Democratic friends of the present administration."

Being asked to give his views on the result of the election, he replied: "What is the use? It is all over. I am convinced that we are beaten. I thought so last night. I have no hope in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin."

Carlisle and Brown.

Senator Carlisle, of Kentucky, who was in town during the election, was jubilant. When asked today how he accounted for the defeat of President Harrison he replied:

"It was simply a protest against protection, the force bill and the policy of the Republican party. I am really surprised over the overwhelming Democratic victory. It was one of the greatest triumphs the Democracy ever experienced, and I doubt if the Republicans will return to power for many years. The senator was not inclined to enter into a discussion of details of the result.

Governor Frank Brown, of Maryland, who came to New York, said: "It was the revolt of the unprotected against the protected classes. I think, also, the time has come when no president can be re-elected.

"In turn a time the parties were on a different basis. Now a president who has numerous offices to distribute incurs the opposition of about nine-tenths of his constituents by the way he does not patronage. Patronage power, I think, will defeat any president who runs a second time. That fact, I think, contributed to President Harrison's defeat. To a certain extent the same thing is true of governorships, but perhaps not to so great an extent as in the presidency. The fear of the force bill was another element that helped defeat the president. I think it will be a good many years before the Republican party will regain control of the presidential office."

Quay Has Nothing to Say.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—United States Senator Quay reach this city this morning and registered at the Continental hotel, where he met Chairman Reeder, of the Republican state committee. They had a conference upon political matters. This forenoon Senator Quay was found at the Republican state headquarters in company with Collector of Port Cooper. A reporter asked the senator what he thought of the result and he replied that it was awful.

"How do you account for it?"

"We had not votes enough," was the reply.

"How do you account for that?"

"I have nothing to say."

When the reporter said he would like to have Senator Quay's opinion as to the cause of the defeat, the junior senator repeated that he had nothing to say.

Harrison Shows No Feeling.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 10.—The Post says that President Harrison is unable to account for the overwhelming victory of the Democrats, but shows no feeling over the result. In commenting upon a telegram informing him that there was still a possibility of Indiana returning Republican electors, he said:

"If my good friends out there will only carry Marion county for me I shall be content."

The president's plans are pretty well formed, and it can be stated authentically that when he goes out of the White House on March 4 he will return directly to Indianapolis and resume again the practice of law.

THE LATEST SHOWING.

Fuller Returns from the States Whose Second Votes Were Unascertained.

CHICAGO, Nov. 10.—The later returns do not abate in any way the decisive Democratic victory in the state of Illinois on national and state tickets. Commercial averages of all parties now generally agree that the national and state tickets have a Democratic majority estimated at 23,000 to 25,000. Democrats have a majority in the senate of 3 and in the house of representatives of 11.

Returns from nearly all the congressional districts in the state are complete, and indicate that the Democrats have elected congressmen in the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Eighth, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth and Nineteenth districts and two congressmen at large; Republicans in the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twentieth districts. The vote in the First district is very close, and it will require the official count to decide the result definitely.

It is now definitely known that Joseph G. Cannon (Rep.) has been elected to congress from the Fifteenth district, heretofore classed as doubtful.

New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Cleveland's plurality in this state is 44,405. His plurality in the city is 75,624, and it is more than 28,000 in Kings county. The result in Kings county was a surprise, as the Democratic managers had claimed only 18,000 to 20,000 plurality. There were heavy Democratic gains in some of the strongest Republican counties in the interior of the state.

The Democrats have elected a good majority of the assemblymen in this state, which insures the election of a Democrat to the United States senate to succeed Frank Hiscock. Thirty Democratic assemblymen are elected from this city, and seventeen of the eighteen assemblymen elected from Kings county are Democrats. In the next assembly there will be seventy-five Democrats and fifty-three Republicans, which will give the Democrats a sweeping majority on joint ballot.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—The Herald says: "The Republican figurers at headquarters virtually concede the election of Governor Russell by about 1,700, or, to be exact, 1,667. The dispatch from Worcester confirmed the belief that Mr. Haile would lose the state, as that city is reported to have given him but 500 plurality, which shows a net gain of 200 for Russell. The small towns, which have been slow in coming in, do not cut down the estimated Russell plurality materially, and there is little doubt that [illegible] will be elected. The vote for [illegible] will be [illegible] from all [illegible] the balance of the Republican state ticket has been elected. Lieutenant Governor William H. Haile, the Republican candidate for governor, has telegraphed Governor Russell to Governor-elect as follows, "Please accept my congratulations on your election."

Connecticut.

HARTFORD, Nov. 10.—Nothing in the later returns received by The Courant (Rep.) changes the result here materially. Cleveland's plurality is about 5,000. The report that sufficient Prohibition and scattering votes were cast to prevent Morris' majority is not confirmed by the drift of the official returns. The congressional delegation is 1 Republican and 3 Democrats. The state senate is a tie. The house shows a Republican majority of 14, which will become 18 when two Republicans in Cheshire are seated. They were elected, but declared not elected by the moderator because the word "Republican" was not on the tickets. There were four ties for representatives voted off. East Hartford and Salem went Republican, Columbia and Durham Democratic.

Michigan.

DETROIT, Nov. 10.—The Republicans have carried 8 out of 14 electoral districts. The legislature will probably be composed as follows: Senate—Republicans, 18; Democrats and Populists, 14. House—Republicans, 65; Democrats and Populists, 35. According to the returns now in, which are somewhat meager, it appears that the following congressmen are successful: First district, Logan Chipman (Rep.); Second, James Gorman (Dem.); Third, J. C. Burrows (Rep.); Fourth, H. F. Thomas (Rep.); Fifth, F. Richardson (Rep.); Sixth, D. M. Aiken (Rep.); Seventh, P. V. Wixson (Rep.); Eighth, W. L. Linton (Rep.); Ninth, John W. Moon (Rep.); Tenth, E. P. Allen (Rep.); Eleventh, John Avery (Rep.); Twelfth, S. M. Stephenson (Rep.).

Colorado.

DENVER, Nov. 10.—Additional returns only tend to pile up the Populist majority in Colorado, which will be anywhere from 5,000 to 7,000, with Waite, Populist candidate for governor, probably 3,000 votes behind his ticket. Pence (Populist) is elected to congress in the First district by 1,500 to 2,000 majority, and Bell (Populist) is elected in the Second district by 3,000 or 4,000 majority. The Populists will have control of the lower house of the legislature and probably of the senate. Long term senators elected will have a vote in the session of 1895 for a United States senator to succeed Senator Wolcott. Of the seventeen long term senators chosen the Populists have elected ten or twelve and possibly more.

Nebraska.

OMAHA, Nov. 10.—Nebraska returns are still fragmentary, but indications are that the Weaver electors will carry the state by 5,000 to 7,000. Crounse (Rep.) for governor will probably have a small majority, also Majors (Rep.) for lieutenant governor. The balance of the state ticket will probably be missed and close, with chances favoring the Republicans. The Republicans will elect two out of six congressmen and possibly three. Gains for Republicans as compared with two years ago are being reported. Democratic gains are equally noticeable. The independents lose in former strongholds and gain slightly in towns. One-third of the Democrats of the state voted for Weaver electors, which explains why they carried the state.

Kansas.

TOPEKA, Nov. 10.—The Republican central committee of the state now claim 8,000 Republican majority in Kansas, while the chairman of the Populist committee claims the majority for the Populist state ticket, all congressmen and a majority in the coming state legislature. Returns are coming in very slowly. Chairman Jones, of the Democratic state central committee, telegraphed Chairman Harrity in New York that the electoral vote of Kansas would surely be cast for Weaver and Field. It is probable that nothing absolutely definite will be known for twenty-four hours.

The seventh congressional district is conceded to Jerry Simpson, fusionist, by about 700 majority. This means a Republican gain over two years ago of more than 7,000.

West Virginia.

WHEELING, Nov. 10.—Notwithstanding the confident expectations of Republicans, West Virginia will not break the solid south this year. The disappointing returns came from Republican counties, especially Kanawha county, where the force bill ghost and mixed schools apportionment swayed the votes.

The Republicans of the state are stunned by the result and cannot account for it. Davis, for governor, runs ahead of Harrison, but is too far behind MacCorkle (Dem.) to pull through. The latter will have from 1,500 to 2,000 plurality. Republicans will control the house of delegates, but the legislature will have a Democratic majority of 10 on joint ballot, which insures the re-election of Senator Faulkner. It will be some time before definite figures can be obtained.

Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 10.—The next state senate will consist of 31 Republicans and 19 Democrats. The general assembly will include 143 Republicans and 64 Democrats. The Republican majority on joint ballot will be 20. John Dean (Rep.) is elected justice of the supreme court. The common pleas judges elected are: Philadelphia, Michael Arnold (Rep.); Lancaster, David McMullen (Dem.); Allegheny, Edwin H. Stoey (Rep.); Dauphin and Lebanon, John M. Pherson; Butler and Lawrence, John M. Greer (Rep.); Schuylkill, R. H. Koehn (Rep.); Berks, H. Willis Bland (Dem.); Potter and McKean, Arthur G. Olmsted (Rep.).

Wyoming.

CHEYENNE, Nov. 10.—It will require an official count to decide if Wyoming is for Harrison or Weaver. The majority will not be 100 either way. Chairman Vandeventer, of the Republican state committee, conceded the election of Osborne for governor and Clarke for supreme judge. He claims the legislature on joint ballot and the election of Clarke to congress by 300. Chairman New, of the Democratic committee, says the Democrats and Populists have 10 majority in the legislature and have elected Osborne as governor, Clarke as supreme judge and Steffen as congressman by a majority of 500.

California.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 10.—Out of 3,199 precincts, including 367 in San Francisco, returns give Harrison 87,550, Cleveland 88,698, Weaver 19,350. Weaver's vote was somewhat larger than was claimed by the managers of both political parties, and cut into the Republican vote in some counties much heavier than it did into the Democratic vote. The legislature will stand in joint ballot as follows: Republicans 63, Democrats 57, Populists 3; total from which 77 votes [illegible] Republican state ticket has been elected. Lieutenant Governor William H. Haile, the Republican candidate for governor, has telegraphed Governor-elect Russell to Governor-elect as follows, "Please accept my congratulations on your election."

Connecticut.

HARTFORD, Nov. 10.—Nothing in the later returns received by The Courant (Rep.) changes the result here materially. Cleveland's plurality is about 5,000. The report that sufficient Prohibition and scattering votes were cast to prevent Morris' majority is not confirmed by the drift of the official returns. The congressional delegation is 1 Republican and 3 Democrats. The state senate is a tie. The house shows a Republican majority of 14, which will become 18 when two Republicans in Cheshire are seated. They were elected, but declared not elected by the moderator because the word "Republican" was not on the tickets. There were four ties for representatives voted off. East Hartford and Salem went Republican, Columbia and Durham Democratic.

Michigan.

DETROIT, Nov. 10.—The Republicans have carried 8 out of 14 electoral districts. The legislature will probably be composed as follows: Senate—Republicans, 18; Democrats and Populists, 14. House—Republicans, 65; Democrats and Populists, 35. According to the returns now in, which are somewhat meager, it appears that the following congressmen are successful: First district, Logan Chipman (Rep.); Second, James Gorman (Dem.); Third, J. C. Burrows (Rep.); Fourth, H. F. Thomas (Rep.); Fifth, F. Richardson (Rep.); Sixth, D. M. Aiken (Rep.); Seventh, P. V. Wixson (Rep.); Eighth, W. L. Linton (Rep.); Ninth, John W. Moon (Rep.); Tenth, E. P. Allen (Rep.); Eleventh, John Avery (Rep.); Twelfth, S. M. Stephenson (Rep.).

Colorado.

DENVER, Nov. 10.—Additional returns only tend to pile up the Populist majority in Colorado, which will be anywhere from 5,000 to 7,000, with Waite, Populist candidate for governor, probably 3,000 votes behind his ticket. Pence (Populist) is elected to congress in the First district by 1,500 to 2,000 majority, and Bell (Populist) is elected in the Second district by 3,000 or 4,000 majority. The Populists will have control of the lower house of the legislature and probably of the senate. Long term senators elected will have a vote in the session of 1895 for a United States senator to succeed Senator Wolcott. Of the seventeen long term senators chosen the Populists have elected ten or twelve and possibly more.

It will be some time before definite figures can be obtained.

Iowa.

DES MOINES, Nov. 10.—The returns so far received indicate a Republican plurality of 22,000 to Iowa on electors. The state ticket runs a little behind. The Republicans elect 9 congressmen in the 11 districts. Walter I. Hayes, of the Second district, is the only Democrat elected. The Republican majority on joint ballot is 30 and the Prohibition vote 8,000.

Nevada.

CARSON, Nov. 10.—The Weaver electors carry the state by an estimated majority of 3,000. F. G. Newlands, silver nominee for congress, has a majority of 1,500 over Woodburn and Bliss. The silver portion of legislative ticket carries nearly every county in the state.

DR. BRIGGS ON TRIAL.

The Accused Is Denied the Right to Interpose Objections.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—The trial of Professor Charles A. Briggs, D.D., commenced in the Scotch Presbyterian church, Madison avenue and Forty-first street, at 10 o'clock this morning. Moderator Hitchcock was in the chair and about 215 of the ministers and elders composing the New York presbytery, the body which is sitting in judgment upon Dr. Briggs, were present.

After the prayer opening the trial the moderator asked for the charges, but was interrupted by Dr. Briggs, who asked leave to interpose several objections. The latter address he outlined the line the prosecution had taken in regard to the old charges, and concluded that the presbytery constitute had no power to now bring those new ones.

Colonel J. J. McCook, counsel for the prosecuting committee, answered the objections very technically, but deplored the fact that he was compelled to have to argue with the defendant.

Dr. Briggs, when Colonel McCook had finished, arose to reply, but was shocked by Rev. Robert Booth, who made the point of order that the discussion was irregular. Dr. Briggs claimed that he had only been able to state his objections, while the prosecuting committee had been allowed to answer them, and say several other things which he could controvert by quotations from theological books.

The request to allow him to answer the prosecution was denied by the moderator, and, on Dr. Briggs' appeal from this decision, it was put to a vote and the moderator sustained—73 to 58.

The amended charges and specifications against Dr. Briggs were then read as revised, and a little more explicit and with more attention to detail than the old charges. They occupy thirty-five pages of a good sized book, but cover the same ground as the old charges. They were compiled by and signed by the full prosecuting committee, consisting of Dr. Birch, chairman; J. J. Lampe, D.D., R. I. Sample, D.D., John S. Stemmler and J. J. McCook. After the reading a recess was taken.

The New Orleans Strike.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 10.—The strike continues and both sides remain firm, and no violence has been reported. The governor still continues apprehensive, however, and will probably take charge of the Big Brown's nightfall, as the city authorities cannot cope with the lawless element should an outbreak occur at this critical time.

The Lingo Trial.

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 10.—There was a slim attendance at the Lingo trial. The most important witness was Mrs. Millie Haines, who testified that she saw Lingo in the Bush lot, where the body of Mrs. Annie Miller was found, that his overalls were slightly torn and that he limped.

A Society Wedding.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 10.—Miss Kate Heiser, sister of Mrs. Willie Vanderbilt, was married here to Edward Hazlehurst. The wedding ceremonies were elaborate. Mrs. Vanderbilt's gift was a North trousseau.

Another Train Held Up.

GUTHRIE, O. T., Nov. 10.—The express train on the Santa Fe road was held up at Wharton. The express car was blown open with dynamite, the messengers wounded and overpowered and the safe robbed.

The Small Boy and the Pie.

"I feel like eating my pie now."

"But I guess I'll get a drink of water first."

"Ha! Well, I'm glad I got here in time!"

"Pie, boy? Who's seen your pie?"

At the next stop: "Confound that boy's impudence!"—Truth.

MARLBOROUGH IS DEAD.

The Duke Found Lifeless in His Bed at Blenheim Palace.

LILLIAN PRICE AGAIN A WIDOW.

His Duchess Was the Famous Belle of Troy, N. Y., Who Wedded the Millionaire Louis C. Hamersley, Who Died Intestate—The Career of the Duke.

LONDON, Nov. 10.—There was great excitement in club and society circles yesterday when it was made known that the Duke of Marlborough had been found dead in Blenheim palace. Although the Duke had not been in good health for a long time, his sudden death caused great surprise and shared public interest almost equally with the American election.

The duke has of late been giving considerable attention to his Blenheim estate. Since the duke was permitted by the courts last December to sell certain outlying portions of the Blenheim property for repayment of money expended in the improvement of the remainder, he has shown a desire to place Blenheim in the best condition possible.

The duke retired in the evening, as usual, and when a servant went to his apartment in the morning to assist in his toilet, the duke made no response. The servant approached the bed and at once saw that the duke was dead. A physician was promptly summoned, and an examination showed that the duke had been dead for several hours. The cause of death was heart disease.

The Marquis of Blandford, the duke's heir, and Lord Randolph Churchill, the duke's brother, were notified by telegraph of his death and went to Woodstock this afternoon. They tried to persuade Dr. Candwell to certify to death from heart disease, in order that an inquest might be avoided. This Dr. Candwell refused to do, and the inquest probably will be held on Friday. The inquest would have been demanded by life insurance companies in any event, as the duke carried a very large insurance on his life. There are rumors, moreover, that the duke died of an overdose of chloral.

Marlborough's Life.

The full name and titles of the Duke of Marlborough were: George Charles Spencer-Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, Marquis of Blandford, Earl of Sunderland, Earl of Marlborough, Baron Spencer of Wormbighton, and Baron Churchill of Sandridge, all of England; Prince of the Holy Roman Empire; Prince of Mindelheim in Suabia late Lieutenant Royal Horse guards; D. L., Oxford. He was born at his ancestral castle, Blenheim, where he was found dead yesterday, on May 13, 1844. Very early in life he began a career which culminated in a scandalous divorce which made his name notorious on two continents.

Even before the early age that English boys of his class are sent from home for their academic education he had become involved in such serious scrapes that he was sent to live with a clergyman for reformation. Scandals which involved his name with that of the neighborhood farmers' daughters resulted in his being sent to the continent, where his education was continued in scholastic and other pursuits, which were followed with less social distinction on the continent than they could have been in England.

He returned to England at the age of twenty-five, and married in November, 1869, Lady Albertha Frances Anne Hamilton, daughter of the Duke of Abercorn. His bachelor reputation was not improved by his career after marriage. A long series of scandals resulted in a petition for divorce by the Duchess of Marlborough. The Countess of Aylesford was named as the correspondent in the case. She was the daughter of Colonel Pevis William, M. P., and described as a very beautiful woman.

An English Sensation.

The divorce trial was one of the most sensational in the history of English high life scandals.

The testimony established the charges made by the duchess, and incidentally disclosed acts of such peculiar cruelty that after the divorce, which was promptly granted, the duke was socially ostracized in England.

The queen in several noticeable ways emphasized this ostracism, and it was still further insisted upon when, two years later, the Earl of Aylesford died in Texas, where he had gone into what was, for him, exile following the disgrace of his name by the Marlborough divorce proceedings. Three years after the divorce and a year after the death of the Earl of Aylesford his social and financial embarrassments were so great in England that the duke came to this country, where he was received into society with many and marked distinctions.

After his first visit in the summer of 1886, it was rumored that the duke had made an engagement of marriage with Mrs. Hamersley, the wealthy widow of Louis Hamersley. Both denied the engagement, but in June, 1888, they were married in the city hall by Mayor Hewitt, the only witness being Mr. and Mrs. Henry Clews.

At that time the new Duchess of Marlborough was in receipt of an income of $360,000 a year from the estate of her husband, Louis Hamersley had left a will giving his widow the full income of the estate, valued between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000. The estate itself was left to the prospective male issue of J. Hooker Hamersley, cousin of Louis. The gift must be ensued, but the state court permitted the duchess to reinvest a portion of the estate so as to increase its earning powers.

The Heir to the Title and Estate.

This, it was said, was made necessary to secure an income of $300,000 yearly required to maintain the Blenheim castle estate. With this income, supplemented by revenues derived from a sale of portions of the Blenheim lands, the historical old place has been greatly improved and nearly restored to the condition in which it was left by the last duke who had money enough to maintain the place. He lived several generations ago.

Since his second marriage the duke has devoted much of his attention to the rehabilitation of Blenheim, and has also gained some favorable notice by his contributions to British magazines.

Blenheim and the title both go to his son by his first marriage, Charles Richard John Spencer-Churchill, Marquis of Blandford, now twenty-two years of age. He will be the ninth Duke of Marlborough. He and three sisters have lived with their mother, and have had no family relations with the late duke since the divorce.

WOMAN AND HOME.

SERIOUS RESULTS WHICH OFTEN COME FROM CARELESSNESS.

To illustrate the culpable carelessness of some wives a friend gives the following story told by the wife of an eminent physician: "I have no doubt," she said, in the course of conversation, "that many of the distressing female troubles of the time and the more obscure ramifications and manifestations might, if parents but knew it, be directly traced to some act of attention thoughtlessness on the part of the nursery maid. It is quite dreadful to think of such a delicate little piece of mechanism being given over to the care of an ignorant, indifferent girl. The first sudden jar, the weight of the body is resting at all of the spine, might be exceedingly injurious. Of course, I would not advise you, if I had any say, to abolish baby carriages for infants under a year old at all.

"But your nurse is too lazy or too weak to carry her nursling, get another woman, but do not expose your helpless little one to the jarring movements of even the best designed little carriage across a path, etc. Besides the actual hurt of the human body has a great protection against cold, and an abundance of eider-down or wool will take the place of the protecting growth of a kindly broom and strong, fatherly arm.

"And will you what I actually saw the other day? I was ushered after a moment's visitation. "The story is so painful that I hardly like to tell it, but it may do good to know it. A young, rich home, and one to which many ladies are exposed. I was walking in — Street one afternoon when a nurse with four certainly healthy dressed me with a full vacuum at a very quick pace, the little carriage, with its dashing baby, swaying to and down on its springs with the rapid motion. 'Oh, take care!' I exclaimed, as she passed me with a sudden swerve of the little carriage, 'you will hurt the child.' The girl gave me a supercilious look of her head and muttered something that I did not catch, turning at the same time into the basement door of a large, fine house, and without stopping under the awning she bumped her carriage down the three or four steps that led to the interior.

"I wish she would like to be done by," said to myself, on watching the performance, 'although it is small thanks that I will get, I dare say.' So I ran up the steps, rang the bell, and told the butler who came to the door that I wished to see the lady of the house. Luckily I found favor with him, for the circumstances that followed me into a bit of the library, and a grand affair a pretty young woman walked in with an inquiring expression on her pleasant face. 'I beg your pardon for intruding,' I began, 'but I feel it is my duty to tell you that your maid will do your child serious injury if she is thus allowed to use the carriage. I have just noticed, and I was proceeding to give her a little information about the delicate structure of the baby's back and spine of young children, when her manner froze me at once. 'Thank you,' she said haughtily, 'but I think I can trust to the experience of my nurse.'

"As she spoke there came the sound of a rush of rapid footsteps in the hall, and a maid burst in upon us. 'Mrs. A——, some one's after me!' she cried. The baby has a fit! In an instant the mother was out of the room and running down the basement stairs, while I, feeling that I could be of no use, left the house, pitying the poor young thing too much to blame her. The next day I passed by and noticed with a start of horror the fatal insignia of mourning on the door—the baby was dead. Did the doctors know, I wondered, that it had been murdered?"

A Peanut Hunt.

A pleasant and easily arranged evening entertainment, suitable for winter or summer, is prepared in this way:

First, put in order the room in which you intend to entertain your guests, as any change in the position of the furniture is undesirable after "the party" is ready. It is a good plan to remove any fragile articles of bric-a-brac or furniture that may be within easy reach of the "hunters." Get a good supply of peanuts, according to the size of the room and the number of your guests.

Count the peanuts and record the number. Then put them in hidden in every imaginable but particularly in every unimaginable place. Exercise all your ingenuity, and remember that what you are sure are to find when you have concealed. Sometimes, however, it happens that a very conspicuous place is the best hiding place.

Now prepare as many little baskets or receptacles of some sort as you are to have guests. The little "cat baskets" are very good for this purpose, but boxes or larger baskets will serve as well. A little decoration of some sort enhances the pleasure of the seekers, and at the close of the evening the baskets may be given as souvenirs. The small baskets may be prettily grouped in a large basket, and both may be tied with ribbons.

If the company is large the players may be asked to "hunt in couples," and the baskets may be arranged to match each other.

When the hunt begins, after you have placed the nuts, are to act as umpires, in case there should be any question as to the first finders, and you will also have to note whether all the nuts have been found, and so determine the end of the game.

Sometimes a single nut is dipped in ink or dyed red and hidden away very secretly, and the person who finds this particular red or black nut is the winner of the game. But generally the prize is given to the person or the couple whose basket shows the greatest number of nuts.—Youth's Companion.

Rules for Cooking Meats.

The orthodox rule for the cooking of meat, fish and fowl is to allow a quarter of an hour to every pound; yet this recipe tends to be mixed with brains. Some families like rare, others well done meats again, a joint may be unusually thick or remarkably thin; again, full grown and starved beasts, such as beef and mutton are best with red gravy coming from them, while immature or white meats, such as lamb, veal, pork, etc., are absolutely dangerous unless done through to the bone. A good rule is to allow twelve to fifteen minutes, according to the taste of the family and the thickness of the joint, for the cooking of every pound of beef and mutton; fifteen to eighteen minutes for the cooking of every pound of pork, veal, lamb, ham, bacon, fish and every kind of fowl.

Accidents happen, however, the oven may be too hot or too cool, the fire too slow and—what not? So a cook should learn to know by the appearance of the meat itself when it is sufficiently cooked. How can this be done? By carefully observing the appearance of the meat around the center bone or bones. If the learner be in doubt, the blade of a knife can be run in about an inch to the bone, and the meat slightly raised and examined for a moment or two. After one or two trials, this will be found to be an infallible method. It is quite right that next to the bone beef and mutton should be red and lightly, but if any blue or the mutton has that strange, raw look peculiar to mutton that has just felt the heat of the fire, the joint needs a little more cooking, while white meats should be white, even to the bone, with the exception, perhaps, of both, which many people prefer with a little pinky juice oozing through.—Good Housekeeping.

How Moths Multiply.

It is now a clearly defined fact that there are three distinct species of wool destroying moths common to this country. The common species are light brown in color. They begin to appear late in April and may be occasionally be seen about as late as August.

They pair off and the female then searches for suitable places for the deposition of her eggs, working her way into dark corners, crevices of the walls, cracks in the floor, or deep into the folds of garments, apparently choosing by instinct the most favorable places.

The moth lays from eighteen to one hundred and forty eggs at a time. From these eggs hatch, in a period of three to seven days, the white, soft larvæ or worms, all of which begin to make a case for themselves from the fragments of the cloth upon which they feed. The case is in the shape of a hollow roll.

The worm reaches its full growth in thirty days, and then, crawling into some yet more protected spot, remains torpid during the winter with its cocoon.

It is the thirty-six days' period from the time the eggs are laid to the time the worm or grub reaches full size that the damage is done.

After a thorough airing of a woolen fabric for the purpose of driving out any concealed moth—for a moth abhors light—and after time has been given to the development of any concealed egg, you may be reasonably sure that there is nothing harmful on the fabric, then it is as safe done up in a paper parcel as it would be if saturated and buried beneath all the camphor and remedies in existence.—Philadelphia Upholsterer.

A Word for the Wife and Mother.

No one loves better than the writer to see neat little homes arranged with taste and care; to read of neat little wives tripping to meet their husbands, their glossy hair neatly brushed, a dozen pies on the pantry shelves, four loaves of bread, beautifully browned, on the kitchen table, the kettle singing, the steak "doing" and every thing humming as merrily as a top. It is the ever-recurring love of romance, it is natural, it is brutal, to state that all this costs money in hand; that if you live from hand to mouth from day to day your stove would splutter and refuse to bake anything; your pies would be horrid, your bread heavy and sour. That the little wife would have no time to brush her hair nor bake pies. She would no sooner get the baby to sleep than Johnny would come in with his one pair of trousers torn so as to demand immediate attention, and his noise would set—baby up again. First it takes a deuce of a measure to get the lingering out some things our Puritan great-grandmothers are said to have done. I don't believe they did 'em, myself.

When is it safe to become $100, expenditure $100 in, result misery. Income the same, expenditure $99 18s., result happiness? Dickens, is it not? He was right of course. The principle is correct. Cut your coat according to your cloth. But if it is to be of homespun wear it gladly and call it homespun. Don't buy broadcloth at home spun prices and call the world to witness how advantageously you spend your money. —Mary Abbott in Chicago Post.

A Word About False Hair.

False hair is an abomination. Of course there comes a day when age has swooped down upon the once luxuriant growth and carried off great handfuls of glossy tresses that must be replaced through the agency of the dealer in hirsute adornments. Then and then only is false hair justifiable, yet it is a fact that many women not more than thirty-five years of age wear false bangs because it is such a trouble to fix their own.

This is a terrible mistake, and we have no doubt that where these long ones are worn the very question of false hair has had much to do with cooling the ardor of the husband, who perhaps was attracted largely by the pretty and becoming style in which his wife arranged her own glossy locks before marriage. If a woman's crowning glory is her hair, why not make the most of it, instead of, because she is tired or it is not actually curly resort to a pinned on affair, guaranteed for a few dollars to withstand dampness.

The bangs never deceive any one, and the transformation at night, when my lady takes it off and reveals a plain, smooth pate that is usually unbecoming, is enough to shock any man. Outside of all this, a man thinks that a women who tries to deceive about her hair will likewise indulge in little deceptions on other points, and the false hair at once proves a setback to admiration, no matter how beautifully it may be adjusted.—Philadelphia Times.

The Physique of the Girl of Today.

The American girl of today has more arms, neck and bust than formerly. Twenty years ago her arms were stuck to her body and she had no neck above it. To a certain extent these things are true now, so it is often remarked that Rachel Ohlmus's physique better neck and shoulders than those of this country though their faces are not so pretty.

The present style of corsage makes she bust somewhat high and the waist as long as possible, the latter effect being heightened by making the corset so as to repress and confine both bust and hips. One must consumed the first pound, which is an improvement on the old fashion requiring that the bust must be low. A low bust is a mark of an inferior physical type, as you may observe in many tribes of savages. In that respect it is like an overlong waist, which can never properly be considered beautiful.

After awhile we shall see a revolution in the style, which will demand that the hips shall appear as high as possible, so as to give more width to the legs and the most graceful effects of drapery. Look at the Greek statues and understand what I mean.—Young Ladies' Bazar.

One's Age.

The unwillingness of women who have passed a certain age—and of men, too, for that matter—to avow frankly the number of birthdays they have had is proverbial the world over. In France, which is reputed the most courteous country in the world, the custom prevails of asking who had no longer young is almost universally respected. Even in the courts of justice a way is sometimes found to escape the necessity of a frank avowal.

A lady whose appearance indicated that she had left her fortieth year behind, her was not long ago ordered by the president of the court to state where she was a witness to tell how old she was.

"Twenty years, monsieur le president," she murmured.

The judge merely smiled at this very indefinite reply and pressed her no further.

A witty lady not long ago remarked in company: "When the delicate question of age was under discussion:

"Oh, you know I have a way of making myself out younger than I am without telling a lie at all."

"Indeed! How do you do it?"

"Well, I put the sin all upon the questioner. You see, when one of my female friends asks me how old I am, I answer, 'Oh, I'm older than you are, you know, my dear—as much as a year. By the way, how old are you?' And then she always knocks off more from my age than I should ever dare to myself."—Youth's Companion.

One Question Settled.

"Josiah," said Mrs. Chigwater, "I don't like to speak of anything unpleasant, but Percy's conduct has become unbearable, and I shall have to hunt for another girl. When a serious difference arises between a cook and her mistress"—

"Eh?" said Mr. Chigwater, looking up from his newspaper, dimly conscious that something in the nature of a problem had been presented for his consideration, "what is it, Maria? Difference between a cook and her mistress? That's easy. One cooks the steak and the other steaks the cook."

HIS NEW PASTORATE.

DR. MITCHELL PREACHES IN THE GRAND AVENUE M. E. CHURCH.

An Eloquent Discourse.—The Nobility of Serving for the Good of Others. —Impresses a Large Congregation in Kansas City.

Rev. Dr. Mitchell, late the pastor of the Methodist church of this city, has taken charge in his new field, and is thus referred to in the Kansas City Journal of Nov. 7:

Dr. Charles B. Mitchell, the new pastor of the Grand avenue M. E. church, was greeted by a large congregation yesterday morning, despite the rainy weather. The fact that a new face and a new voice were to be seen and heard in the pulpit so long filled by Dr. Young was an interesting one for many of the faithful among visitors. Dr. Mitchell's name is a familiar one among Methodists of the West, as his father formerly bore him. He was therefore, greeted by old friends rather than strangers, and came rather to an old charge than a new one. His fame as a powerful pulpit orator had preceded him and the expectations of the audience were more than fulfilled in the eloquent and powerful discourse he preached.

Dr. Mitchell has a powerful and at times a dramatic delivery, a clear, ringing and resonant voice and the manner of an orator. He is born orator and, while not declaiming his sermons, and while they are powerful with the warmth of earnestness, there is never a false inflection. The climaxes are natural and stirring. He is yet a young man, being only 35 years of age, but he is destined to become a central figure in Kansas City religious circles.

Dr. Mitchell took for his text yesterday the words, "I am among you as he that serveth." He said in part:

"Realize the circumstances under which these words were said and who uttered them, and you will be struck with the revolutionary character of the reference. Christ himself declares that he was among them as a servant, to serve for the comfort and good of others. A spirit of caste and aristocracy prevailed at the time. The Jewish people considered themselves the chosen people of God, and all others outcasts. God was a great Jew among the Jews. People noticed where there were castes and factions. There were Pharisees, who drew their robes tightly about them and thanked God they were not as other men. In the Gentile world the same was true. When the imperial Cæsar ruled and Rome was peopled by a million souls, there were in that great number only a handful of freemen.

"Jew looked down on Jew. He who served was a menial; a thing and not a man. The Greeks had a similar notion. All beyond their little peninsula was peopled with barbarians. And in all ages and lands how few have striven to themselves special prerogatives. Jew looked down upon Gentile and Gentile upon Jew. Greek despised the barbarian and Rome her slaves.

"Jesus Christ, the Son of God—God Himself—came into this world and through whom only can all things consist—came into the midst of this spirit of caste and aristocracy, of pride and self-exclusiveness. He said to those Jews, 'I am among you as he that serveth.' Think of it! God a serf; Jesus Christ a slave who would do the most common and menial service to others! Remember that when He came all heaven would accompany Him and all earth go out to meet Him; that the kingdoms of the earth would fall and the last Cæsar on Tiber's bank would be lowered. But He tells them that He came to serve and not to rule, to minister and not be ministered unto.

"This spirit of self-abnegation is contrary to our human nature. There is a great deal of the animal in us yet. The animal has but two instincts—to get something to eat and propagate its kind. The strongest has the prestige—must prove that he has horns and butter more than his fellows, before he is let alone. The cock must fight for those within, spring the lower strata of men the same is seen. They build barricades around their rude hut and kill for those within, saving naught for those without. As we rise in the scale it is the village and tribal bond that holds men together, and beyond the tribe and village they have no thought or care. It is only when we come to the highest that we discover the spirit of altruism, that says all men are brothers, God the common Father.

"The central spirit of the world to-day has much of the Bushman in it. Akin to the aversion of the American boy to learn a trade is the aversion of his sister to go into service. We like to go into business for ourselves and chafe at the restraint of service for others. We do not like to black other people's boots or be their menial servants. Indeed, we do not have to go to the barnyard or the pasture, to the Hottentot or the Bushman for evidences of this spirit. It believes that he is the center of the universe and that from every radiating point in the universe, from the nearest star out to the uttermost frontier of the skies, there flow to him blessings and that God is only happy that He can receive man's adoration.

"It is not so. God is the center of all things, but He lives to give and not to get. He so loved the world as to give, not that He might be served, but to serve. He was the incarnation of the spirit of unselfishness and His whole life was keyed up to this self-sacrifice. While in our selfishness we are linked to the brutes below us, in our unselfishness we are akin to the shining ranks above us that reach to the very throne of God. We shall be most like God when we are among men as they who serve, though we shall be very strange common day followers.

"This life of self abnegation is the most joyous life. With all the agony and sorrow of life, the human heart would have broken your heart and mine. He was given the keenest and highest joy and life was the most joyous life ever lived on the planet. In the ante-chamber of Calvary, in the shadows of Gethsemane, in the midst of all His life, with all its sorrows, was crowded with with the most exhilarated joy. There are those who think that religion is a matter of long faces. I know not where the originator of the idea got the their practices. They never got them from Christ. In the world to-day there is still a survival of the fittest. Long-visaged, Long, sour faces do not belong to Christians, but to those with diseased stomachs and disordered livers. There is no like of religion a humdrum and a humbug, a slander on Christianity and a travesty on Christ. Christ loved. Sour nor he loved. No wonder that his joy was so full. I believe that John Howard, in the vile dungeons of Europe, felt after it all a truer and deeper joy than can any man who wins a fortune at patronage. I believe that Florence Nightingale, during her noble and unselfish life, felt more genuine joy than can any nobody hells who reigns supreme in her exclusive circle.

"Treasures vary. What was once a pleasure may lose its pleasantness. Here is a girl who is a queen of her circle; all her pleasure comes from that fact; she knows no higher joy than to gather with her companions and devote herself to the pleasures that are before her. But there comes a time when her companions gather and she is not with them. She is sitting in the shadow light of her own home and in her arms there nestles a little creature that knows she not, cares naught for her, and yet in her eyes there is the fond love-light of the mother. She cries and might not the girl cry? What gives her pleasure once is now to her a matter of utter indifference.

"If our imagination expected to live for itself, there would be no permanence in art, literature, architecture or any earthly thing. We are the legatees of all the services of the past and the world has advanced in temporal and moral things only as men have lived for others. Corporal things must pass away. Even the stars grow dim and the world is growing old. Its treasures are rust and its coffers rodes. But service for others is an eternal monument. The polish on the mightiest monuments of the ages shall pass away and fade from human sight. But the soul to God and it shall shine in the crown of rejoicing till the stars have disappeared. You will have builded on material that shall last as long as God.

"Therefore to be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good;
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Concerning Tickets for the Melopoia Concerts.

To the Editor of The News:—I will be at the Casino with a diagram of the sittings for the Melopoia concerts, on Tuesday evening, 29th inst., from eight to nine o'clock. Subscribers can then have an opportunity to choose seats for all the concerts. The plan of distributing them by lot, has been abandoned. No one person will be given more than four tickets; this to prevent any one individual from engaging sittings for his friends to the detriment of others who may be present in person on the date indicated.

As I will give but one evening to this business, it behooves any who may have delayed subscribing, to attend to it before the 29th, otherwise they will have to take such seats as may be left.

Music Hall Notes.

A crowded house greeted "The Midnight Alarm" last season at Music Hall. The play, which is of the sensational order, seemed to please its patronshihgly and the principals in the cast came in for much applause. It will be at Music Hall again next Tuesday.

The Lewiston Journal says of the lectures to begin at Music Hall, next Wednesday evening: It is quite impossible, in words, to convey any adequate idea of a lecture so rich in illustration as Mr. Ragan's. It occupied an hour and forty minutes in delivery, and pictures came and went upon the canvas so rapidly that each depicting scene was regretted. Mechanically, the operation of the stereopticon was perfect.

One of the most elabrate productions seen in this city in years is promised for next Monday evening at Music Hall. Lord Tennyson's poetic comedy, "The Foresters," with Sir Arthur Sullivan's beautiful music, will, it is thought, create a sensation among theatre goers. This organization is under the direction of Mr. Augustus Daly and comes direct from his theatre, New York.

Two Burglars Escape from Jail.

Deputy Sheriffs are scouring Hunterdon county in search of John Hoffman and Stephen Brody, who escaped from the county jail. The two prisoners were awaiting trial on a charge of burglary. They got out of their cells by sawing the bars and got through the door leading to the jailyard in the same way. They had little difficulty in getting over the fence of the jailyard. This is only one case of several jail deliveries in the Hunterdon county jail within a short time. It is expected that the Board of Freeholders will take some action towards building a new jail.

Caught His Hand on a Meat Hook.

As James Martin, a young man in the employ of A. G. Vogeler, the butcher, was standing on a box in the act of taking a piece of meat off of a hook, he slipped, and, to save himself from falling, he caught hold of one of the hooks used to hang meat on. The sharp point of the hook tore a deep gash in the centre of his hand.

EDITORIAL NOTES

More Foolishness.

That hysterical Canadian by adoption, Professor Goldwin Smith, is reported as saying that "America's pretended love for Gladstone is nothing but hatred of England." Does the Tory professor wish to be considered as going so far as to say that Gladstone is the enemy of England? Tory Canadian papers notably the Toronto World, take their cue from Goldwin Smith and strive to stir up in Canada a hostile feeling to the United States by emphasizing our hatred to England.

We regret to be obliged to keep per sistently setting the public sentiment of Canada right on this point. It is a thankless task too. But must we keep saying until annexation is a fixed fact, that the people of the United States do not hate England? The reason is as simple as the Toronto World is silly. England cannot afford to hate the United States; the United States cannot afford to hate England. It is a plain matter of money and money talks. The larger commercial interests of Great Britain and the United States run together. Not less than $3,000,000,000 of good British money is invested in the United States. We use it to our own advantage in our manufacturing and upon our ranches, and return good interest to England. The people of the two countries are one in language, race and sympathy. They are free to come and go without let or hindrance. Their unity is another though England is a constitutional monarchy and America is a republic.

Intelligent Canadians perceive that we are more prosperous than they. For this reason the desire for annexation is growing year by year and will grow till it is an accomplished fact. It will be presently accomplished and no powers will stop it. It is a matter of money, not sentiment. Now we desire not to be forced to refer to this little matter again.

Mr. Herbert Gardner Chaplin's successor as president of the British board of agriculture is as badly afflicted with the foot and mouth disease as Chaplin himself was. In answer to a deputation of Englishmen who waited on him petitioning that the prohibition against the importation of foreign live cattle might be removed Gardner replied that he couldn't think of it. The prohibition must remain, because through its agency England was the only country in Europe free from the foot and mouth disease. The real reason is that Gardner does not want American live beef coming into Great Britain in competition with the home grown. Therefore the common people there must do without beef. Well, one thing remains, and that is the importation into Great Britain of great loads of dressed beef in refrigerator ships.

The prettiest light furniture is made of bamboo which comes from China. In that country it is used for every purpose for which the cane reed is here and for making noses clothes driers, water pipes fences pillows and mat dresses besides not to speak of umbrellas. The young shoots of the plant are eaten, being used as a salad or garnish. The interesting point about the matter is that most of the vegetation which grows in China will thrive here and this beautiful and useful plant would probably do as well in our southern states as it does in China. Then every woman could have a bamboo rocking chair. At least it is well worth the trial, and tenants are invited to commend to the attention of Secretary Rusk.

Electricity is the magician that is to solve all material difficulties and make human life happier lighter and more comfortable. In time we will relieve mankind of physical drudgery. In England he has lent his aid to the prodigious task of extracting salt and other chemicals directly from sea water and brine, making them 50 per cent cheaper. Presently he will whisper in the ear of some Edison in railroad the exact view that will lead him out of his hiding place within a heap of coal without the intervention of a steam engine. Then a revolution in mechanical science will indeed begin.

It has been proved by actual trial that a storage battery street car hauling seventy passengers can travel thirty miles at the rate of six miles an hour making stoppages rounding curves and climbing hills without recharging of batteries. This was done at Milford Mass. The storage battery car costs no more than the horse car. In cities where the trolley overhead wire is objectionable it is a satisfaction to find that the storage battery car will do the work.

Great Britain has had seventeen poets laureate all the way from Chaucer to Tennyson. Spenser Ben Jonson Dryden Colley Cibber Southey and Wordsworth were the only famous poets in the list between Chaucer and Tennyson. The office at one time sank so low that the poet Gray refused it. Only one Irishman was ever poet laureate and that was Nahum Tate the hymn writer who held the office in the reign of Queen Anne.

"It does not need a prophet to foretell the destiny of the man who drinks whisky straight before breakfast," says Elenore Kirk's idea.

CARTER ADMITS DEFEAT

He Notifies President Harrison That His Party Is Beaten.

RETURNS STILL COME IN SLOWLY

The Result in Ohio Not Yet Decided, and Apparently It Will Take the Official Count to Tell the Story—An Estimate of the Congressional Vote.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—Chairman Carter of the Republican national committee, has sent the following telegram to President Harrison:

"The returns show that we have been defeated by a pronounced majority. The defeat can only be attributed to a reaction against the progressive policies of the Republican party."

According to present indications the Hon. Grover Cleveland will have a total of 275 votes in the electoral college. Benjamin Harrison will have 145 electoral votes, and the Populist candidate, General Weaver, will have 22 electoral votes. Later returns may of course change this, but the general result will not be affected by any new developments that may now occur.

The Republican states are Idaho, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Washington and Wyoming. Harrison also receives nine of the electoral votes of Michigan and three of Oregon.

General Weaver carried Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska and Nevada, and secured one of the electoral votes of Oregon, all of which states were previously in the Republican column.

The states that were previously strong holds of the Republicans and which are now in the Democratic column are Ohio, Illinois, California, Indiana and Wisconsin.

The Congress Situation.

It is still impossible to give the status of the several parties in the Fifty third congress officially. The developments of the day tend to confirm to the point of absolute certainty the statement made originally in the United Press dispatches that the balance of power in the next senate will be held by the third party, although by a narrow margin.

The Democrats will gain senators in New York, Wisconsin, Wyoming and California, giving them forty three. Republicans will return a successor to Senator Paddock from Nebraska and also to Senator Perkins from Kansas, although the legislature in this state is still claimed by the Farmers' Alliance. The legislatures of Minnesota and Michigan have Republican majorities.

The Republican strength in the senate is thus reduced to forty two, leaving to Senators Peffer, Kyle and Stewart (who will succeed himself from Nevada) the power to control the organization by alliance with either of the parties. The expectation is that they will co-operate with the Democrats in this matter. Up to this writing the Populist congressional district in New Hampshire, Ohio, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas and California was unsettled, the figures not having been fully reported.

The probabilities are that the state delegations in the next house of representatives will stand as in the table, which also shows the latest indications of how the electoral college will vote:

Harrity Expresses Thanks.

Chairman Harrity went to Philadelphia to be gone several days. Before going Mr. Harrity said: "I feel that I ought not to leave New York without expressing my appreciation of the kindness and considera tion with which I have been treated while here. My stay here has been a very pleasant one indeed, and that fact contributes very much to the satisfaction which I feel over the outcome.

"I ought to add that we feel grateful to the representatives of the press of the country, especially to those representing the New York papers, for the very generous treatment accorded to the members of the Democratic national committee. To the Democratic and independent newspapers of the country much of the great result which has been achieved is due and they should be awarded full credit.

"I would like to also express my thanks to all those good, earnest and enthusiastic Democrats who have written or telegraphed their congratulations to the Democratic national committee. Because of their great number it will be simply impossible to write or telegraph to each, and it is hoped that this public acknowledgment will be accepted as an expression of appreciation of their messages of commendation and congratulation."

Murphy May Succeed Hiscock.

The probable successor of Senator Hiscock in the United States senate was the subject of a good deal of discussion among Democratic politicians today. The general opinion was that Chairman Edward Murphy, Jr., of the Democratic state committee, could sit beside Senator David B. Hill in that august body if he chose.

The fact that Charleston Murphy is anxious to sit in the senate circle, with Mr. Hill as a side partner, was made known by Charles R. De Freest, clerk of the state committee, a close personal and political friend and neighbor of Mr. Murphy. When Mr. De Freest speaks of Mr. Murphy it is always authoritative.

It is said that the combination to give the senatorship to Mr. Murphy was made long before election, the only contingency being a Democratic majority in the legislature on joint ballot.

Lieutenant Governor William F. Sheehan was not the least bit surprised when he was asked about the senatorship. "Edward Murphy is entitled to any honor the party in this state can confer upon him," said Mr. Sheehan. "He has been a loyal, earnest and successful leader for many years, and the Democracy of New York state cannot do too much for him. I feel confident he will be chosen unanimously. No, I am not a candidate for the senatorship. Neither is Governor Flower."

Kansas for Weaver.

TOPEKA, Nov. 11.—The People's party, assisted by the Democrats, have certainly elected the Weaver electors, the entire state ticket and congressmen at large by a majority of at least 4,000. This is practically conceded by the Republicans. The Republicans have elected Case Broderick in the First district, E. H. Funston in the Second and Charles Curtis in the Fourth. The Populists have elected T. J. Hudson in the Third district, John Davis in the Fifth, W. M. Baker in the Sixth, Jerry Simpson in the Seventh and A. W. Harris at large. In the legislature the Populists have elected twenty three senators and the Republicans seventeen. In the house the Populists have fifty eight, Democrats two and Republicans sixty five. The two Democrats are pledged to vote for the Republican candidate for United States senator, having been elected with the aid of Republicans. This gives the Republicans a majority of three on joint ballot and reduces the election of a Republican to succeed Bishop W. Perkins.

The Result in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 11.—The result of the election in this state is still in doubt, and it will probably take the official count to decide it. Seventy six counties have been heard from by the Democratic state committee, and estimating the results in the other twelve counties, they claim Cleveland has carried the state by 1,750 plurality. They also claim that Taylor (Dem.), for secretary of state, is elected by a larger plurality. Reports have been received by the Republican committee from all the committees of the state except Monroe, Licking, Wyandot and Tuscarawas and estimating the results in these counties, they claim the election of Taylor (Dem.) for secretary of state, by 1,413 plurality and that Harrison has carried the state.

Hogg May Succeed Mills.

AUSTIN, Nov. 11.—Cleveland's majority is greatly reduced from four years ago. There has been much swapping because of local and state elections, and the Hogg men scratched Cleveland extensively. It is said that Hogg, if the legislature is with him, will go to the United States senate in place of Roger Q. Mills. Mills has also signed the Clark men by declaring for Hogg, but has not won over Hogg's supporters, because he left the state when Hogg wanted and needed help.

May Change Its Name to Cleveland.

CALDWELL, N. J., Nov. 11.—This little town, in which Grover Cleveland was born, gave him a majority of 22 over Harrison. It was first reported that it went the other way, and Democrats there are indignant about the circulation of the rumor. They now propose to change the name of the place to Cleveland, and it is just possible that they will succeed in doing so through the agency of the Democratic majority in the senate and assembly.

West Virginia Democratic.

WHEELING, Nov. 11.—The returns from over three-fourths of the state show that the Democrats will have between 3,000 and 4,000 majority. The Democrats will have a majority of at least fifteen in the legislature on joint ballot, insuring the return to the United States senate of C. J. Faulkner. The full Democratic congressional delegation are elected.

Quay Will Be Re-elected.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 11.—Senator Quay went to Washington fully satisfied that a majority of the members of the next legislature would favor his re-election to the senate. Before he left Philadelphia he had learnt from nearly every representative and senator in every district in the state, and is convinced that he was very well pleased with the result.

Indiana's Returns.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 11.—Returns from all the state are coming in slowly. The unofficial returns show a steady Democratic gain over the vote of Benjamin Harrison's majority in the state, it is conceded by Republicans, will not be less than 5,000 and probably more. The congressional delegation will be Democratic by a good majority.

The Vote in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 11.—About two thirds of the vote of California gives Harrison, 97,889; Cleveland, 90,656; Weaver, 17,503. The indications now are that the state will give Cleveland a plurality of about 5,000. The legislature returns still indicate a small majority for the Democrats on joint ballot.

Rusk's Explanation.

CHICAGO, Nov. 11.—Secretary Jeremiah M. Rusk was at the Grand Pacific today. He was elected out—that's all there is about it," said he, referring to Tuesday. "In my opinion the tariff was the whole and sole cause of it, and then the Homestead affair made the laboring class discontented.

Important to New York Electors.

LEO AND HIS CARDINALS.

The New Creations May Control the Papal Succession.

THIRTEEN VACANCIES TO BE FILLED

The Holy See Assumes an Attitude of Reserve Toward the Gladstonian Ministry—The German-American Interests and the Spanish Diplomatists.

ROME, Nov. 11.—It is now probable that the great cardinal consistory will take place on Dec. 10. It is expected that the pope will create thirteen cardinals out of the seventeen vacancies. Five are certain, viz.: Tours, Rouen, Graz, di Pietro, Perosino. For England there is as yet no question. Austria demands three, but the pope will accord only Gran.

In his last audience the Prussian minister renewed the kaiser's demand that Monsignor Capel, bishop of Prussia, be included among the cardinals, but the pope would prefer the archbishop of Cologne. As the Prussian government opposes this selection the archbishop of Posen may be the final choice of the pope.

Mgr Farley, diocesan assultor to the archbishop of New York, denies being charged with any special mission from Mgr Corrigan.

It is denied in vatican circles that Mgr Satolli has any missive regarding scholastic questions in the United States. It is considered that these have been regulated through the Ireland incident.

Serious poor parters have occurred between the holy see, the Spanish government and Spanish parties.

It is known that on the death of Nocedal, the representative of Don Carlos in Rome, the director of the Siglo Futuro, solicited the succession to his father's post, but that Don Carlos preferred a Spanish grandee. Nocedal then separated himself from "the king" as being too liberal. The schism obliged Don Carlos to reorganize his party, and it has now a circle in every village.

The New Encyclical.

Rezten, Nocedal with his set has received the idea of forming themselves into a Catholic union on the basis of the recommendations of the papal encyclical Cum Multa, and the programme of which will be to rally to the existing monarchy for the better defense of the interests of religion. But Nocedal requires that the pope should write a new encyclical in order that the power to rally from one side to the other might be confirmed.

The present government, enchanted with their recruit, supported Nocedal's request through their ambassador at Rome. Nocedal sent to Rome several of his friends to bring the negotiations to an issue. On the other side, Don Carlos operated through his agents in persuading the holy see that it would be wrong to intervene.

The situation in Spain is not the same as in France. Don Carlos has a Catholic programme. The organization of his party is powerful with ramifications in every village.

Things being as they are, the state of parties as prevarions, the holy see will not compromise itself. The pope knows well last only till the death of the queen regent, against whom no one desires to hasten the revolution. But at her death the Carlists will actively interfere.

Then there are the Republicans, who through Castelar, Salmeron and Pi Margall, now multiply declarations of good will toward the pope and church in asserting that the republic would at all times respect Catholic rights. In the face of these contending currents, the pope has decided not to grant the new encyclical.

Mgr Zardetti, bishop of St. Cloud, Minn., has left Rome, going to St. Gall. During his last days here he dined with Cardinal Ledochowski and with the archbishops of Hamberg and Munich. He has appealed to his friends in a very positive manner, asserting that the development of the disputes will not fail to be favorable to the German party in the United States.

Special advices, however, justify the assertion that the reverse is the case. But it is undoubtedly true that all the friends of the German party in Rome are doing their utmost to advance the interests of the party.

The Vatican and England.

Divers influences have been brought to bear upon the holy see regarding the attitude toward the new English government. It is understood that the vatican will observe, for some time at least, the greatest reserve. The holy see can rely on its archbishops in England and on Mgr. Walsh.

The holy father has ordered a report to be made to him of the Chicago fetes and the sympathetic receptions accorded to Mgr. Satolli, the papal delegate. He has been greatly pleased with the honors rendered by America to his representative, and also with the speech of Mr. Chauncey Depew, the prayer of Mgr Ireland and the medal struck off for the committee on this occasion. Referring to the event, he said, "The United States form a great people, to whom the future belongs."

The vatican has advised the archbishop of Seville that he will be created cardinal at the next consistory. There is a question also of an archbishop from South America being made cardinal. The pope allows himself to be guided in this choice by two great ideas—not to re-enforce the power of the triple alliance in the sacred college and to augment the foreign element.

The vatican journals comment on the canceling of the Parnell and Sullivan scholastic contract. They attach a certain importance thereto, since the nonrenewal of the treaty proves how much the adversaries of Mgr. Ireland have been in error in criticising his memorable initiative.

Cruiser Cincinnati Launched in a Pelting Rainstorm.

SLIGHT HITCH IN THE CEREMONY.

The Bail Had Been "Jacked Up" Too Tightly and Had to Be Forced Down the Ways—A Description of Uncle Sam's Latest Addition to His Naval Forces.

BROOKLYN, Nov. 11.—Amid the cheers of 5,000 people the Cincinnati, Uncle Sam's newest cruiser, slid gracefully from the ways into the water of the East river, where she was welcomed by the guns of the Atlantic Mastodonsand Philadelphia.

It was not a pretty launching, but mechanically it was a success. Rain fell steadily, and the awning which had been erected over the platform to protect the invited guests from the weather did not fulfill its mission. Everybody got wet from Secretary Tracy down, and many of the guests went away before the launching took place.

When all was ready the props and blocks were knocked from under the hull, and the cruiser rested in her cradle, which was held on the ways by the side pieces. Then the ax was cut through the sole pieces and the vessel was clear. But she did not move. At a word from Naval Constructor Fernald the hydraulic rams were manned.

Suddenly the great steel hull began to move. Miss Stella Mosby, daughter of the mayor of Cincinnati, raised a ribbon covered bottle in her hand and shattered it on the bow of the vessel. She said, "I christen thee Cincinnati."

Then the great ship, with Ohio wine dripping from her prow, moved from the spot where she had been built, and with a gradually increasing pace took the water with a graceful dip and rode majestically out to ocean embankment. She kept an even keel, and her graceful lines and trim shape drew favorable comments from the experts who were present and cheers from the crowd. Half a dozen tugs surrounded her and towed her to the navy yard dock, where the work on her will be completed.

One of Our Fastest Cruisers.

On the platform with Miss Mosby when the christening took place were Secretary Tracy, Assistant Secretary Soley, of the navy department, John B. Mosby, mayor of Cincinnati, J. M. Blair, L. B. Keck, George Gerke, William McAllister, Wilson H Meyers, of the chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, George P. Sterritt, Edward Daniel, Robert McRoberts and Scott Barnum, of the board of legislation of Cincinnati. Commodore Erben, commandant of the navy yard, officers from the United States steamer Yantic and of the Chilian cruiser Banson, and a number of Brooklyn's leading citizens, with their wives and daughters, were on a larger platform which had been erected at the bow of the new cruiser. The navy yard band played inspiring airs on another platform, while the rain beat down on their heads.

The Cincinnati is the second of the new warships built at the Brooklyn navy yard. She is to be protected by steel. She is 300 feet in length, 42 feet beam and with a draft of 15 feet. She will have twin screws and 7,500 horse power engines of 10,000 horse power with steam pressure of 160 pounds.

She will be one of the fastest vessels in the navy, and her average speed will be nineteen knots. Her armament will consist of a main battery of ten 5-inch rapid fire guns and one 6-inch breech loading gun, a secondary battery of eight 6-pound guns, four 1-pounders and two Gatlings. She will have four torpedo tubes. Her keel was laid in January, 1892, and the cost of her hull and machinery will be $1,100,000.

A CLASH WITH VENEZUELA.

The Steamer Philadelphia Threatened with Bombardment by the Officials.

LA GUAYRA, Nov. 11.—The Red D line steamer Philadelphia sailed from here last night with only consular clearances papers, the Venezuelan government having refused to clear the ship.

Among the passengers on the Philadelphia when she sailed from here was Senor Mijares, who had been governor of Caracas under the continuista regime. The government authorities demanded that he be surrendered on a charge that while governor of Caracas he had stolen cattle.

The captain of the Philadelphia refused to give him up, and then the fort threatened to train her guns on the Philadelphia and a boat loaded with armed soldiers was sent out to the steamer.

When the soldiers attempted to board the ship and search for Mijares they were resisted. The Philadelphia then left her dock and anchored in the stream, while the question was referred to United States Minister Scruggs.

He upheld the captain in refusing to give up Mijares on the ground that there was no extradition treaty between Venezuela and the United States. The government then decided to refuse to clear the Philadelphia, and she sailed without regular papers.

FORTY CRUSHED TO DEATH.

A Flimsily Built Mill Collapses with Terribly Fatal Results.

VIENNA, Nov 11.—A mill collapsed in Opran, Moravia, yesterday evening, shortly before the hands were to leave for the night. Almost 200 men were in the building at the time. When the walls began to crack the men in the basement and on the ground floor ran out. The men and girls above started down stairs. In the panic the stairway collapsed and before anybody could struggle out of the ruins the whole building came down.

About fifty persons were caught in the bricks and broken timber. Several were rescued, but it is supposed that thirty-five or forty wer killed. The dead bodies of twenty have been removed, and the debris undoubtedly will reveal many more. Fifty men are at work clearing away the ruins.

The mill was flimsily built, and the operation of heavy machinery on the second floor is believed to have caused the collapse. The police are looking for the builder and will arrest him.

PLOTTING AGAINST CHILI

Peru and the Argentine Republic Arming to Attack Her.

PANAMA, Nov 11.—Advices received here from Chili say that war is imminent between Peru and the Argentine Republic on one side and Chili on the other. Peru is well armed, and her forces have recently received 100,000 Mauser rifles and six formidable machines of war. In the Argentine Republic a vigorous recruiting of boat natives and foreigners is being prosecuted, and the government is with feverish haste arming the troops.

There is no longer a doubt of a secret compact against Chili between the two republics, and they are only awaiting a casus belli to throw one army into Tarapaca and another upon the southern frontier of Chile. Chilian government has tardily opened its eyes to the treacherous game, and has ordered the steamer C S A V to be prepared for immediate incorporation into the navy. The Captain Prat has been called to proceed to Valparaiso without a moment's delay.

The America's Cup Challenge.

FASHIONS

DRESSING THE HAIR.

Suggestions as to the Most Becoming Ways to Do It.

A person who has a long face should never dress the hair high upon the head, says Good Housekeeping. The effect is to increase the apparent length of the features—the very thing which is to be avoided. The proper disposition, therefore, is to comb the hair smoothly at the top of the head, letting it wave or roll somewhat at the sides, so as to add to the apparent breadth of the features. This law of compensation furnishes the line of policy to be pursued in all cases. If Madame be blessed with a short, rather broad face, she will naturally gather her tresses at the top of the head; if her brow be low, the hair will be combed up from it, leaving the full, natural height; while if it be higher than is desired, the hair is deftly made to cover a portion of the expanse. If the brow is too wide, a little curl or some other appropriate dressing at the sides serves as a corrective; while a little range of curls beneath the back hair, attractive in themselves, also very often serve to decrease the apparent length of the wearer's neck.

Pins of All Colors

Pins are no longer exclusively black and white. They come in every shade of color. So that they may be used lavishly upon the toilet without fear of showing. This invention fills a real want, for our women have thoroughly acquired the lesson first taught by the French milliners; that bows and many of the sexe's little trappings carelessly pinned, here and there, retain a jaunty air that stitches eliminate by their prim precision.

YALE'S FOOTBALL TEAM.

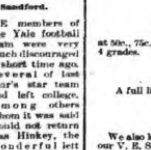
Five Famous Players Who Will Be on the Eleven.

M'CORMICK WILL BE THE CAPTAIN

Hinkey's Return Has Caused Hope to Climb Again at Yale—The Strong Points of Hinkey, Captain McCormick, the Bliss Brothers and Sandford.

THE members of the Yale football team were very much discouraged a short time ago. Several of last year's star team had left college. Among others whom it was said would not return was Hinkey, the wonderful left end, and the tidings plunged the football enthusiasts into the depths of despair. Later it was announced that he would come back, and the news filled every Yale man's heart with joy.

Frank A. Hinkey, the man who arouses such enthusiasm, is without doubt the best end rush player in the country. He wriggles through a rush line like an eel and goes get down the field after the ball like a flash. But his particularly strong point is tackling, which he has cultivated to perfection. Hinkey is a native of Tonawanda, N. Y., and is twenty-two years old. He is about 5 ft. 10 in. high and weighs 160 pounds. He first played the Rugby game at Phillips Andover academy. When



F. A. HINKEY.

Hinkey entered Yale he was immediately placed on the varsity team, where he made a peerless record.

Captain Vance McCormick, the sturdy quarter back who will lead Yale's forces, is a thorough football player, skilful in every department of the game. He also possesses that nerve, strategy and controlling power that make a successful leader. Captain McCormick was born in Harrisburg, Pa., twenty years ago. He is 5 ft. 6½ in. in height and tips the scales at 135 pounds. He first learned how to handle a football at Phillipps Andover academy. When he entered Yale he was immediately elected captain of the freshman eleven. Last year he was made a member of the 'Varsity and played full back. Mr. McCormick is a good runner and tackler, dodges well and is a sure kicker. At quarter he handles the ball cleanly and quickly and knows it with great accuracy.

VANCE MCCORMICK.

One of the most prominent figures of Yale's football rush line this season is George Sandford, the young giant who stood between Heffelfinger and Morrison in the championship games of last year. Sandford was born in the Catskill mountains twenty years ago. He stands 6 ft. 3 in. and weighs 190 pounds. Sandford Yale in 1891. The football men in college knew what Sandford was, and he was immediately given a place in the training table. He proved to be the best man Yale had for center rush and in all the principal games he put the ball in play. Sandford is possessed of great strength. He breaks through the line well, is a good tackler and always takes care of the man opposite him. Sandford is without doubt the heaviest sprinter in the country.

G. F. SANDFORD.

It is seldom that two brothers, both able players and skillful athletes, are found on the same football team, especially when that team is made up of such picked men as the Yale varsity eleven. C. D. Bliss is the senior, being twenty-two years of age. He weighs 135 and is 5 ft. 8¼ in. in height. He first played football at Andover, acting as captain of the team in 1888. In 1889 he entered Yale and had acted as substitute on the varsity eleven during 1889, 1890 and 1891.

C. T. BLISS.

L. T. Bliss was born in New York twenty years ago, weighs 130 and is 5 ft. 9¾ in. high. In 1889 he captained the Andover academy eleven. In 1890 Bliss entered the Sheffield Scientific school at Yale. During that season he was sub back on the varsity, and played in both of the "big" games. Last year he played left half in all the games, and he is back in his old position this fall. He is a dashing and brilliant player, and a long winded and speedy runner. As a designer he is remarkably quick and clever. Bliss has made an enviable reputation in baseball as well as football, having since he entered college. He has been elected captain of next year's team.

"YE EARLIE TROUBLE."

Lucy Laun's Opinion of Henry Guy Carleton's Revolutionary Melodrama.

"Ye Earlie Trouble," written by that brilliant but erratic playwright, Henry Guy Carleton, was brought out recently at Proctor's Twenty-third Street theater, New York city. The piece was originally produced about a year ago at the Boston museum, but enjoyed only a fair modicum of success. As there were some elimination-al changes made in the piece for the present occasion, the present production affords the first opportunity to judge squarely of the merits of the play. The American revolution affords very little opportunity for dramatic effect unless the facts of history are ruthlessly distorted and violated. This Mr. Carleton has done, and he justifies his act by a quotation from the preface to "Peveril of the Peak."

But even as it is, "Ye Earlie Trouble" is entirely unworthy the transcendent ability of Mr. Carleton. His characters are of the hobby-orsiman and are walked on and off the stage in the most aimless fashion. The climaxes with perhaps a single exception are strong in the sentimental appealing quality, but they are worthy only of the middle grade of melodrama, in which category "Ye Earlie Trouble" properly belongs.

The play is interpreted by an excellent cast, including Joseph Haworth, William F. Owen and Jane Stuart. Miss Stuart and Mr. Owen easily eclipsed the others. This young lady is, in my opinion, one of the best ingenues on the American stage. Her every word, act and gesture denote inspiration as well as studied art. This was first made conspicuously manifest when she was a member of Augustus Pitou's excellent stock company, now defunct. I cannot understand why it is that Palmer, the Frohmans and Daly do not snap up this clever artist for their fine home organizations. She would be a credit to any one of them.

Modjeska's revival of "Henry VIII" at the New York Garden theater does not seem to have been an unqualified success. Strange to say, it is Shakespeare who has been condemned, while Modjeska, her leading man, Otis Skinner, and the stage setting have been praised by the critics. After all, commendable as is Modjeska's revival of this unfamiliar work of "the immortal bard," it must be admitted that the prologues and epilogues so crowd out the dramatic element in "Henry VIII" that it is a very poor acting piece at best.

A "Wing Shot" Billiard Player.

Schaefer, Sleeson, Vignaux and Ives are generally recognized as the champion billiard players of the world. Everybody knows them, but everybody does not know that there is a man in New York city who makes with ease billiard shots that none of the champions can make. This man is Professor Kaarlus, and when playing his favorite game he carries a weight of 100 pounds on his shoulders. Kaarlus invents difficult shots and has offered to play any man in the world at this game for $10,000. He is also the inventor of the two ball game, which teaches the art of playing for position.

PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS.

ESTABLISHED 1884. PLAINFIELD, N. J., "THE COLORADO OF THE EAST," SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1892. PRICE TWO CENTS.

A FRANCHISE GRANTED.

TO OPERATE A STREET RAILWAY ON SOMERSET STREET.

The Borough Council, by a Vote of Four to Two, Pass the Ordinance — Communications Read for and Against it.

The Borough Council held a special meeting last evening. Present—Councilmen Coonelie, Hegeman, Hummer, Needham, Neal and Sebring.

A communication was read, signed by several of the residents of Somerset street, protesting against the granting of a franchise to operate a street railway on Somerset street. The communication was received and ordered placed on file.

Mr. Cooley was given the privilege of making a statement in regard to the street lights. Dr. Cooley said that it had been claimed by several residents of Plainfield avenue that they had been without a light for six nights in succession. He contended that it was not the fault of the company, as it was not the fault of the company, but that boys of the borough were in the habit of breaking the electric light globes with little pebbles thrown from slingshots.

During the month of October, he continued, "100 lamps had been broken in this way. The company did all in its power to keep the lights burning, but it was impossible, if boys were allowed to throw stones around, and that the company would call upon the borough to protect their property." The matter was taken under the head of communications, and ordered received and filed.

It was moved and seconded that bill of Electric Light Company be paid. Carried.

Mr. Neal made a motion that the street railway franchise to operate a street railway on Somerset street be granted. Mr. Neal stated that the Street Committee had given the matter of rapid transit thorough consideration, and after deliberating the committee had decided that the trolley was the most complete. He moved that the ordinance be taken from the table and voted on section by section. The motion was seconded and the following vote taken on the question:

Ayes—Hummer, Needham, Neal and Coonelie.—4.

Nays—Hegeman and Sebring.—2.

The motion was carried.

Section 1 was read and it was moved and seconded that it be adopted as read.

Before a vote was taken Mr. Hegeman arose and said, in explanation of his stand on the question, that while he was in favor of the idea of rapid transit for the borough, he did not favor a street railway being placed on Somerset street. He said he could not vote for it to be placed on Somerset street in the face of the opposition which protested against its being located on that thoroughfare.

Mr. Sebring said he felt it his duty to vote against section one. He was in favor of rapid transit for the borough, but did not think that Somerset street should be the location for the track.

Messrs. Needham, Hummer and Coonelie then spoke in favor of having the railway on Somerset street.

Taxpayers and citizens were given a chance to express their opinions on the matter. Mr. Powers was the first to seize the opportunity. He stated that rather than not have it on Somerset street he would give two and a half feet of his property to make the street wider. If the property owner on the opposite side would do the same that would make the street five feet wider.

Several other citizens present spoke in favor of the railway, and hoped that the ordinance would be passed.

Mr. Brock read a long communication praising the adoption of section of said ordinance would be adopted.

The Borough Counsel then stated that of a total property frontage of 11,970 feet the consent of the owners of 7,197 feet of the same had been obtained.

Ayes—Hummer, Needham, Neal and Coonelie.

Nays—Hegeman and Sebring.

The Mayor declared the section adopted.

The ordinance was passed, section by section, all voting yes, except on the first section.

Moved and seconded that the ordinance be adopted as a whole. Carried.

Moved and seconded that the ordinance be advertised according to law. Carried.

The ordinance calls for the following payments:

1st year	$ 50	8th year	$300
2nd "	100	6th "	300
3d "	150	7th "	300
4th "	200	8th "	250 and

years thereafter.

Council adjourned at 9.45.

THE JUBILEE PARADE.

THE DEMOCRATS OUT IN FORCE LAST NIGHT.

Fireworks and Glory Galore, and Bunting and Torches, Music and Roars.

Last night the Democrats of this vicinity by a torchlight parade celebrated the great victory of their party in the State and nation.

The Herald, which is an ardent Free Trade organ, says this victory means the "starting of the industries of Europe and giving employment to its cheap labor."

It is difficult to understand how, when this country is flooded with the product of this cheap labor, the American industries, with their better paid American labor, can withstand the competition without reducing wages to the same level. They must do this or go out of business altogether.

The theory of the Herald is that this policy will keep the cheap labor from coming to this country and competing with our better paid labor, and to further this view it favors stopping all emigration to this country for three years or longer. The question naturally suggested is, couldn't this restriction prevail just as well under a policy of protection to our own industries?

Why should we want to do anything that would tend to injure my class of our people?

If the Herald is right and this is a victory of these foreign cheap labor factories over our own where labor is so much better paid, then the very first to suffer, and those who will suffer most, it would seem to follow, are those of the very class which seemed most happy and shouted the loudest last night, partizan zeal and passion, making them, in our judgment, blind to the danger to their own interests, as these interests appear to us.

However, they are now in the majority, and this is a country where the majority rules.

May they never have any cause to regret their victory, and may their joy of that night never be lost, or in the least embittered by disappointment hereafter.

The paraders shouted themselves hoarse with buzzas, as they went through the streets and past the numerous places beautifully decorated in their honor, and there were plenty of fireworks and plenty of music to enliven the occasion.

Now, that it is all over, let us all join hands and hearts to do the best we can for the common good.

PERSONAL.

A little daughter has born to Mr. and Mrs. Wm. R. Conover of Pearl street, Thursday.

Mrs. Robert Walker of New street is convalescent after a severe sickness from typhoid-malaria.

In the First Presbyterian church, Sunday evening, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Herring, will preach a sermon to young men.

Messrs. F. H. Andrews and William D. Murray will speak at the meeting to be held in the interest of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., at the Crescent avenue church, on Sunday evening.

It was announced last evening that Prof. Marion Mills Miller had resigned his position as Assistant Professor of Oratory and Æsthetic Criticism to accept a position on the editorial staff of the Chicinnati Enquirer. His resignation will go into effect at the end of this term. Prof. Miller has many friends in this city, to whom the above will be of interest.

Mr. George H. Babcock of West Eighth street, President of the Babcock & Wilcox Co., New York and ex-President of the Society of American Engineers, will, it is announced, deliver a lecture at the Franklin Institute of the State of Pennsylvania, Monday evening, Nov. 21. His subject will be: "The Genesis and Exodus of Steam." Mr. Babcock is an authority on the subjects of steam and machinery, and his lecture will, undoubtedly, be of exceptional interest.

A telegram received yesterday announces the death, at Portsmouth, Virginia, of James O'Neil, a former Plainfield resident. Mr. O'Neil was about nine months age. The telegram announcing his death also stated that the body would be brought to Plainfield, Monday, and buried in the family plot. Pneumonia was the cause of death. Several years ago three sisters of James O'Neil died of pneumonia. Their deaths occurred within a few days of each other. A friend of the deceased says the last and fatal attack of pneumonia, was the third time he had had it.

—"More interesting than ever" is the testimony of those who attend the young men's meetings at the Association rooms on Sunday afternoons. The Y. M. C. A. invites all to be present and enjoy the meeting.

PICKLED POLITICS.

PARAGRAPHS SHOWING THE FEELING IN MANUFACTURING CIRCLES.

Many Large Orders, Given Before Election, are Withdrawn—One Large Firm to Reduce Wages, or Shut Down.

It will be eighteen months at least before the new Congress will revise the tariff, and the effect the fear of a free trade policy is having upon manufacturing interests may be judged by the following: King, Gilbert & Co., a Western firm, employing hundreds of men, on account of the many orders countermanded since the result of the election became known, one firm alone countermanding an order for 1,000,000 pounds of steel, will reduce wages in all departments, or close down until the policy to be pursued by the victorious party is known.

General Michener says a large woolen and blanket manufacturer of New Jersey gave $10,000 to "save New Jersey for Tariff Reform." He says that the result his Western agent wants him at once in Chicago as a big order for blankets has been withheld, the firm ordering wishing to hold off until the tariff had been reduced by the Democrats. The manufacturer can't go West because he must attend to telegrams from nearer home countermanding orders on the same grounds. The manufacturer is worried. He wishes he had his money back.

A jeweler was shocked when a prospective customer declined to buy a fine watch, remarking, "Oh! I am going to wait. The Democrats are going to reduce the tariff and then you can import cheaper and I can buy this watch at less than it costs now."

JAMES H. WATT, president of the Watt Mining Car Wheel Company of Barnesville, Ohio, has always offered to take a complete inventory of the extensive manufacturing establishment and sell the same for twenty-five cents on the dollar on account of the Democratic victory. The works could not have been bought Tuesday for $1.50 on the dollar. The company does a world wide business.

THE BOARD OF CANVASSERS.

Of Union County met at Elizabeth Yesterday.

The judges of the election boards throughout the county met at noon yesterday at the Court House in capacity of a board of canvassers. Judge Wadsworth of this city was elected chairman, and the board adjourned until half-past one o'clock.

One or two of the districts of Elizabeth have failed to make any returns of the vote for coroner, and some delay resulted in completing the canvass yesterday afternoon.

"The Long and Short of It."

There will be an interesting bowling game at the Crescent League Club house on Monday evening, Nov. 14, between two ten-men-teams of members of the Club. One team is composed entirely of short men while there opponents are all tall. The short men are:

C. P. Leggett, F. S. Green, Chas. Ulrich, Mr. Hawkins, H. H. Brokaw, Thos. King, Jr., Dr. Bedford, James Buckle, C. Dunham, G. A. Halleck.

The "long of it" will be represented by S. H. Whitney, M. Duncan, W. A. Woodruff, Thos. Sexton, Sr., Dr. Bogert, J. Kenney, W. R. Coddington, J. A. Haynes, R. Meeker, F. M. Slater.

There will undoubtedly be plenty of fun.

A Hungarian Attempts Suicide.

While a workman was on his way to the American Engine Works in Bound Brook, Monday morning, he thought he saw a musk-rat in the blue-hole near the Lehigh Valley tanks. A closer inspection, however, revealed the head of a human being. He jumped into the water and brought a man out. The nearly-drowned man was taken to the Engine Works and for two hours was thawed out in the engine room. The man was taken to New Brunswick, where he was locked up.

The would-be suicide was a Hungarian and the night before and early that morning had been noticed around town acting in a strange manner.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The new states of Idaho, Montana, North and South Dakota, Washington and Wyoming are as proud of casting their first presidential vote this fall as a young man just turned twenty-one would be.

The corn crop this year will reach between 1,700,000,000 and 1,800,000,000 bushels. This is not so great as last year, when it reached the enormous figure of 2,000,000,000 bushels. The Russian famine helped us to get rid of it then, but this year we are told there is nothing left but to make it into whisky after the hogs have devoured all they can.

Canada has a difficult question to decide. That is whether it is treason to Great Britain for a Canadian citizen to advocate annexation to the United States in a peaceable, friendly way. It will probably be a question to be settled by a majority of the people of the Dominion. If only a few here and there want to join the United States, then it would be treason, but if a great majority of the people decide they want it, then they will probably get up and go.

The result of the experiment in transmitting mail matter between Philadelphia and Washington through pneumatic tubes will be watched with interest. Early in December the tubes will be completed, and the work of shooting mail matter through them with more than railway speed will be commenced. If letters and papers can shoot through a pneumatic tube between Washington and Philadelphia, then they can pass in like manner between other cities of the Union.

"Paw" and "Maw."

It is agreeable to note that the fine old English words "father" and "mother" are becoming fashionable again, even for children just learning to talk. Since there were who never gave them up, but taught their own children to use the strong, dignified names handed down from English ancestors.

But the modern terms used to designate one's immediate ancestors on the paternal and maternal side have gone through an odd series of changes, one apparently more than the last. An infant in arms utters its first sound, namely, "ma." A young sheep, calf or kitten makes the same cry. It is therefore natural. But why should the syllable be perpetuated after the human young one learns to talk?

Some of the degraded substitutes for the admirable names father and mother are remarkable. In one part of the country the native young one says first "pappy and mammy," again "pap and mam." You go on to some place where the inhabitants pride themselves a little on their style, and then the names are Frenchified, accent on the last syllable: "pa-pa and mam-ma." Again it is "pepper and mommer," not infrequently abbreviated to "pepper and mom." Another person says "pop and ma," giving to the sound it has in "man." That is bad enough.

But the lowest down, meanest sounding names of all for your immediate ancestors are "paw and maw." The individual who will paw and maw his father and mother and let his children paw and maw theirs, deserves to be insulted by the Four Hundred on earth and in heaven.

The New Campaign Method.

The editor of the American edition of The Review of Reviews expresses it as his opinion that a "more orderly, respectable and enlightened national campaign has probably never been conducted in this country" than the one closing Nov. 8. The reason of it is due to change of method. Quite unobserved by us a revolution has taken place in our political campaigning. It used to be all noise and appeal to passion and enthusiasm. Republican was taught to hate the very name Democrat, and vice versa. Immense torchlight processions were the thing, with "barking little cannon" in their train—the cannon being discharged in front of other party headquarters for the purpose of shattering the plate glass windows.

Now this has all changed because of the new fashion. The phrase "educational campaign" came into use in 1888, and it has stuck by us. The new campaign method is that of education. Printed documents are scattered in enormous quantity before every voter in the land. Each party has its press bureau, which sees to it that every argument possible is put before the voter to read. The voter reads the documents and thinks about them. Of the tremendous activity in the printing business called forth by the new campaign method, just the style of political "plates," The Review says:

But the writing, printing and distribution of documents is only a part of the "educational bureau's" work. Each has a large organization of reporters and journalists engaged in furnishing readable press notes. Leading party men from all portions of the country are daily interviewed, and the party papers are promptly supplied by messenger, by telegraph and by mail—with copies.

Prominent of all in the branch of the work that supplies the country weekly press with stereotyped columns of political news, argument and opinion, freshly and attractively prepared. The Democratic committee recently furnished several hundred papers with the "plate matter," and it is said that the Republican committee has twelve large stereotyping establishments at different centers to manufacture and distribute several columns of plates per week to nearly 3,000 newspapers.

LATE ELECTION ECHOES

The New Senate Will Be with the House on the Tariff.

ALL THE RETURNS ARE NOT YET IN

Ohio Now Seems Disposed to Stay in the Republican Column—Depew Tells What His Part in the Campaign Was—Hill Favors Murphy for Senator.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The senate seems yet to hang in the balance and may be a tie, although it is certain that it will be in accord with the house in regard to a low tariff. The latest figures show that the senate will stand: Republicans, 42; Democrats, 42; Populists, 4, the latter being: South Dakota, 1; Kansas, 2, and Nevada, 1. Of these the only one who can be counted on to vote with the Republicans is Peffer, of Kansas.

Of the other two known senators—Kyle, of South Dakota, and Stewart, of Nevada—the former has always voted with the Democrats, and Stewart has left the Republicans and is now a Populist. Exactly who will be the new senator from Kansas is not known, but if it should be Jerry Simpson, as is rumored, then of course he will vote with the Democrats. The new senator from Nebraska, which state the Populists claim, will most likely be Senator Paddock.

Private dispatches from Wyoming, which is claimed also by the Populists, give the legislature to the Republicans and assure the reelection of Francis E. Warren. Thus it will be seen that the senate will be so close that on many occasions the new vice president will be called upon to cast the deciding vote.

The employees at the senate end of the Capitol have already begun to realize that they have got to go. The senate will go into extra session at once and reorganize under the new administration. The vice president will take charge and the new secretary, sergeant at arms and clerks will get their places at once. The Democrats will fill all the big chairmanships of the senate committees, and already the Democratic senators are picking out their places under the new deal.

Depew Explains.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—With reference to the charge recently made by Mr. T. C. Platt that the loss of New York state to the Republican party in the late election was due to Mr. Depew's inexperience in campaign matters, the latter informed the United Press reporter that he had nothing to do with the running of the campaign in New York further than making speeches. He said that early in the campaign it was agreed between himself and Mr. Platt that the latter was to run the "machine" and that he (Depew) was to do the speech making. The result, Mr. Depew declared, could not be attributed to any one person or set of persons. New York alone did not affect the result. It was the whole country. The people wanted a change of policy. Mr. Depew said that the Homestead strike also affected the voting. He also denied the statement that either Mr. Frick or Mr. Carnegie contributed to the campaign funds.

McPherson for the Cabinet.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—It was announced here today by a local Democrat who is in touch with Chairman Harrity and other leading members of the party that Senator John R. McPherson, of New Jersey, will be the secretary of the treasury in the Cleveland cabinet. The senator's relations with Mr. Cleveland have always been close, personally and politically, it was said, and long before the Chicago convention, when New Jersey's Democratic attitude was a matter of concern, he succeeded in bringing Governor Abbett and other influential Democrats into line for Cleveland. Senator McPherson is further given credit for New Jersey's sturdy support of the president-elect at the Chicago convention, and also for keeping the state in Democratic line last Tuesday. The announcer said there is an understanding that the new Jersey senator will be offered the portfolio.

Quay Will Support Reeder.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—In consideration of the successful manner in which General Reeder directed the Republican state campaign, which resulted in the return of a Republican legislature favorable to the re-election of Senator Quay, the latter, it was stated today, has given the state chairman the assurance of his active support for governor. General Hastings will also be a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination.

Nebraska Republican.

OMAHA, Nov. 12.—Returns from seventy out of ninety-one counties in Nebraska have been received and settle the result in the state beyond a reasonable doubt. The Republicans elect their whole state ticket by at least 5,000 plurality over the independents, the Democrats being third in the race. Harrison will have a plurality over Weaver amounting to about 9,000.

Ohio Apparently Republican.

CLEVELAND, Nov. 12.—The Leader has received bulletins of official majorities from all but six counties in Ohio. According to these figures the Republican ticket now has over 1,000 plurality, and should have more on conservative estimates of the remaining counties.

Hill Favors Murphy.

ALBANY, Nov. 12. — The Times-Union, United States Senator Hill's personal organ, came out with a double leaded editorial favoring Hon. Edward Murphy, Jr., for United States senator in place of Frank Hiscock, whose term will expire next March.

Connecticut's Figures.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 12.—All except six of the 167 towns in this state have forwarded their returns to the office of the secretary of state. The total vote for governor is 184,982, of which Morris (Dem.) received 88,887, or a majority of 1,072 over all.

Delaware's Narrow Margin.

WILMINGTON, Nov. 12.—The official plurality for Cleveland is 504. The total vote in Delaware was 87,324—Democrats, 18,581; Republicans, 18,077; Prohibition, 566.

Russell's Plurality Increased.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—The discovery of an error in the governor vote of Marlboro increases Governor Russell's plurality 108 votes, making it 2,037.

Persistent Smallpox.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—Despite the efforts to stamp out the disease, two more cases of smallpox have been found here.

IT MAY BE BIELA'S COMET.

Holmes' Discovery May Prove of Surpassing Interest to Astronomers.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—The Commonwealth says today: Advices from the European Union of Astronomers hint to the fact that Professor Berberich, of Berlin, considers the newly discovered Holmes' comet as probably identical with Biela's. This, if substantiated, will be of the greatest interest to astronomers. The comet was discovered in 1772 by Montaigne at Limoges, and its periodicity was established by Biela at Josephstadt, Bohemia, in 1826.

Its successive appearances were watched with great interest, but its position in proximity to the sun prevented its observation on several of its returns. In 1845 it was seen as a faint nebula, and was observed to separate into two portions. On its next return, in 1852, the two companions were discernible, but widely separated, and since that time it has not been seen. In 1872 a stream of meteors was noted, the orbit of which agreed with that of the comet, and an interesting relationship was thus established.

The possibility that this comet, transformed into a stream of meteors, is once more visible to us as a comet, is of exceeding interest and of value as well as a step toward the solution of the mystery surrounding these wanderers of the skies.

Six Comets Visible.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 12.—Dr. Lewis Swift, of Warner observatory, saw the new comet last night. This makes six comets now visible in the heavens. Dr. Swift said: "The comet discovered on the 6th inst. was visible night before last. It is a very remarkable comet. I have never seen one like it. It is as round as the sun, and its circumferential outlines are as sharp as the limb of Jupiter. It is nearly two degrees south of the great nebula in Andromeda and is moving very slowly southwest. It is just visible to the naked eye."

Inspired by Bismarck.

BERLIN, Nov. 12.—The Hamburger Nachrichten contains a violent attack on the new military bill. The article undoubtedly was inspired by Bismarck. The increase is opposed on the ground that the cabinet is confirmed, and so the new secretary, sergeant at arms and clerks will get their places at once. The Democrats will fill all the big chairmanships of the senate committees, and already the Democratic senators are picking out their places under the new deal.

Depew Explains.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—With reference to the charge recently made by Mr. T. C. Platt that the loss of New York state to the Republican party in the late election was due to Mr. Depew's inexperience in campaign matters, the latter informed the United Press reporter that he had nothing to do with the running of the campaign in New York further than making speeches. He said that early in the campaign it was agreed between himself and Mr. Platt that the latter was to run the "machine" and that he (Depew) was to do the speech making. Mr. Depew said that the Homestead strike also affected the voting. He also denied the statement that either Mr. Frick or Mr. Carnegie contributed to the campaign funds.

FAVOR SUNDAY OPENING

Important Action Taken by the Exposition Directors.

A SEVEN DAY FAIR DECLARED FOR.

Congress Will Be Invited to Indorse the Resolutions Adopted by the Board. The Machinery Will Only Be in Operation Six Days of the Week Though.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—With only four dissenting votes, the directors of the World's fair went on record this morning as favoring the opening of the exposition on Sundays. The resolutions adopted state that the Sunday exposition should be a still show, the fair to be open on the same conditions that art galleries are thrown open on Sunday. Among other things the resolutions declare:

"It is our judgment that the exposition should be open on Sunday under such rules and regulations as will prohibit the use of machinery, unnecessary manual labor and all merchandising, and at the same time give opportunity for the study of the highest standard of artistic and mechanical science.

Should Be Open Every Day.

"It is also our judgment that the art gallery, the Horticultural building and all other buildings in which exhibits of mechanical art are exhibited should be thrown open to the public on each and every day during the entire time of the exposition; also that each employee should be given a day of each week for rest, study or recreation.

"We believe that the study on Sunday of such exhibits of science and art and of the skill and genius of the artisan will not only be of inestimable educational advantage, but the thoughts of the visitors will be lifted above these creative agencies to the great Creator of all things useful and beautiful."

The resolutions favor the holding of religious services on the grounds each Sunday afternoon.

It is probable that a statement of the board's action, together with the resolutions adopted, will be sent to each member of congress. Whether any further attempt will be made to influence the members to amend the law has not been decided, but it is likely that long petitions will be sent to Washington soon after the session of congress begins.

Exposition Finances.

Auditor Ackerman furnished another statement of World's fair finances today. It shows that the total receipts to Nov. 1 have been $14,166,077.54 and the disbursements $11,063,313.18.

The payments on subscription have amounted to $5,375,336.80. Treasurer Zeberger has already received $500,000 from the sale of exposition bonds, in addition to the $5,001,000 realized from the sale of city of Chicago bonds. The next largest source of revenue has been the gate receipts at Jackson park, $158,223.01 having been realized from this source since the board commenced charging admission fee.

The expenses of the construction department reach the surprising total of $9,913,020.39, of which $1,100,824.95 was paid out during October.

JOHNNY WAS DEAD SLOW

And His Lamentations Welled Right from His Heart.

A TOUR THAT ENDED IN IGNOMINY.

Ejected with Philadelphia and Finding Pottsville No Good, He Finally Wound Up in New York in the Arms of a Couple of "Fly Cops" Who Were "Too Fresh."

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.—"Collared! Be de pimpin jimmy, I'm collared!"

This was the surprised exclamation, straight from the heart, that John Weber, of Philadelphia, uttered in the Church street police station late last night. John had been tricked, and he felt badly.

Ward Detectives Colby and Lyons were patrolling at Cortlandt and Liberty streets about 10 o'clock when a strange little figure approached. The figure was John's. John was neatly dressed in a mixed suit of tweed, and a little round cap was perched jauntily on one side of his head. Slung carelessly over his shoulder was a russet leather traveling bag. A Flobert rifle and an umbrella, strapped together, rested over the other shoulder.

The detectives had not time to recover from their surprise at the apparition when John halted in front of them, grounded arms, hitched his traveling bag around and spoke with a confident air:

"Say, cully, I'm a drop fresh in dese pastures, and I'll stack yer for a tip on de deed, all I want is a place to git in a little snoozin at a price t at won't bust de 'check.'

"I'll be dead fly on dese parts meself pretty soon, and I'll never want anything but call on Little Jack, de boy terrer from Philly."

John Was Dead Slow.

The detectives were in plain clothes. When they were sufficiently recovered from their surprise to be able to speak Colby volunteered in the most friendly fashion to find the young man a comfortable lodging house. Detective Lyons wanted to carry the rifle, but John refused to give it up. It was not until he purchased a ticket in front of the transit at the desk of the police station that John realized that the lodging house was not the one he would have selected himself. Then he gave vent to his disgust in picturesque and vigorous language, beginning with the exclamation quoted above:

"I'm t'ood rotten slow, I am," he went on to say. "Why de bloody blue ——— didn't I get on to youse fer fly cop blokes? Me Johnny, Johnny, yer fell right inter de city youth apex-ployhard, and the sergeant and policeman looked on admiringly and took good care of the rifle.

When John finally recovered from his feelings he told the sergeant that he was seven years old and the son of Peter Weber, of 1125 Hancock street, Philadelphia, a tanner who worked with Meyers & Co. at 46 North Third street, in that city.

"Philly was too dead slow for me," related John, "and I took it inter me noddle I'd start out and see der world. I waited by de ole man and ole woman went out election night to see who's elected. Then I got into de 'frigerator where dey kip de pies and I nagged it, twenty-five cent nuggets, and den I took de sneak.

Pottsville Was No Good.

"I trained it to Pottsville and stayed dere nearly a week. Monday, but de place was so good an dere was nuttin goin on dere, and I cum to Jersey City. I found no fun dere neither, and trained it back to Atlantic City Tuesday morn. Dere I fell in with Lou was a nig, but we hit it up together and he sold me de shooter for $2.25, I thought I might need it here. Lou was certain on wid me, but his liver was white, his skin wasn't, and he giv' me der sneak we were gettin on board, so I cum alone. And here de first ting I do is git nabbed by cops."

Here Johnny began to weep copiously, not because he was frightened, as he took pains to explain, but because of his chagrin at getting caught on his first day in the big city.

When the detectives searched him they found four boxes of cartridges in the other bag and $10.20 in a little linen bag in his pocket. The sergeant asked him if he suspected $9 of the collection on the Bowery to which facetiousness John disclaimed reply, except to remark sotto voce, "Cause is all too fresh."

The boy was sent to police headquarters and a dispatch sent to his father in Philadelphia.

THE BIG STRIKE A FAILURE.

New Orleans Workmen Return to Their Places—It Cost a Million Dollars.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 12.—The big strike is off. The workmen virtually surrendered. An effort was made by the amalgamated council to reopen the question of arbitration, but it fell flat, and the merchants remained firm in their position. This, added to the fact that the leaders could not keep their men in line and that the men were half hearted who did stay out, led to the termination of the trouble and a victory for the employers.

The settlement of the strike has saved New Orleans from incalculable disaster. Two men deserve all the credit. One is Governor Foster and the other is W. S. Parkerson, who brought the merchants and strikers together. Twenty-five thousand men in fifty different trades went back to work at a signal. The car drivers, who were getting fifty dollars a month for twelve hours' daily work before the strike, have gone back to work at forty dollars a month for sixteen hours daily. They struck out of sympathy, having no grievance of their own. The merchants had agreed to arbitrate the question of wages, but thousands of the strikers found that their places were already filled.

The strike, which has cost over $1,000,000, began on Oct. 24 with the refusal of the employers to grant the demands of the draymen, loaders and scalemen for higher wages, and that none but union men be employed. Other workers joined the ranks of the strikers, including the gashouse workers, electric light men and street car employes, until the business of the city was almost at a standstill.

Governor Foster has been receiving congratulatory expressions from leading citizens and telegrams from far and near all during the morning for his prompt action and firm stand in dealing with the strikers, resulting as it has in the speedy adjustment of the labor troubles. It has told upon him, however, for he is now suffering from nervous prostration.

VOLCANOES.

The Best Known and the Loftiest Volcanoes of the World.

Volcanoes differ greatly in their dimensions, some being vast mountain masses rising thousands of feet above the sea level, while others are mere molehills. They also exhibit every stage of development and decay, some being capable of chronic eruption, others seeming to be entirely extinct, others having been dormant for long periods, and others fairly to be regarded as extinct. The number of great habitual volcanic vents on the globe are known to be in action is estimated at between 300 and 350. Most of these are marked by mountains of greater or less size.

Three of the best known volcanoes of the world—Vesuvius, 3,925 feet; Hecla, 3,577 feet, and Stromboli, 3,000 feet—are of much less elevation than many others altogether unfamiliar. The height, names and locations of twenty-four of the loftiest volcanoes of the world are as follows: Sahama, Peru, 22,000 feet; Llullaillac, Chili, 21,000 feet; Arequipa, Peru, 20,300 feet; Cayambi, Ecuador, 19,810 feet; Cotopaxi, Peru, 19,500 feet; Antisana, Ecuador, 19,200 feet; San Jose, Chili, 18,150 feet; Mount St. Elias, Alaska, 17,900 feet; Popocatepetl, Mexico, 17,884 feet; Orizaba, Mexico, 17,370 feet; Altar, Ecuador, 17,126 feet; Sangai, Ecuador, 17,120 feet; Klintlievskaia, Kamchatka, 16,512 feet; Iztaccihuatl, Mexico, 15,700 feet; Tuluca, Mexico, 15,500 feet; Shasta, United States, 14,400 feet. Fujiyama, Japan, 14,000 feet; Mauna Kea, Sandwich Islands, 13,953 feet; Mount Loa, Sandwich Islands, 13,760 feet; Teneriffe, Canary Islands, 12,236 feet; Mount St. Helens, United States, 12,000 feet; Mount Hood, United States, 11,225 feet; Peak of Tahiti, Friendly Islands, 10,935 feet; Mount Etna, Sicily, 10,874 feet.

The Library of Congress.

The library of congress occupies the entire western projection of the central Capitol building. The original library was built in 1800, but was destroyed with the Capitol in 1814, during the war with England. It was afterward replenished by the purchase of the library belonging to ex-President Jefferson by congress, embracing about 7,000 volumes. In 1851 it contained 55,000 volumes, and by an accidental fire in that year the whole collection was destroyed, except 20,000 volumes. It was rebuilt in 1852, when $75,000 was appropriated in one sum to replenish the collection. The new library halls, three in number, are fitted up with ornamental iron cases and iron ceilings; the whole being perfectly fire proof. The library now contains about 300

"Wings" (with which is incorporated The British Women's Temperance Journal) is among the new monthlies for October. It is a paper devoted to "Woman's Work in Temperance Reform"—and is the official organ of the British Women's Temperance Association. The October number contains an excellent portrait of Madame Antoinette Sterling—together with an interesting interview with the famous singer, who is a vice-president of the Association; also an article with views on the British Women's Temperance Home, which at the present juncture, when the subject of intemperance among women is claiming so large a share of public attention, will be read with special interest. The paper is well got up, and enclosed in a dainty wrapper of tasteful design and coloring, which cannot fail to please the artistic eye and bespeak a favorable reception for the whole.

One of the great institutions of this country is The American Press Association which supplies telegraphic news to about 7,000 daily newspapers in the United States and Canada. The News holding the franchise for this locality. The press last Wednesday made us say that the association sent out false report of the election, which was not likely to give it, and was likely to give offense unintentionally. What we intended was to explain the contradiction between our morning and afternoon dispatches, which was necessary because the latter made the former seem false. We have had most pleasant business dealings with the American Press Association for the past eight years, and deem it but just to make this explanation, that the language referred to might seem objectionable, which would be entirely unobserved. On the contrary, the reports, as it transpires, were admirable for their correctness, entitling the association to the highest praise.

For Young Men.

Nearly all the churches last evening had a report of the work of the Young Men's Christian Association of the United States, read to the congregations, and a special service held.

The services in the First Baptist and the Crescent Avenue churches were given up entirely to the subject. Mr. C. Ingham spoke at the First Baptist, and Messrs. W. D. Murray and H. Andrews at the Crescent Avenue church. Mr. Andrews spoke feelingly and showed clearly the necessity of prayer for the young men of the day. Mr. Murray ably seconded the work in detail.

Rev. R. R. Meredith, who is the Methodist church congregation, Mr. A. C. La Boyteaux in the First Presbyterian church, and Mr. Charles Brown in the Trinity Reformed church.

Mischievous Boys.

As reported before in The News, boys in this city are continually breaking the globes of the electric lights. Every day the company is called upon to furnish new lamps for some section of Plainfield. Not content with breaking street lamps the boys are now breaking the panes of glass in the old Somerset homestead on Washington avenue.

ANOTHER NEW PASTOR.

THIS TIME AT THE PARK AVENUE BAPTIST CHURCH.

Rev. J. W. Richardson Preached His First Sermons Yesterday as Pastor of this Progressive Church.

The first sermon by the new pastor, Rev. J. W. Richardson of the Park avenue Baptist church last Sunday morning was listened to by a large and appreciative audience.

The discourse was based upon the second verse of the second chapter of 1st Corinthians. "For I determined not to know any thing among you, but Jesus Christ, and him crucified." It was delivered in a most able and eloquent manner.

There was no misunderstanding Mr. Richardson's declaration of his purpose in coming to the church. He was earnest, in his references, that, notwithstanding the fact that in the present progressive age, there is a tendency among some popular divines to preach on new theories, and fads, he, like Paul in his text, was determined to stand by the old gospel, and only preach Christ and him crucified.

The sermon took just forty minutes. The members of the church seem greatly elated over their success in securing Mr. Richardson, and consider him just the able and eloquent preacher necessary to fill their pulpit, and feel sure that in the future the pews of the church will all be occupied.

In the evening the church was again filled to its utmost capacity to listen to his sermon on "The Fading Leaf."

The musical features of the day's services deserve special mention. While the morning service was interspersed with special music by the choir, the evening service of song was a real musical treat. Mrs. Spicer, the "Tabernacle" singer from Brooklyn, accompanied by the choir, rendered the "Inflammatus" from Stabat Mater very effectively. Mrs. Spicer also sang the beautiful solo from Eli, "I Will Extol Thee."

A TURKEY SUPPER.

These Republicans Did Not Have to Eat "Crow."

The boarders at Mrs. Calvin Neighbour's, on East Front street, enjoyed themselves eating election turkey last Saturday evening. A bet was made during the campaign of a turkey supper between the two political factions. It was agreed that the members of the winning party should treat the losers to a turkey supper.

The dining room was decorated with American flags and at each end were pictures of Cleveland and Stevenson. Those participating in the feast were Mr. and Mrs. Cory, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Neighbour, Mrs. R. Disbrough, Misses Reynolds, Mr. R. B. Thorn, Mr. A. Thorn, Mr. Chas. Jenkins, Mr. Wm. Titsworth, Mrs. W. D. Silvers, Mr. Robert Bills, Mr. R. L. Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Neighbor. Mr. and Mrs. John Neighbor and family, Mr. Chas. E. Batt, Mr. G. H. Cook, and Mr. J. H. Cooley.

Suing for $300 Damages.

The case of Mr. Samuel Taynor vs. Mr. W. H. Smith, on contract, was tried before Justice Nash this morning. Lawyers Jackson & Codington appeared for the plaintiff, and Lawyer W. A. Coddington for the defendant. It seems that Mr. Smith contracted with Mr. Taynor to do some excavating, and in payment Taynor was to receive a horse. The plaintiff was to have the horse to use in doing the work. Before the work was completed Taynor was taken sick, and Smith went to plaintiff's place and took the horse, hence the suit for 300. Taynor brought suit for $300. The Justice reserved his decision.

NORTH PLAINFIELD'S FIRE ALARM.

The Borough has Been Divided Into Four Districts.

Many residents of the borough are in a quandary as to the arrangement of the fire alarm districts. When the gong blows they cannot tell where the fire is by the number of times it is struck. The borough has been divided into four districts, Nos. three, five, seven, and nine, so as not to conflict with the calls on the Plainfield side of the brook.

District No. 3—three blows—takes in all that territory to the east of Somerset street and south of Jackson avenue.

District No. 7—seven blows—indicates that the fire is east of Somerset street and North of Jackson avenue.

District No. 9—nine blows—fire is located west of Somerset street and north of Park place.

In each instance the blows are repeated twice. For example: If the fire is in District No. 3, the gong will blow—3, pause, 3, pause, 3.

When help is needed from Plainfield the alarm is the same as the city uses to call help—6-6.

The Rev. C. S. Adams van Schaltema, who is now in his seventy-eighth year, is still laboring earnestly for the advancement of the temperance cause in the Netherlands. The "King William's House" at Amsterdam, founded by him, has six hundred members, all abstainers, and a branch at Ymuiden, with sixty-five members, has secured ground for the building of a temperance institute.

The Happiest Republican.

Yesterday's New York World had the following to say of Surrogate George T. Parrott, whom the returns at first made as defeated.

The happiest Republican in the county is Surrogate George T. Parrot, who, in the teeth of a tidal wave, piled up a handsome majority over a ticket headed by himself, while all his colleagues on the ticket were snowed under. His success is due, next to the fact that he ran the office on strictly business principles and not as a political machine. He was courteous and obliging to everybody that had any dealings with the office, and this increased his popularity. Added to this, he made a most popular house-to-house canvass among such Democrats as he thought were favorably inclined towards him, and if he could not secure their votes he extracted a promise from them that they would not do anything against him. By this quiet but effective work Mr. Parrot managed to surprise Republicans as well as Democrats by the magnitude of his vote. He was helped along in Plainfield by a Democratic clique that for certain personal reasons would not support his opponent. But in every ward and township Mr. Parrot showed his strength by running ahead of his ticket.

Music Hall Notes.

Ragan's lectures have a national fame. The first of the series will be given at Music Hall Wednesday.

"The Midnight Alarm," a play which had a most unqualified success in this city last season, is to be repeated at Music Hall to-morrow evening. As the title indicates, it is a strong, realistic sensational comedy, and deals with the exciting episodes of a firemen's life in New York city.

The new play by England's deceased poet laureate, will be given at Music Hall to-night. "The Foresters," is simple, dainty, and interesting. It tells anew the story of Robin Hood and his merry men, that every person, who reads at all, reads at ten years in the nursery books, and at sixteen in "Ivanhoe." It tells the story simply, in prose that is quaintly like the speech of the antique world, but not affectedly so; in verse that sometimes sounds like the rhythm of the Elizabethan poets, and sometimes has a lyrical quality that is distinctly and delightfully Tennysonian.

About Trespassing.

Farmers can hardly be blamed for objecting to hunting on their premises from the fact that the majority of hunters never think of tying up a panel of fence which they may chance to knock down, which often causes the farmer's stock to get into mischief and at a time, too, perhaps, when he is not at home, thus causing him a great deal of trouble. Those desiring to hunt over a farmer's premises should first ask permission and then oblige themselves to fix up all fences torn down or misplaced. These conditions will save both trouble and precaution.

TAKEN TO NEW BRUNSWICK

After a Trial at New Market, Johnston was Held for the County Court.

Early Friday morning Officer Riley arrested a colored man, on West Fourth street, who had in his possession a bag of chickens. He was locked up in the jail until Saturday afternoon, when he was taken before Justice Nash.

The man said his name was James Johnston and that he belonged in Philadelphia. The fact that he lived in another county, and had stolen the chickens from a farmer in Piscataway township, necessisted his being taken before a justice in Middlesex county.

Captain Grant took the thief to New Market, where he was tried before the Justice of the Peace of that place. Johnston pleaded not guilty and consequently had to be taken to New Brunswick, where he will be tried when the Middlesex court convenes.

Johnston confessed, on the way to New Market to Captain Grant, that he stole the chickens, but that he was going to plead not guilty.

—The Union County Board of Freeholders will hold a special meeting, at Elizabeth, Nov. 22, for the purpose of taking action on election bills.

EDITORIAL NOTES

They are trying to rob Professor Barnard of the glory of being the first to discover Jupiter's fifth moon. It wasn't much of a moon anyhow, but that does not hinder several other fellows from declaring that they saw it before he did. Professor Barnard ought to have got a patent on that moon at once.

The republic of Switzerland, like the cities of Maine, has a monopoly of the sale of alcoholic drinks. For three years past that about the same amount of liquor has been allowed to be sold to the Swiss, so that in this one nation of the earth the consumption of alcoholic drinks has not increased. It has not because the government would not let it. The profits from the liquor business are divided among the public treasuries of the different cantons.

An advertisement—and it is not a joke—appears in an Australian paper as follows: "Wanted 1,000 young cats delivered at Wirrabpa station." These cats are intended to kill rabbits. Australian farmers pay sixty cents apiece for them. The supply is not sufficient, hence the advertisement. The cats have proved very useful. But how will they get rid of the cats after the rabbits are exterminated? In the United States the dead lines might be used as political campaign documents, but Australia is not America.

Mathematical Wonder.

Jacques Inaudi is a young Italian twenty-five years old. He could not read and write till he was thirteen. Yet he is the most wonderful arithmetician living today. When he was six years old he was seized with a fancy for making arithmetical calculations. He could not read the names of the figures, but had them repeated to him and thus learned them. Then he began making mental calculations. All the primary operations in arithmetic were a mere child's game to him. He can multiply together numbers consisting of eight to ten figures each with lightning-like rapidity.

In brief all the processes that take ordinary boys years to learn Inaudi wrought out for himself when a few years old without knowing a figure when he saw it. Computations that require hours for other men to do this youth does in his mind in a few seconds. The mental operations merely are carried correct results are totally different from the rules of ordinary arithmetic, yet they are agerringly correct. If a number containing as high as twenty-six figures is read to him slowly and distinctly he can repeat it exactly. He says he does not see the figures in his mind when he makes a calculation in his head as most people do. On the contrary he hears them, he declares. How does he do it?

"Waste Products Made Useful."

Rarely interesting is Lord Lyon Playfair's paper in the North American Review, showing, as he tells us, that dirt is only useful matter in the wrong place. He then demonstrates to us how useful as well as beautiful refuse matter is when it is in the right place. To begin, there are heifer matches. The skeletons of all kinds of animals are carefully utilized for their phosphorus in the preparation of matches. How the clever Parisians make good use of not only skeletons, but rats we learn from the paragraph below:

"Of all waste things rats seem to be among the most repulsive and when dead what can be their use? But even they are the subjects of prediction in the industrial arts. In Paris there is a pound surrounded by walls into which all dead carcasses are thrown. A large colony of rats has sought out and form the catacombs. The rats are most useful in clearing the flesh from the bones, leaving a clean polished bone fitted for the making of phosphorus. At the mouth of the wall numerous shallow pans are placed with just sufficient to contain the body of the rats, but not their tails. Every three months a great battue takes place during which the largest rats can readily be slaughtered. The fur is valuable and finds a ready sale. The skins make a superior glove leather and their flesh, especially used for the thighs of fat gloves, because the skin of the rat is strong and supple. The thigh bones were formerly valued as toothpicks for ladies, but are now out of fashion, while the tendons and bones are seized up to make the celebrated wrappers for bonbons."

Playfair earnestly protests against the waste of sewage in rivers and the sea. Victor Hugo said in "Les Miserables," "If one gold is filth, on the other hand our filth is gold." Every pound of sewage properly employed in agriculture would produce a pound of wheat. As it is, 2,500 tons of sewage are daily taken from the Paris cesspools to be manufactured into ammonia and become the basis for ladies repelling salts among other things.

Cholera most hurtful nuisance was not to be feared. Now it produces gorgeous dyes for the textile industry. Sewage extracts fat from it can be eaten without producing gout or dyspepsia. Finally, and most important of all, the best disinfectants known are made from coal tar. From the poisonous fusel oil distilled from spirits are made delicious fruit essences and exquisite perfumes. The most repulsive rags are worked up into paper on which to express the choicest sentiments of love and friendship.

Old iron rusty and useless for every thing else is utilized in the making of ink. Horseshoe nails dropped in the streets reappear as swords and guns. From the dregs of sport wine sanitized powders are made.

FALSE FACTS FURNISHED

Ivan Petroff Nearly Ruins Our Behring Sea Case.

HISTORY OUT OF HIS OWN HEAD.

A Russian Writer Gets the State Department in a Pretty Pickle by Drawing on His Imagination—His Machinations Discovered Just in Time.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Two weeks ago it was the understanding among the arbitrators and counsel in the Behring sea case that they would sail for Paris, where the sessions of the board of arbitrators are to be held some time next month. Last week a London telegram stated that the Behring sea arbitrators would not meet until February. This statement was confirmed by the state department here, but no reason was given for the delay. An explanation, however, appears in the story that much of the data used in preparing the case of the United States before the arbitrators, furnished by Ivan Petroff, was false. When the preparation of the case was begun by the state department officials the name of Petroff as a writer on the resources of Alaska appeared more frequently than any other, and inquiry was made for him. He was found to be a special agent of the census bureau.

The Officials Were Astounded.

It was learned that he had taken the census of Alaska for the United States government in 1880 and 1890, and had written the monograph issued by the bureau of statistics of the treasury department on Alaska. In addition to this he had also assisted Hubert Howe Bancroft in the preparation of the latter's history of the territory. Mr. Petroff was thereupon summoned to the state department, and in reported to it the examination into and completion of certain facts relating to the sealing industry. In the study of his data one of the government's agents discovered an error, which led to further investigation, the result being to show, it is said, that nearly the entire information furnished by Petroff had been falsified, and in a manner which left no doubt of a willful intent to deceive.

This discovery astonished the officials. The information had already been incorporated in the case of this government as sent to London, and formed a part of the arch upon which the United States claims rested, although it was not the case proved by any manner of means. The British government was at once notified that the United States had been misled into errors of statement, and was informed that a correction would be made when the supplementary papers are submitted.

Not Paid by John Bull.

It was at first supposed at the state department that Petroff had been paid by the British government to falsify the information. An official of the state department said, however, that this charge had not been proved.

The most charitable conclusion of the officials was that Petroff, thinking he knew the character of information that the department wanted, had manufactured it so as to make a strong case for this government. The state department officials are congratulating themselves that they discovered the falsification before it was pointed out by England. There is no law to meet such a case as this, and Mr. Petroff will simply lose the government position as the result of his remarkable action.

For a Tariff Revision Commission.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The suggestion that congress pass a law authorizing the appointment of a commission to prepare a revision of the tariff to suit a new one, as it was proposed some time ago by senator Plumb. It is made in answer to the demand that President-elect Cleveland shall call a special session of congress as soon as he enters upon the discharge of the duties of his office—a demand which meets almost as much, if not more, opposition as it does favor among Democrats. The commission idea, it is thought by its proposers, will likely receive more general favor, for the reason that it provides a way by which no delay shall ensue in the matter of tariff reform, while at the same time avoiding all the dangers from which it refused to an extra session. The plan described is to have the commission appointed as soon as President Cleveland goes into office, so that it may work on a revision that shall be ready for consideration by congress when it meets in December.

The Senate's Attitude.

The work being done by experts and disinterested agents of the government, it is presumed, will commend itself to the intelligent judgment of the new congress and in a short time after organizing, congress will be in a position to intelligently enter upon a general system of tariff legislation.

To become effective, however, the suggestion must receive the co-operation of the present Republican senate and it is doubtful that such co-operation would be given. It is possible, however, and the possibility doubtless the sponsors of the proposition have had in mind in presenting it.

Congress Will Soon Meet Again.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—On Monday, Dec. 5, three weeks from now, the Fifty second congress will meet in final session. One of the first matters to be brought before the senate will be the Washington option bill, which has already passed the house, and has shown that it has a clear majority in favor of its passage in the senate.

Its provisions are so sweeping that they would practically, it is charged, shut up the Chicago wheat pit, the New Orleans cotton exchange and other institutions of like character. A strong opposition was developed in the senate, but there was a still stronger movement in its favor. Mr. Washburn, of Minnesota, who had the bill in charge, only consented to lay it aside before the adjournment of congress when Senator Hill had advanced on condition that it should be made the first special order for the next session and should be fought out on a finish.

The senate has a number of other important house bills on its calendar including the live stock bill and other tariff reform measures of the house. These have slumbered hitherto in the committee on finance but a determined effort will no doubt be made to bring them out and to send them up to the president for his action. The house may possibly be given an opportunity to reconsider its action and to take up the senate free coinage of silver bill. The silver men will try to bring the about.

MANY DEMOCRATS WILL MARCH.

Fifty Thousand May Celebrate Mr. Cleveland's Return to Power.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Already preparations are under way for the inauguration of Mr. Cleveland on March 4 next. It is the intention of Democratic organizations in the larger cities to make it more notable than any similar event that has preceded it. Tammany Hall, of New York; the Harrity club, of Philadelphia; Iroquois club, of Chicago, and other similar organizations have already sent representatives to Washington to secure accommodations for their members, who will be present and participate in the event. Estimates are heard fixing the number of marchers in the procession to celebrate the return of the Democratic party to power at 50,000.

Mr. Cleveland's Modesty.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—Since the election, which resulted so triumphantly in his favor, Mr. Cleveland has vanished from the public view. With the exception of the few words addressed to the throng in front of his house in the small hours of Wednesday morning, no utterance of public import has fallen from the lips of the president elect. He has remained in the privacy of his home, and to the representatives of the press Mr. Cleveland has denied himself absolutely. It was at first rumored that Mr. Cleveland was engaged in the preparation of a statement which he would make public, but this was authoritatively denied by Secretary O'Brien, who said, "I don't think Mr. Cleveland will be heard from till March."

Bulkeley versus Hawley.

WATERBURY, Conn., Nov. 14.—One of the leading questions in Nutmeg state politics now is, Who will be the successor to General Joseph R. Hawley in the United States senate? For some time past it has been known that Governor Morgan G. Bulkeley has had his eye on the senatorial chair. The present house has a Republican majority, but there are enough Hawley Republicans to turn the tide, with the support of the Democrats, and re-elect Hawley, it is said.

The President Did Not Talk.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—President Harrison authorizes the statement that recent publications purporting to be interviews with him, in which he is represented as giving his views upon the election, are entirely unfounded and pure inventions. While he is ready to speak upon that subject he will do so in his own way—one that will be convincing to all readers of the correctness of the statements made.

Fraud Alleged in Frisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 14.—Dr O'Donnell, who was defeated for mayor of San Francisco by a close vote, has secured evidence which show gross fraud in the register's office and may land Register Brown in a penitentiary. He obtained affidavits from four voters who swear the register broke open a sealed package from one of the precincts and threw the contents behind his counter.

McPherson and the Treasury Rumor.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Senator McPherson of New Jersey, has left Washington for Virginia. Before going he said he was not elated for the treasury portfolio. He added: I think it would be well to consult Mr Cleveland before deciding who will be honored with a place in his private council. Moreover, there is not even a remote probability of my getting the place."

The Ohio Situation

COLUMBUS, Nov. 14.—The latest returns at Republican headquarters show that the Republicans will save their state ticket, elect twenty two of the twenty-three electors and ten of the twenty-one congressmen. The Democratic committee claims that the official count only will show who is elected or defeated.

Wyoming Is Republican.

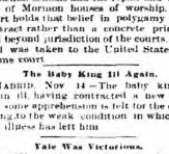
CHEYENNE, Nov. 14.—The Harrison electors are chosen by 500 majority. Coffeen (Dem.) is elected to congress by about 500 majority, and Osborne (Rep.) governor by 2,300 majority. The legislature is Republican on joint ballot by one majority.

The Baby King Ill Again.

MADRID, Nov. 14.—The baby king is again ill, having contracted a new cold, and some apprehension is felt for the child, owing to the weak condition in which his last illness has left him.

Yale Was Victorious.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The game here between the Yale and University of Pennsylvania eleven resulted in a victory for Yale. The Pennsylvanians failed to score.



There are two or three kinds of circular cloaks, and a pretty and novel one is fashioned in Russian sable, trimmed with mink or sable, and hangs in graceful folds all round. Like all the new short cloaks, it is very wide around the bottom. Sometimes it is made with long front pieces, which fit the figure as far down as the waist and form a kind of waistcoat. Women abroad are discarding the short fur capes so fashionable in New York last season in favor of these cloaks, and the serpentine boa has also had its day. An advantage of these circulars is that they can be worn most comfortably in the day or evening time—nothing is better for the theater on a really bitter winter night—while for ordinary wear over a cloth or tweed skirt few garments are more elegant.

One of the newest ornaments for the neck is shown to the second cut. It is made of sable, with a ble's head in the place where it fastens at the neck, and the muff worn with it is of the same fur.

New evening cloaks are made in Russian shape of velvet or seal, lined with brocade and heavily trimmed with mink or sable.

Some smart driving coats are made of fawn or drab boxcloth, with Watteau plaits of mink and trimmings of the same. A new collarette, some collarette recently made up consists of one entire sable—legs, tip and all—with diamonds for eyes.

An English fur lined ulster of novel and decided charms is of cedar colored cloth, faced with sealskin, and over the shoulders is a most cleverly arranged collar, setting into a saddle upon the shoulders, with revers in the front, and wide and round at the back; the cuffs are also of sealskin.

THEY MAY LYNCH LINGO

The Life of the Acquitted Negro Is Threatened.

MERCHANTVILLE'S MASS MEETING.

The Citizens Are Greatly Excited Because the Murderers of Miss Annie Lecony and Mrs. Annie Miller Have Not Been Brought to Justice.

MERCHANTVILLE, N. J., Nov. 14.—The good people of Merchantville are in arms because of the acquittal in Camden of Francis Lingo (colored), the alleged murderer of Mrs. Annie Miller. Their anger knows no bounds, and is intermingled with fear that some one else may be murdered in that vicinity and the perpetrator of sin punished. The wives and daughters of the well to do residents—and they are outnerous—actually dread to leave their homes alone for fear that something may happen them. As soon as it was learned that Lingo was a free man threats of lynching him, should he return to the community, were freely made, and the threats grow in earnestness and volume.

As the outcome of this state of affairs an indignation meeting was held at 4 o'clock in the Merchantville town hall, which was attended by 300 of the most prominent citizens of the locality. It was presided over by Thomas C. Knight, president of the Philadelphia Brokers' exchange, and a committee of three, consisting of John Morton, Edward Nash and Frederick Klotz, was appointed to confer with Camden County Prosecutor Jenkins, who conducted the case against Lingo, and see what could be done to keep the acquitted negro from returning to the neighborhood.

No Safety for Women.

Resolutions were presented, and although referred to a committee of five, they were practically adopted, censuring ex-Judge Wescott, senior counsel for Lingo, expressing sympathy with John Miller, husband of the murdered woman, and indignation at the abrupt ending of the trial. The committee is composed of John Allen, Charles Hollingshead, Edward W. Morris, William Lingerich and Jurist Fielderich, all wealthy and influential citizens. Another meeting will be held.

The citizens argue that as the murders of Miss Annie Lecone and Mrs. Annie Miller, both of which occured within their midst, are unavenged, there is no safety for them; that their lives and the lives of their families are in constant peril and that precautions must be taken.

They fear that the acquittal of Chalbley Leconey and Francis Lingo, of the respective murders, for which also was accused (for the first crime), will set a lawless precedent that may result in another mysterious killing. They also feel that some one should be hanged for each murder, but as there is no probability of either mystery ever being cleared, the best they can do is to take, in a measure, the law in their own hands and protect their homes by aggressive methods. The Matchtown negroes, who are particularly feared, are avowedly in sympathy with Lingo, and no one who shall maltreat Lingo.

Lingo says he will never return to Merchantville. He will exhibit himself in a dime museum in Philadelphia this week.

Mormons Keep the Money.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 14.—The territorial supreme court has decided the church escheatment case involving $2,000,000, and ordered that the money be handed over to the Mormon church to be used for the support of the poor, the parochial schools and the repair and building of Mormon houses of worship. The only methods that lelief in polygamy is an abstract rather than a concrete principle and beyond jurisdiction of the courts. Appeal was taken to the United States supreme court.

SENATOR HILL TO MARRY

Rumor Says He Will Wed a Georgia Widow.

SHE IS HANDSOME AND WEALTHY.

The Reader is True the Famous New York Politician Will Not Only Be a Benedict, but Several Times a Step-father as Well.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The Advertiser says that David B. Hill's bachelor days are numbered. When he returns to Washington in December to resume his place in the senate of the United States it is altogether probable that he will have a partner with him. The lady who, it is currently reported, has won the clever politician's heart is a southern beauty. Her name is Mrs. Fannie Iverson. Her home is in Atlanta. Mrs. Iverson is a widow and the sunny side of thirty. She retains all of the beauty of young womanhood. Her features are regular, her eyes a rich blue and her hair wavy and golden.

Senator Hill's visit to Atlanta, the occasion of his first meeting Mrs. Iverson, was made in company with Governor Roswell Fisher and a number of other prominent New Yorkers to secure the World's fair for that city. Mrs. Iverson has three children—all boys—a sunny little fortune and many friends in the fashionable world. The senator has a fine home in the suburbs of Albany. It has been redecorated and furnished in the last month, and much taste is exhibited in the selections. People who claim to know say that none but a woman could have suggested all the pretty things that can be seen in the senator's mansion on the hill.

Margaret Mather Weds Again.

MILWAUKEE, Nov. 14.—Captain Pabst, the millionaire brewer, was very much surprised to receive notice from his eldest son, Colonel Gustave Pabst, that he was married to Margaret Mather, the actress, in San Francisco on last Wednesday. This was the first the family knew of Colonel Pabst's love affair. He is twenty-six years old and very handsome.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—D. M. Cooley, of Dubuque, Ia., judge of the supreme court of that state, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. J. F. Douglass, 211 West 124 avenue, of paralysis. Judge Cooley was born at Sharon Hill, N. H., in 1825. He was Indian commissioner under President Grant and served several terms as a Republican senator in the Iowa legislature. A few years ago he was made judge of the supreme court. For twenty years he has been President of the Dubuque First National bank.

Judge Spencer in Trouble.

DULUTH, Nov. 14.—Judge James Spencer was arrested on an indictment charging him with grand larceny. His arrest grows out of the attempt of John Moran to collect his judgment for $50,000 from the Eastern Minnesota Railroad company. Judge Spencer is attorney for the road, and after a train and locomotive had been attached by Moran's attorney Spencer is alleged to have directed the engineer to remove the chain that locked the wheels of the engine. He denies having been present at the time.

"Bloody Sunday's" Fifth Anniversary.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The demonstration in Trafalgar square to celebrate the fifth anniversary of "Bloody Sunday" was attended by a large but not overly crowds. There were many red flags visible. At the evening meeting the speakers invariably urged their hearers to follow the examples of Paris and Liverpool, and proclaim death to the capitalists.

Immigration Active Again.

NEW YORK, Nov. 14.—The steamer City of Chester, from Liverpool, landed 324 steerage passengers on Ellis island, and the steamer Etruria 332, making a total of 656. MRS. MAYBRICK'S CASE AGAIN.

England's Home Secretary Sends Uncle Sam a Caustic Reply.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The celebrated international case of Mrs. Maybrick, the young American confined in Waking prison on a life sentence for the murder of her husband near Liverpool, is the subject of renewed agitation. Gail Hamilton has taken a deep interest in the case, and it was largely through her efforts that an immense petition was sent to Queen Victoria, asking that the unfortunate woman be pardoned. The petition was based on the assertion that no proof was adduced on the trial of Mrs. Maybrick to connect her with the crime charged, and further that the commission of the crime itself was not proved.

This petition was signed by Mrs. Harrison, the wives of the members of the cabinet, including Mrs. Blaine, and many prominent ladies all over the country. The petition received a semiofficial character by being forwarded through the state department, and the response to it was communicated direct to this government by the British officials. This reply is reported to be exceedingly caustic in its terms, so much so as to cause Gail Hamilton to refer to it as "senseless, vulgar and brutal in solence toward a friendly republican nation pleading for its own citizens."

The response is said to characterize the petition as the most impudent paper that ever found its way to the office of the home secretary and wholly unprecedented.

Importunities are still made at the state department to interest itself in Mrs. Maybrick's behalf, but it is probable that further efforts in this direction will be of an unofficial character.

TO KILL JERRY SIMPSON.

The Kansas Fusionists' Alleged Plan for a Mock Assassination.

TOPEKA, Nov. 14.—The biggest sensation connected with the late Kansas campaign has just been made public. It is the confession of L. S. Harvey, assistant secretary of the People's party campaign committee. Harvey had been charged with giving out secrets of the committee, and to defend himself he exposed the alleged plot, which was arranged in Topeka, to have a mock attempt made to assassinate Jerry Simpson. Harvey says the parties to the scheme were W. C. Jones, chairman of the Democratic state committee; Brichenthal, chairman of the People's party, and Jerry Simpson. The object was to create sympathy for Simpson and aid in his election. "The plan," says Secretary Harvey, "was to have Simpson return to his district and be waylaid and beaten, to offset southern outrages and create sympathy for Simpson. Jerry objected to being beaten and bruised up, but finally agreed to undergo mild punishment."

Mr. Harvey further says that "owing to the blunder of Simpson's district chairman the letters offering $2,000 reward to the man who would murder Simpson were found, and the sham attempt at assassination was prevented." The exposure by Harvey has created much excitement here, and many threats are made against him

To Restrict Immigration.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 14.—Emery H. Wilson, one of the most prominent Republicans in the east, says the restriction of immigration will come before congress early in December. Mr. Wilson says that Senator Chandler has prepared a bill with that end in view, providing that emigrants make a three months' application to the United States consuls abroad.

More Smallpox at New Haven.

WOMAN AND HOME.

WOMEN OF FRANCE AND THEIR WORKS AND PROGRESS.

Systematic Domestic Training—The Woman as You Can Trust—Josephine's Sanctuary—Overrated Beauty—Fifty Years Ago—The Daily Round.

In studying the ideas of the few great French authorities on education for women, one is impressed with the dominant purpose of the whole French scheme of education as a preparation for practical life. The important feature of these French girls' common school training is preparation for managing her private accounts in a businesslike way, those of her household when she marries, and those of her husband's business as well. Men in France go in for high art; women for art applied to industry. The wife of the artist takes upon herself the whole commercial work of the association, drawing buyers to the studio, calling on influential journalists, making out the bills, and thus relieving her partner from the prose of life. Mme. Cognoun invests all the money made by the famous actor, who calls her his chief cellarer of the exchequer.

The last great step in woman's education in France—the opening of girls' colleges by the republic—was made because it had been demonstrated that women could use to good advantage higher instruction than she was receiving, and not at all from a generous desire to give her a larger intellectual life. In the course laid out in these colleges by the state there is work required during the last year on common law as related to the affairs of women. There is also obligatory instruction in domestic matters, including household bookkeeping, lessons on purchasing, on useless and useful expenditures and the like. The good results of this system are shown in the Frenchman's reputation of making something out of nothing. A French woman will make a charming toilet out of odds and ends that the American woman gives her maid. She will make a dress almost out of material an American would consider insufficient for knickknot most of all is her superior intuitive knowledge in her important commercial position as a partner in her husband's business or manager of her inn. In the small shops the husband seldom employs a clerk; in the large ones the wife is an equal partner, and should the husband die she carries on the business successfully alone.

The fame of the 19m Marche is due to Mme. Boucicault, who helped found, and at her husband's death controlled and enlarged the great business, carrying it on with such nice and considerate system that the "lady of the Bon Marche" is looked upon as a patron saint in many French households. The Dreyfus restaurants, which are found in all quarters of Paris, have been for many years under the management of the widow of Duval, senior, who has followed the principles of her husband's methods. Mme. Jaluzot, wife of M. Jaluzot, the deputy, made the name for his grand magasins, Le Printemps, through her perfect taste in dress textiles and colors. She was, previous to her marriage, an actress in the Francais.

Mme. de Lavigne, left a widow with an estate impoverished by her husband's bad management, made large fortunes for her children by her skill and industry. She was a fine lady by birth and education, a writer and an ornament of the most splendid courts that ever existed. It was she who wrote the dictum to a haughty daughter, "Avenoid, remember that politeness is the small change of Christian charity."

So important is the place which the French woman occupies in commerce that the chamber of deputies and the senate have agreed to allow her to consult in certain members to the tribunal of commerce. We are a practical and an educated people with women who yield the palm to none for ambition, energy and cleverness, but the economic idea is to us not exactly a well-defined one, and the French system of developing it is certainly worth our consideration.—New York Sun.

Systematic Domestic Training.

While we later over the unrinsed majority there are hundreds of young girls in orphan asylums and other institutions who might be getting thorough grounding in the fundamentals of domestic work and make, even in two years, a change in present domestic conditions. If it could be made the fad, even for one year, for in boarding schools to devote a week to this work, we should be astonished at the result. To raise the most independent girl without practical knowledge of housework is cruel, but it becomes worse than cruel for the dependent class. It cannot be that a large per cent. of the girls yearly cared for by charity are to be adopted in comfortable homes or trained for well paying artistic professions.

But who is to give this training? Evidently it can not be added to the faithful workers who are already overburdened with the problem of feeding, clothing and sheltering the orphans. As long a week is not much for ships to give, the work would prove fascinating to many, and there are so many intelligent women, and so much time to be filled more than by housework, well done, is a great preventive of both vice and disease. Nine people out of ten are sick because they do not exercise enough to make all parts of body; all people who are victims are so because they have not been kept healthfully and happily busy. Housework, taught in the proper way, can be made a most healthful occupation. The time has come for some man or women to originate the fashion of leaving their children out at the top, but at the bottom, to be used in an education that will set the formation of character above all else.—Mrs. C. H. Stone in Boston Transcript.

The Woman You Can Trust.

There are in this worst all sorts of women—charming, pretty, sensible and delightful ones, too—but of the entire lot do we not pick out for rock and for ledge to be the woman we can trust? Is there not a world of reliance in the word of one whom we know never violates a promise? Is it not a pleasure to confide in one who we know holds our secret as closely as her own? And is not the assurance of help from a character such as this a standby in all hours of trouble and difficulty, for we know that her promises once given we have nothing to fear?

The woman likely her own sex trusts is one whom her husband likewise will never have occasion to doubt. The daughter who has proved worthy of the confidence of her parents will likewise justify her lover's expectations when she becomes a wife. Sincerity is a rare jewel in these days of social deceit and subterfuge. Promises are given for accommodation, never meaning to be kept. The pledge of secrecy is only the bait to worm another's secret from her bosom, then to be retailed broadcast over the land. The offer of help made in time of prosperity cannot be interpreted as such when adversity makes herself strong.

Life is false and hollow to a great extent. Therefore when one meets a woman sincere and true she shines forth with the undimmed luster of a pure white diamond among a mass of yellow stones that may glitter perhaps as attractively, yet which have no value in comparison with the life of purity when want compels the necessity of comparing it.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Josephine's Sanctuary.

At Malmaison, Josephine consecrated one room to the memories of happy days passed there by Napoleon before his divorce from her. It was a room then used by him as a study whenever the cares of war and politics permitted him to seek a temporary rest in her society in that charming retreat, and when she was left there alone to mourn their separation she would allow nobody to occupy the room but herself. In it lay the pen last used there by the emperor, which she took long before coronation on a table by the map he had last studied; over there the line of march tracked out which has since been taught Europe to feel the power of his tactics; on the wall hung a glass case in which some of his hair was arranged in ornamental or symbolic form. It was one long shrine that her hand guided on his head that the sight of it must have carried back Josephine's memory to the time when she, the widowed Countess de Beauharnais, determined on marrying its owner, the young soldier of fortune, with nothing but his love and his sword, and his clean to offer her."

Such a sanctuary indeed was this chamber at Malmaison to the ex-empress that she would not allow any hand but her own to dust or range the articles in it while it had been consecrated, as she deemed, by the touch of the sun hand who had sanctified her to his ambition, and in so doing had lost his guiding star, the guardian angel of his life.—Buffalo News.

Overrated Beauty.

By the way, some of the papers went a few steps too far with their admiration of the almost miraculous beauty of Queen Louise of Denmark's three daughters. "Loveliest of all the land," to begin with. "Time has recoiled from touching them with his marriage fingers," and so on, with plenty more of the same sort. Well, flattery of this strength is a far remove from an honest compliment, and even the touched up photographic portraits of the Princess of Wales, the empress of Russia and the Duchess of Cumberland will scarcely support that theory of miraculous loveliness.

Our own Alexandria, as all the world knows, has a beautiful face which owes its chief charm to a sweet expression; the czarina's large, lustrous eyes constitute her one perfection, and both these illustrious sisters find the rest of their wonderous youth and attractiveness in the mighty art of dress, by the pursuit of which they must spend any amount of time and attention.

It is their getup which is so marvelous, and in the elevated position it attracts world wide attention. As for the Duchess of Cumberland, always the least pretty of the three, illness and unhappiness have changed her into a very plain woman with an almost miserable expression, differing greatly from the bright look she wore as a girl.—London Society.

Fifty Years Ago.

Half a century ago, if we may credit a contemporary authority of undoubted weight, the costume of English women was in the matter of convenience, not so much on an equality with as in advance of that of English men of the same period. It was, he did not hesitate to affirm, in as favorable state as the most vehement and reasonable for what is called nature and simplicity could desire. It was one in which they could dress quickly, walk nimbly, exercise plentifully, sing easily, loll gracefully, and in short perform all the duties of life without let or hindrance. The head was left to its natural size, the skin to its native purity; the waist to its proper region, and the heels to their real level.

The costume then in vogue was in fact, as he said, calculated to bring out all the natural beauties of the person, and to give each of them fair play. Since that remote and unfortunate era, however, feminine attire has been exposed to a series of reversions to earlier and less advanced types. All the novelties which have been introduced into it in the years which have intervened have been revivals of old-fashioned fashions, beginning with the hoops and high heeled shoes of the reign of Queen Anne, and ending for the nonce with the tight sleeves and puffed sleeves of the reign of Queen Elizabeth.—London World.

The Daily Round.

Our lives are necessarily made up of constant repetitions, and just as the ever recurring seasons usher in the same yearly changes of winter and summer and spring and autumn, so must we be occupied, in household matters, to consider every year the same questions. What to wear, what to eat, how to educate our children, to manage the household and our money affairs, and to obtain the best possible result for the expenditure of our time and strength—these are the important considerations that must be pondered upon over and over again by most wives and mothers. Sometimes these petty, monotonous cares become very irksome, and the brain seems to grow dull and the energies lag.

Many a clever woman has felt intellectually starved through the daily treadmill of household duties, and sometimes at times to lay the burden down forever. If these despondent ones, however, could only leave the daily round and routine of their calling, they could not help feeling a glory in the service on which so much depends. A well known writer has said that the happiness of a man depends almost upon the those in which the mistress comes nearest to the grand description of the housekeeper in the Old Testament—whose price is above rubies.—New York Tribune.

A Short Honeymoon.

If husbands knew how short they would take a quiet and very short honeymoon, and let the longer journey come a few weeks later. And they would marry earlier, instead of waiting until they have found their flight, and can afford a "good establishment." They take a young wife and set her down in the "quick and quiet" house, with indifferent help, and behind the lock forward to until children arrive, and then very often the baby is such a welcome relief to the day's monotony that it ousts the father from the first place and becomes a tyrant in the home. Some of the happiest couples I know are those who married in the bloom of early youth on very moderate incomes, and have fought the battle of life together step by step, learned the lessons of life together, and together suffered sorrow and joy.

Nothing in the world can replace the love of one's youth remains strong in the end, under any circumstances. In earlier life, too, habits are less formed, and all one's senses are keener. Why will men so often offer women only the refuse of their lives? Generally, I suppose, because they are unwilling to begin where their fathers left off.—London Lady.

One Way of Sharing Knowledge.

"I must run right down stairs while everything is fresh in my mind to tell it all to Ellen," said a housekeeper the other day, hurriedly leaving a house full. Later she explained that she was taking a course of cooking lectures and sharing them promptly every time with her cook.

"I talk them over with her, and she tries the dish the new way at once. I don't believe housekeepers realize half but they get constantly many valuable hints and much domestic knowledge that is of no use till it is applied in the kitchen, where it rarely goes. It is perhaps a selfish policy of mine, but still the right one, I think, that the cook shall receive all such enlightenment as can in any way. It adds of course to her interest in her work, and it adds, too, to her willingness to try new innovations. Arbitrary, unexplained orders are distasteful to anybody." I can appreciate that to the kitchen in fact they partake of tyranny. I have a library of cookbooks which Ellen understands are for her—not my—benefit, and a housekeeping magazine which I take principally down to her with paragraphs marked, of I call her attention to them.

"It has always seemed to me that we mistresses slip in our knowledge, asking overmuch from the ignorance of our servers. I am trying in a small way to raise the standard of one kitchen."—Her Point of View in New York Times.

Delicious Maryland Biscuit.

Aunt Hannah's pride was her old fashioned beaten or kneaded biscuits, and this is her recipe: One quart of flour, add one half a teaspoonful of salt, four pinches of lard chopped fine and rubbed thoroughly into the flour. Mix with cold water just as stiff as possible; as stiff that you feel almost hopeless of ever doing anything with it. Put it on a board and knead until it is perfectly pliable and rather blistering sound under your hands from the air bubbles breaking in it, and until you can pull it down in long thin strips. These tests are infallible, but you have to work hard and long before the dough will answer to them. When it does you can make the biscuit.

Break off pieces about the size of an egg, mold them into round balls and roll three-quarters of an inch thick with a rolling pin; stick through and through with a fork. The oven must be well heated, but not too hot, or they will be underdone in the middle and all of their excellence ruined. They will cook in twenty minutes if the oven is properly heated. A quart of flour makes twenty-four biscuits of ordinary size.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Crystallized Fruit.

Peel and divide into sections four Tangarine oranges. Also select two or three dozen firm Malaga grapes. Put two cupfuls of white sugar and one-third as much water on the fire in a saucepan. Boil to the "thread"—that is, until the candy will form threads when dropped from the spoon. Put the candy in a warm place where it will not boil, and then drop in two or three pieces of the fruit. Carefully lift out with a fork and put it on a greased plate. Be careful not to stir the candy, as that would make it go to sugar. Put in more fruit, and lift out carefully in the same way.

If the candy should begin to sugar, add water and boil until it reaches the same point again. Continue the dipping until all the pieces of fruit are covered with a perfectly transparent and dry coat of candy. Nothing could be prettier than a small cut glass dish heaped up with these fruits.—Good Housekeeping.

A Clothes Tree.

A novel idea in a clothes tree was worked out the other day by an ingenious young woman. A dead tree from the woods had the branches sawed away so as to leave projections of from four to twelve inches. These were rounded off, peeled, smoothed and polished, the entire trunk being handsomely finished. Into the projecting branches were screwed small hooks, and the whole was set into a standard made of a very heavy chestnut plank. This was polished and varnished and mounted on casters, which were set at the extreme corners of the base. With a push of the foot it could be rolled anywhere.—New York Ledger.

Cleaning Hard Wood.

Cherry and mahogany furniture can be cleaned in the following way to look almost like new: Dissolve a small lump of common washing soda in some very hot water. Wash only a small portion of the wood at a time with a bit of flannel dipped in the soda water, and dry it immediately with another piece of flannel, rubbing until it is highly polished.—New York Journal.

How to Starch Shirts.

Don't dip collars and cuffs or shirt fronts in boiled starch. You will be sure to come across lumps when ironing. Rub the starch on the articles on the wrong side with the fingers, and as soon as it begins to appear on the right side it is sufficiently starched.—New York Journal.

Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, well known to all W. C. T. U. workers and to many others, is a woman of large and rather imposing person. She speaks with wonderful fluency and decision, and seems to be absolutely self possessed.

White muslin in dainty and sheer folds edge the neck of widows' gowns to relieve the somberness of the dress. Soft crepe de crepe du chine or full lawn ruffles are added to dull silk or henrietta costumes.

Miss Mary E. Wilkins is said to write a thousand words—no more, no less—every day. Sometimes, when the spirit of imagination is especially fiery, she does this much within an hour.

Do not enter into a clandestine correspondence with any young man. The very fact that he urges you to such a bit of deceit should warn you against him.

The small niceties of woman's garb are the best index to the character of the woman who expends her thought upon their selection.

If girls would only study men more and themselves less they would come nearer to reducing flirting to an exact science.

DEAR WOMAN.

When by your fireside sitting,
With slippered feet, at night,
And soft cashmere flitting
Across your drowsy sight,
Oh, be it not a startling thing
To hear your lord implore,
Exclaiming, as she cuts the string,
"Twas such a bargain, dear!"

When, in the morning, rising,
Your head aches with a thud,
With thoughts on advertising
And payment of the rent,
What found in your bonnet wall,
When from your wife you hear
"Do let me have $10 at all events,
And such a bargain, dear?"

When to some distant city
You are obliged to roam,
As you peruse this ditty
Away from home and home,
A letter from your wife is brought,
The opening of it's clear
She wants a dress that she has bought
"At such a bargain, dear."

Let no rash youth who's shaping
His future by a kiss,
Think he will be changing
Just such a fate as this.
His girl, no matter what her name,
Is Eve astute, we fear.
We love them; but they're all the same—
As bargains they are dear.

—One of the dentist chairs in Mr. Travis' office on Somerset street, caught fire last evening. The prompt action of a servant girl in throwing water on it no doubt saved the house from burning.

—The wheat in many parts of the country is taking on a peculiar yellow color and farmers are fearful of short crops. They do not know whether to attribute this to insects or whether it is the result of the dry spell.

—Next Sunday evening the members of Franklin Council, No. 41, and Somerset Council, No. 105, Jr. O. U. A. M., will unite and proceed to Trinity church, where Pastor Cornelius Schaeck will preach a special sermon to their Order.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the German Reformed church, of North Plainfield, will hold a fair this week, commencing to-night, in Thorn's block, Somerset street. It is to be held for the benefit of the church, and to help pay the church debt.

—The Catholic Young Men's Lyceum, will produce, by local talent, at Stillman Music Hall, Thanksgiving evening, Nov. 24th, an Irish drama of four acts, entitled "Eileen Oge," or, Dark's the Hour Before the Dawn." The play is being thoroughly rehearsed under the direction of Dramatic Instructor H. J. King, and will be duly advertised.

—A very determined effort is being made to increase the membership of the New Jersey Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, the members of which are direct descendants of persons who assisted in the war of the revolution and the effort has already met with much success. Andrew D. Mellick, Jr., of this city, is a member of the county board of admission of members. Many of New Jersey's most prominent men are numbered among its members.

—One of the members of a trust recently formed, said rather plainly: "For twenty years I was master of my business now I am simply head of a department. I have created new designs. These I cannot push, any more than those of my former competitors. I draw a dividend but I cannot make a promise or draw a check. Even my business can be closed up and my name, which I have spent years in establishing, wiped out of existence without my consent." Possibly, though, my sorrow was more assumed than real, as I had a guarantee of large dividends, which is often as efficacious salve for all wounds of pride or ambition.

—"The Pedlasers," as played at Music Hall last evening, proved quite bright, interesting and refreshingly unique. It was witnessed by the class of audience which usually attend plays of merit. The scenery of Sherwood Forest was massively beautiful and imposing looking. The story of Robin Hood, in its natural form, is of interest to old and young. William Courtleigh, who took the part of Robin Hood last evening, was a good actor and a man of large mould, such as could be called for. When Richard Coeur De Leon (Pedlasers Roberts) appeared, however, his truly kingly carriage and physique, made insignificant looking the others of the company. Mr. Roberts has many warm friends in Plainfield. Maiden Marian (Miss Bell Archer) and Kate, attendant on Marian (Miss Agnes Paul) are well known as clever and sweet voiced actresses. The costumes worn are said to have been historically correct.

MANY DOGS BITTEN.

BY A MAD DOG YESTERDAY AND THIS MORNING.

The Residents of Harrison Street, North Plainfield, on the Lookout for the Brute which has Bitten their Dogs—One of its Victims Shot To-day.

Yesterday afternoon and early this morning a mad dog has been running loose around that part of the borough commonly termed "Bull Frog City." The dog has bitten several dogs and caused much excitement among the residents of Harrison street.

The first canine to be bitten by the rabid animal was that of a man named Cinchman, who was started yesterday afternoon, while in the house, by hearing his dog barking and making a racket with the chain with which he was fastened at the time. Cinchman ran out and saw a small beetle hound dog biting his pet, but before he could get near the brute, it ran off.

Early this morning Mr. Edward Pearson's dog, which was also chained, was bitten, as was also one belonging to Mr. George Billing.

The mad dog has not been killed yet, as it seems to evade persons and merely bites dogs that are chained.

It is said the rabid canine belongs to Mr. Fetring, a tailor residing on Harrison street.

Mr. Pearson's dog was so badly bitten that it had to be shot to-day.

THE PARK CLUB WINS.

The Second Game of the Series with Fanwood.

The second game of the series between the Park Club and the Fanwood Club was bowled last night on the alleys of the former club. The Park Club were victorious, winning by 32 pins. At one stage of the game the visitors were 76 pins ahead. They bowled better at the beginning of the game than at the end. The first game was won by the Fanwoods by 17 pins, making honors even. The final and decisive game promises to be very exciting. Mr. McQuade of the Nyack Bowling Club acted as umpire. A number of ladies were present from Fanwood. Following is the score:

The bowling match, arranged between the tall and short men of the Crescent League, was bowled last evening. There were so many absentees that their places had to be filled with men regardless of size. The short men's team won by 10 pins. Following is the score:

No Diphtheria in Bryant School.

Dr. Probasco says there are no cases of diphtheria among the pupils of Bryant school, as had been reported. Many letters are received by him asking about Janitor Hope being at the school, while his little daughter is sick at home with diphtheria. "Janitor Hope," he says, "does not go to his home, but has made arrangements to stay away from home while his child is sick. So that there is no danger from this disease."

—Fair to-night in Thorn's block.

—The entertainment at the Boys' Club last evening was enjoyed by 150 boys. Mr. Daley of New York was the favorite, in songs and recitations. Mrs. Nedens favored the boys with excellent instrumental music. The singing and bone playing of three of the boys was appreciated by both boys and visitors.

The large vote cast for me is appreciated as an evidence of the most kindly feeling on the part of my fellow citizens, irrespective of party affiliations. I cannot adequately express my gratitude for this renewed expression of their confidence and regard, but I desire thus publicly to convey to them the thanks it is impossible personally to tender, as well as the assurance that my earnest efforts shall be to administer this office that no one of these many friends will ever have cause to regret the support so generously given.

—Principle—the kind that is deeply rooted—will pay in satisfaction at first, and in dollars in the end. "Diplomacy," intrigue, and deception, may suggest "smartness," but they are far removed from permanent success.

UNION COUNTY BOWLERS

THEY MEET AT ELIZABETH AND ORGANIZE.

The Schedule Committee, Consisting of Messrs. Lyman, of the Crescent League; Warner, of the Roselles; and Tobin, of the Field Club, Will Meet To-Night in the Crescent League Club House.

An important meeting of the Journal Bowling League was held Saturday night and considerable business transacted.

There were represented the Arthur Kulls, the Alcyones, the Crescent League of this city, the Field Club, the C. Y. M. L., of this city, the Pioneers and the Roselle Casino.

In the absence of President Wooten, the meeting was called to order by Vice-President Davis, and after the roll-call, the minutes of the previous meeting were adopted as read by Secretary Cooley. Vice-President Davis was elected president and Mr. J. W. Shreve was elected vice-president.

Mr. Tobin presented the report of the committee on sections, which divided the league as follows: First division—Y. M. C. L. A., Arthur Kulls, Alcynones, Pioneers, U. C. B. Second Division—Crescents, C. Y. M. L., Roselle, E. F. C. and Cranfords.

Each club will roll sixteen games during the series, and at the rate of one game per week for each club the season championship will not be decided until next March.

President Davis announced his appointments on the schedule committee, Messrs. Lyman, Crescents; Warner, Roselles; and Tobin, Field Club, were his selections.

After some informal discussion about the arrangement of the schedule, the meeting was adjourned.

The schedule committee will meet tonight and prepare a draft of the games, copies of which, it is understood, will be mailed to each member of the league, so that final changes may be made at the next meeting of the league, which will probably be called for next Saturday or Monday evening.

Printed copies of the constitution and by-laws will soon be ready and will be distributed to each contesting club. The committee also expect to have neat schedule cards printed on which a record of the league games can be conveniently kept.

The members of the league are very enthusiastic and all are anxious for the series to begin. The games promise to be of great interest and the contesting teams are doing some hard training preparatory to the coming struggle.

Inspection of the Soldiers' Home.

The annual inspection of the Kearney Soldiers' Home took place at Harrison, N. J., yesterday. Gen. R. A. Donnelly, Dept. Commander G. A. R., Gen. Vice Commander Jacob White, Junior Vice Commander A. D. Blanchet with the Department Staff and Department Council of Administration were present. Dr. John Younglove, Chairman of the Committee on Homes, reported 48 deaths during the past year, the principal causes being dropsy and softening of the brain. The management of the Home was highly complimented for the evident care taken of the grounds and buildings and the neatness and cleanliness of the comrades and their quarters.

At the conclusion of the inspection, the Superintendent Major Peter Rogers, who has long been commandant at the Home, led the inspectors to the family dining room where an elegant spread had been prepared, his wife and daughters doing the honors.

The Air Brakes were Broken.

This morning as the train due in this city at 8.17 was between Westfield and Cranford, the engineer in trying to work the air brake found that they refused to act. He stopped the engine and it was found that the air brakes were broken. They were taken off and after a short delay the train proceeded. The trainmen were compelled to use the hand brakes for the rest of the trip.

—The design of the celebrated "A Yard of Roses" brought the artist exactly $25. It was originally sold to a publisher of a religious newspaper in this city for that sum. He turns sold it to a lithographer for $125. The lithographer immediately booked an order for 700,000, receiving some $5,000.

THE COAL COMBINE.

Additional Affidavits Filed at Trenton Yesterday.

Additional affidavits were filed yesterday in the coal combine suits between John P. Stockton, informant, and the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and others. The affidavits are those of A. A. McLeod, President of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad; C. G. Henderson, General Manager of the Philadelphia and Reading Company, and Charles Hartshorne, Second Vice President of the same road.

President McLeod's affidavit quotes largely from the supplemental information filed by the Attorney General which charges that the Philadelphia and Reading and Central Railroads disobeyed the order of the court and operated their roads to diminish competition in the anthracite coal, and arbitrarily increased the price to the people of New Jersey. Mr. McLeod swears that it is absolutely untrue.

The affidavit further states that immediately upon the service, Aug. 31, the Central Company re-entered on the possession of all its property, and that the Philadelphia and Reading Company has obeyed the order of the court, as it is bound, he says, that on July 1, 1892, the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company did advance the price of coal, and in September, 1892, made a still further advance, with discrimination between the citizens of New Jersey and those of Pennsylvania, and that the Philadelphia and Reading Company is trying to do with the advance. He does admit that the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, of its own motion, with consent and combination, did make a certain advance in the coal tariff rates from collieries in Pennsylvania. General Manager Henderson, in his affidavit denies that there has been any scarcity, either artificial or otherwise, of coal by limitation or diminution of supply mined or transported to market during August and September, 1892. He then gives a tabular statement, which shows the output for August and September both 1891 and 1892, and the output for this year was much in excess.

—Most people believe that the $50,000 a year which the president gets as his salary is the sum total. This is a mistake. $36,084 is given him, in addition to his salary of $50,000, to pay the salaries of his subordinates and clerks. His private secretary is paid $6,300, his stenographer $1,800, five messengers, each $1,200, a steward $1,800, two door keepers, each $1,200, four other clerks at good salaries, one telegraph operator, two others $1,200 and $1,400, a night usher $1,200, a doorman $900, and a man who takes care of the fires who receives $684 a year. In addition to this, there is given him $6,000 for incidental expenses such as stationary, carpets and the care of the presidential stables. And under another heading there is given him nearly $50,000 more. Of this, $12,500 is for repairs and refurnishing the White House, $3,500 is for fuel, $4,000 is for the green house, $12,000 is for gas, matches and the stable. The White House all told, costs the country in connection with the president considerably over $125,000 a year.

BULLETIN NOTES

Great Anniversaries Before Us.

About a century ago the era of kings and of hard labor ended, and the era of the common people and of labor saving machinery began. In the years immediately before us will come thick and fast centenaries the most remarkable in modern history. There are terrible and tragic centennial anniversaries too. Jan. 21, 1793, Louis XVI of France was guillotined—august sacrifice to the freedom of man. From July 14, 1789, till July 27, 1794, the first French commune held its reign of terror; July 28, 1794, the last of the old commune, with their leader, Robespierre, lost their heads upon the guillotine. The centenary of Napoleon's first victorious battles and famous campaigns will come during the closing years of the century, beginning with 1896.

Brighter centennial celebrations are before us in America. The south next May ought to have a splendid celebration all its own. For in May, 1793, Eli Whitney, at Savannah, completed the cotton gin, which practically created the greatest industry of the southern states. Modern progress dates from the adaptation of steam as a propelling power to machinery. The first steam engine that would do real work was invented by an Englishman—Thomas Newcomen—in 1705. All the world must give Newcomen a brave send-off in 1905, 200 years after. Watts, another Englishman, made possible the adaptation of steam to all kinds of machinery in 1763. But we in America deserve our full share of credit here, and it comes in the story of steam navigation.

In 1908 Robert Fulton sent the first commercially successful steamboat afloat, the Clermont, up Hudson river, unconsciously laying the foundation of the Vanderbilt fortunes. A respectful commemoration Fulton must have in 1908, not only from the Vanderbilts, but from all Americans. Steamboats had been run before, but it was left for the practical American mind to show it money could be made out of them. Six years later, in 1814, George Stephenson, the Englishman, built his first locomotive engine, "Puffing Billy," which traveled six miles an hour. When the anniversary comes around in 1914, England and America must join hands in celebrating with glory and splendor the birth of the railway engine. An Englishman invented it, but it has done most for America.

There are great battle anniversaries in the years immediately to come. Off Cape Trafalgar, Oct. 21, 1805, Admiral Lord Nelson, one of the most splendid figures in history, sent around among his fleet the full knowledge that England and won a glorious victory, but died of his wounds, thanking God that he himself had done his duty. What a commencial service to him there will be in Great Britain on old Trafalgar Day!

In the year 1915 England and America will both celebrate other war victories. New Orleans will make the country ring on the hundredth anniversary of the victory of Andrew Jackson over the British in that city Jan. 8, 1815. Among the transparencies will be perhaps display that famous motto, "To the victors belong the spoils." England's celebration in 1915 will be grander still. On Sunday, June 18, 1815, Wellington, the Duke, met and overthrew Napoleon Bonaparte at Waterloo. It was the most glorious victory of modern times, and one most important event in British military history in a century. It gave England a prestige she has never lost—just as the victory of Nelson made a truth of the poetic composition, "Britannia Rules the Wave."

One centennial anniversary more for our own country. It will be an occasion of stately pomp and solemn ceremonial. It will commemorate the hundredth year since the passing of the most illustrious American, George Washington, who died Dec. 14, 1799.

Lieutenant Schwatka, found in a dying condition in Portland, Or., with a bottle of laudanum beside him, was at the beginning of his career one of the most promising men of his time. He graduated from West Point at the age of twenty-two, did garrison and frontier duty in the cavalry service till 1877, and meanwhile studied both law and medicine and got diplomas of graduation. The medical diploma was from Bellevue Hospital school, New York city. He was as venturesome as Custer. He will be remembered because of his famous trip southward and the brilliant sketches and descriptions he wrote about scenes in the far north. These proved that he possessed literary talent of a high order. His great exploit was the sledge journey from the western shore of Hudson bay northward across the country to King William Land, where near O. Fetty he found relics that determined beyond a doubt the spot where the ill-fated Sir John Franklin's explorers died of starvation. Yet this man, who had many natural gifts and who had accomplished so much, lay down to sleep in the street at the age of forty-three with a bottle of laudanum beside him.

Perhaps additional restrictions on immigration may be needed. But there was a man once who killed a goose that laid a golden egg for him every day.

JOHN HOEY IS NO MORE.

Death of the Adams Express Company's President.

FROM POVERTY TO GREAT WEALTH

He Came to America from Ireland Without a Cent and Worked His Way to Fortune and Fame—Deposed from His Office for Alleged Malfeasance.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—John Hoey, ex president of the Adams Express company died at 10:10 p. m. Monday in his rooms at Delmonico's. Bright's disease was the immediate cause of death. It had been precipitated by a severe cold which Mr. Hoey had taken several days ago.

John Hoey was born in Drogheda, near Dublin, Ireland, Feb. 14, 1825. When eleven [illegible] his way across the ocean and landed in New York a friendless ragged, barefooted boy. After suffering severe hardships he secured a position as a folder in The Herald office. Adams express, then a new venture, established at 7 Wall street, secured young Hoey's services to carry letters at four dollars a week.

From carrying letters and packages young Hoey was given charge of a delivery wagon and was then rapidly advanced. In the evening he attended a Prince street school. In 1852, when the Adams Express company was incorporated and moved to its present quarters, 59 Broadway, Mr. Hoey was promoted to have charge of the southern and eastern steam line business.

He Loved an Actress.

Subsequently Mr. Hoey established an express line of his own in Charleston. The line covered the coast route of the Savannah steamers, and when the Adams Express company reorganized they bought the Hoey express out for a good figure. Soon after this Mr. Hoey married Mrs. Russell, an English actress, known to the stage as Miss Josephine Shaw. Mrs. Russell was a charming young widow and playing an engagement at Burton's theater, in Chambers street. Mr. Hoey fell madly in love with her, and one day quietly married her without saying anything to his friends. That night after the play, when the curtain had been rung down on the last act, Manager Burton appeared before the foot lights and announced the marriage. During the war Mr. Hoey made $500,000 on stock speculations, but in 1884 he opened the Hoey pool park and lost a fortune.

Displaced as President.

May 10, 1886, Mr. Hoey was elected president of the Adams Express company, which position he held until Oct. 13, 1891, when he was displaced by the directors. The charge against Mr. Hoey was malfeasance in office. At first he determined to make a fight, but a sense of the ingratitude displayed and the death of his old friend, William B. Dinsmore, the former president of the company, caused him to accept the inevitable. He never recovered from the shock and the loss of self-esteem, though so far as his health was concerned. He leaves three children—George, Josephine and Frederick.

Mr Hoey was a man of fads and hobbies, but they were hobbies that always led to some refined or refining conclusion. As a very young man he developed a great taste for good clothes, a taste which he carried to his grave. He was always scrupulously neat in appearance, not flashy or modish, but dressed like the gentleman of the day.

When he bought the house at 618 Fifth avenue he added a large picture gallery and filled it with the best examples of the modern masters. He bought largely for Mr. Ditmarsh also, and his taste and judgment were generally recognized among artists and connoisseurs.

For flowers he had a passionate fancy, his collection of orchids and roses being at one time the finest in the country. For music, too, he had a strong leaning, his box at the old Academy of Music invariably being occupied by himself and Mrs. Hoey.

As an employer Mr. Hoey showed some of the best and fairest qualities of his nature. He was adored by those under him. He was more than brave as physical courage goes. He was absolutely fearless.

THE NEWS OF POLITICS.

Alleged Election Law Violators to Sue for False Imprisonment.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 15.—There was a general jail delivery in Hudson county of prisoners held on charges of violating the election laws. Charles Colbert, the last of the negroes arrested on Nov. 4, was admitted to bail in $500. The state virtually admits that the men did not personally register, but that their names were given to the canvassers at their boarding houses during the house to house canvass required by the New Jersey law. The men have employed counsel and propose to bring suit for false imprisonment. The cases of Mike O'Mara and the eight alleged repeaters arrested in Hoboken on Nov. 7 were sent to the grand jury.

Mrs. Lease for Senator.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 15.—The United States senatorship question is the sole topic of discussion by the leaders of all political parties in Kansas. It is certain that the Democrats and Populists have a majority of four on joint ballot.

Judge Frank Doster, a prominent lawyer of Marion, is in the lead among the Populists. He is probably the ablest man in the Populist party, but he holds radical socialistic views. Mrs. Lease says she is going to look up the constitution, and if not barred will be a candidate for the senate herself. She believes the Republicans ought to stand by her for her denunciation of the egg throwing Democrats of the south.

Election Frauds in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Nov. 15.—Officers have arrested Edward Duffy, a school teacher, who was poll clerk in the First district of Cheektowaga on election day, on a charge of altering returns from that district, so that the majority of 7 which Mr. Quinby, Republican candidate for district attorney, rightly had was turned off and Mr. Bissell, his opponent, given a majority of 51. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of Supervisor Stock and Jacob Daringer, alleged accomplices of Duffy.

General Weaver's Remedy.

DES MOINES, Nov. 15.—General Weaver came out of the presidential campaign in excellent health, and is just as sanguine of the future success of the Populists as he has ever been. He believes that Democratic ascendency will be short lived; that the Republican party will never enter another contest; that there is no relief in tariff reform; that the financial question is the great problem, and that relief cannot come except through free coinage of silver.

Harrity's Work Nearly Over.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15.—National Democratic Chairman Harrity says: "I will go to New York on Friday to close up matters. When I leave New York Mrs. Harrity and I will go away for a couple of weeks for rest. We have enough of a balance on hand to pay our debts. Pennsylvania stands next to New York in the amount of money contributed to the national committee."

The Kansas Senatorship.

EMPORIA, Nov. 15.—Official returns from Greenwood county give 2,089 majority for Waterhouse for state senator. As Lyon county gave Levi Dumbauld, People's party candidate, 22 majority, the latter is elected. This makes it certain that the next United States senator from this state will not be a Republican, as has been confidently predicted.

CLEVELAND AGAINST IT.

He Is Said to Oppose an Extra Session.

THE DEMOCRATS WILL GO SLOW.

It Is Said That Mr. Cleveland Believes That All Needed Legislation Can Be Done Without Resorting to an Extraordinary Session of the Next Congress.

NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—The Sun says it is permitted to announce authoritatively that it is the present determination of ex-President Cleveland not to call an extraordinary session of congress after his inauguration on March 4 next. It is further announced that in the estimation at present of Mr. Cleveland and his closest friends an extraordinary session would turn out to be of profitless proceeding. His friends say that Mr. Cleveland must have time after his inauguration to look over the ground. There is a natural objection also to the reassembling of congress immediately after the inauguration on the ground that it would have more or less of an unsettling influence on the business of the country.

To Take Plenty of Time.

But stronger than anything else is the feeling that an extraordinary session could be of no particular advantage, and that the proper thing to do is to give Mr. Cleveland and the Democratic leaders time to look around and determine just what course to pursue. The best authorities say it will take all next summer and fall to get under headway, and that it will be plenty of time *to go ahead at the beginning of the Fifty-*third congress, which assembles on the first Monday of December, 1893.

The last session of the Fifty-second congress, which assembles on the first Monday of December, may take up a bill calling for the repeal of the Sherman law, which makes it obligatory for the treasury department to purchase every month 4,500,000 in silver bullion.

But even if this congress does not act on the Sherman law there is little or no probability that Mr. Cleveland will call an extraordinary session. He is averse to extra sessions. His cabinet will not be made up before February next.

McKeesport's Big Fire.

MCKEESPORT, Pa., Nov. 15.—Fire broke out at the corner of Jenny Lind and Eighteenth streets, and in less than half an hour six houses were in flames and the fire was rapidly spreading. Salvationists to Meet.

One Party to Be Swallowed.

"According to political logic," said he, "it is impossible for parties without issues to exist. The difference between the Democrats and the Republicans outside of the Lodge elections bill scare is mainly on the tariff, and that is slight. One of the parties will be swallowed by the People's party in the near future, and the other will be so weakened that we will be in the ascendency. With the race issue eliminated from politics the south will divide, and in four more years you will see entirely new arguments."

Mr. Loucks did not state what party would be entirely swallowed by the Third party.

Knights of Labor in Session.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 15.—The sixteenth annual convention of the K. of L. has opened here. Among the prominent knights present are Master Workman Powderly; Hugh Cavanagh, of Cincinnati; John Devlin, of Detroit; Charles Martin, of Toledo; George Murray and T. B. Maguire, of New York city, and John Hayes.

A prominent member of the order said to a reporter: "It is quite likely that all of the old officers will be re-elected without any opposition. Some time ago there was talk of Powderly resigning at this meeting, and that a successor would have to be elected. This is not the case, for Powderly does not have to resign. His term, as well as those of all the officers of the organization, expires at this meeting. Should Powderly, however, refuse to allow his name to go before the convention for re-election it is possible that his successor will be A. W. Wright, of Toronto, as he is one of the brainiest men of the order."

John W. Hayes, the national secretary, says: "I know of nothing of national importance that will come up. The constitution will be boiled down, but will not be changed a particle."

A VENTILATED CLOSET.

It Will Be Found a Convenient Adjunct to the Pantry.

A ventilated closet in the pantry wherein to keep scraps is a veritable boon to housekeepers, and those about to build should remember that it costs nothing in the construction of a house, and, on the other hand, a great help in the economy of the household, says the Tribune. Such a closet need only occupy the space of two and one-half by three feet in the pantry. It should have three shelves, a small window with double sash that can be opened either from the top or the bottom, and a door with a lock and key. Unless the weather is very hot cooked food can be kept perfectly well in such a depository, and a housekeeper, by looking over the remnants before ordering her late dinner, can have many a delicious entree prepared at no extra addition to the butcher's bill.

"I always go to my refrigerator," says a very good housekeeper, "and look over the odds and ends that are left from the day before, before making out my menu for dinner." This is a most excellent plan, and it would be much easier for her to see what was left over if she had only to open the door of a ventilated closet, such as we describe and see each remnant neatly arranged on a shelf.

Care of Winter Roses.

Early-planted roses for winter flowering will now be benefitted by a thin mulching of manure, but it is safer to err on the side of thinness than to apply too heavy a coating, as the latter generally results in injury to the plants. The use of a moderate quantity of bone dust is at all times beneficial to the soil for roses, providing the bone be of good quality, and the most satisfactory grade of this fertilizer is secured from a button factory, because the bone so used is in its natural state, and it is much superior as a plant food to that which has been boiled or dissolved with acids. Good bone dust, finely somewhat greasy when rubbed between the fingers, while that prepared from bones that have been boiled in order to extract the oil is quite dry and feels gritty to the touch.

As the young roses make their growth, disbudding must be attended to frequently, for the strength of the plant is all needed to make wood at this season so as to secure a strong growth ready for the winter flowering; and even in winter it is necessary to disbud regularly if flowers of extra size are desired.

Almond Cream Cake.

On beaten whites of ten eggs sift one and a half goblets of pulverised sugar and a goblet of flour through which has been stirred a heaping teaspoonful of cream tartar; stir very gently and do not beat it; bake in jelly pans. For cream take a half pint sweet cream, yolks of three eggs, tablespoonful pulverized sugar, teaspoonful corn starch; dissolve starch smoothly with a little milk, beat yolks and sugar together with the milk, boil the cream and stir these ingredients in as for any cream filling, only make a little thicker; blanch and grate fine a half pound almonds and stir into the cream. Put together like jelly cake while the icing is soft and stick in a half pound of almonds split in two.

Lemon Sponge Cake.

The following is a favorite old grandmother's recipe: Boil the rinds of one lemon in water till tender, and then beat them in a mortar; next boil up three pounds of refined sugar (loaf sugar) in a pint of water, skim it and add to it a pound of the rind; boil fast till the syrup is thick, stirring carefully all the while; having removed all seeds, put the pulp and juice to it, with a pint of apple liquor; boil all gently until well jellied, which will be about thirty minutes. Pour into small pots. Oranges may be done in the same manner if desired.

Ham Toast.

Chop fine enough cooked ham to make half a pint. Put one tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan and place on the fire. When hot, add a teaspoonful of flour, and when thoroughly mixed and frothy. Gradually add half a pint of cold milk, and stir until the sauce boils; then season with one-tenth of a teaspoonful of cayenne and half a teaspoonful of salt. Add the ham, and cook for three minutes. Spread this on six small slices of crisp toast. Put a poached egg on each slice, and serve at once.—Maria Parlos, in Good Housekeeping.

Delicious Dessert.

A delicious dessert, neither expensive nor difficult to make, is of cream, walnuts and boiled custard. First crack and pick over enough walnuts to make a pint of meats. After grinding them into a paste add, a little at a time, a quart of sweet cream. Make a boiled custard from a pint of milk and four eggs, and when it is cool add a cup of sugar, and, when cool, the cream and walnuts. Freeze this as ice cream.

A Handy Combination.

In a room where economy of space is something necessary to observe the table shown in the illustration is a happy idea. No matter how small a room may be, it hardly seems habitable unless there is a place for the owner's favorite books. This is easily arranged by combining a bookcase with the ordinary round table. The table shown in the cut is of antique oak. It was simply a plain table when first purchased, but since then oak shelves have been made to fit in the space between the legs. A linen rod was placed at the top, and from it a silken curtain was draped. The books were placed on the shelves and the curtain so arranged that it could be drawn to cover the books, thus keeping them free from dust. The curtain should be of silk which will blend with the coloring of the room.

TO AID THE HOUSEKEEPER.

HINTS AND SUGGESTIONS FOR THE BUSY HOUSEWIFE.

To Clean Copper and Brass — About Blacking the Stove — Duchess Potatoes — Pickling Vegetables — Some Excellent Recipes — Household Helps.

Copper utensils or brass articles may be thoroughly cleaned and made to look as bright as new by washing them with a solution of salt and vinegar. Use as much salt as the vinegar will dissolve, and apply with a woolen rag, rubbing vigorously, then polish with pulverized chalk, and the article will look like new. With the expenditure of little labor, as the acid of the vinegar is very efficient in removing stains from either brass or copper.

A Table for the Boudoir.

Blacking the Stove.

Coffee is used for mixing blacking for the stove, in order to make it stick closer and last longer. Most housekeepers prefer the old-fashioned blacking to any of the cements, because of its lasting qualities. The cement is easier to apply, as it requires no labor in polishing. No stove should be blacked more than once a month, but it should be kept clean by instantly wiping off any clots of grease which may be spilled upon it. The flues of a stove should certainly be cleaned as often as once a month.

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS.

A shoe that is uncomfortable from pinching may be fixed by laying a cloth, wet in hot water, across the place where it pinches, changing it as it grows cooler, for a number of times. This will cause the leather to shape itself to the foot.

To polish tortoise-shell ornaments, by rubbing with pulverized charcoal and water, using a clean flannel cloth; next moisten with vinegar and rub with whiting wet with water, or powdered rotten stone may be substituted for the whiting.

To polish patent leather, take a half-pound of sugar, one ounce of gum arabic and two pounds of ivory black, and boil all together. Then let it stand until cooled and settled when it may be put in bottles for use. This is also good for all black shoes.

To clean japanned goods, wet a sponge in warm soda and wash the tray, etc., and rub it with a cloth. If it looks smeared, dust on a little flour and rub it with a cloth, while if it has any marks they may often be removed with a little sweet oil rubbed on with a piece of flannel.—Good Housekeeping.

Duchess Potatoes.

Enough mealy potatoes to make a good dish, boiled dry, two tablespoonfuls of cream, one tablespoonful of butter, salt and pepper, two eggs, yolks and whites separately. Whip up the potatoes while hot with a silver fork, instead of using a potato-beater. This is a much better way to mash potatoes than that usually adopted; the potato is dried of all superfluous moisture, made whiter and lighter than by pounding. When it is fine and creamy, beat in the yolks, one by one, the butter, salt and pepper, and whip up to a creamy heap before mixing in with a few dexterous strokes the whites, which should be beaten till whipped stiff, and when perfectly cold cut into squares or rounds with a cake-cutter wet in cold water; grease the bottom of a baking-pan and set them in it to brown, but not touching one another. Bake quickly, brushing them all over, except at the bottom, with beaten egg when they begin to brown. Lay a napkin on a folded dish, a hot dish and range them regularly upon it.

Pickling Vegetables.

Vegetables for pickling are always mixed with salt, or laid in brine. When they are mixed with salt, they are usually put in a press. The object in either case is to extract the rank, crude juices, and to leave only the pulp of the vegetable for pickling. Old-fashioned housekeepers invariably scald their pickles in brine for nine days, changing the brine every third day; but this is not considered necessary now. It tended to turn the pickles yellow, and often made them soft. It is considered sufficient now to soak the pickles in a weak brine for twenty-four hours; or where it is practicable, as in the case of chopped pickles, to mix them with salt and put them in a press. The salt tends to draw out the juices. The most satisfactory way to put up cucumber pickles is to pack them down in salt brine and pickle them during the winter as they are needed.

Rice and Apple Souffle.

Boil two tablespoonfuls of rice in half a pint of milk; when soft add the yolks of two eggs, and sugar to sweeten; make a wall with it around the sides of the dish. Stew some pared and cored apples until soft, fill up the apertures in the apples with red currant jelly, pile them in the centre of the dish, and cover the whole with the whites of the eggs beaten to a stiff froth, and made very sweet with white sugar. Brown in the oven and serve with cream.

Water Cress.

Water cress contains sulphur and iodine in large quantities, is a stimulative to the digestive organs and is an admirable anti-scorbutic. In old times in England it was mainly valued as a principal ingredient of a "Spring tea" that was supposed to possess great virtues as a tonic and blood purifier.

To Clean Picture Frames.

Gilt frames, unless badly tarnished, may be brightened by dusting them with a soft cloth and applying a mixture made as follows: Crush three onions and boil them in a pint of water, to which has been added a teaspoonful of flour of sulphur.

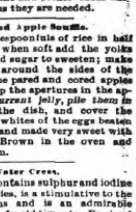
A NOTED FRENCH RIDER.

Stephane, the Man Who Holds the Twenty-four Hour World's Record.

Stephane, the fast French wheelman, who, on the Buffalo Bill-Velodrome track, Paris, made the twenty-four hour bicycle world's record of 413 miles and 1,000 yards by going his miles and one year a is a fine specimen of the athlete. He is 5 ft. 10 in. high, has a well developed chest, large arms, a very fair complexion and enormous legs. He is an extremely ungraceful rider. His method is to bend his head low down and lump his back up in a soldier-like fashion. Nevertheless, though powerful, he is very laborious, and on his machine he looks very little like a record breaker.



STEPHANE.

The Man Who Broke Page's Record.

Michael F. Sweeney was never thought to have in him the material for a record breaker, and when he surpassed W. Boyd Page's world's record, at the New York Athletic club's recent games in Travers's island, the audience was pleasantly surprised. His first attempt and failure also lited no comment. It was expected. Sweeney is a member of the Xavier Athletic association. He is an exceedingly modest and unassuming young man. Sweeney is rather tall and quite slender in appearance. But he is one mass of muscle and sinew. His wiry legs indicate their wonderful strength. Page's record for the high jump, which had withstood all attempts, specifique it, was 6 ft. 4 in. Sweeney cleared the bar without even grazing it at a height of 6 ft. 4½ in., thus earning the title of champion of the world.

The King of Paces.

Mascot's recent feat in pacing a mile in 2:04 on a regulation track in the first heat of a race has caused many persons to look to him as the "harness horse" which will first reach the two minute mark. Mascot is a "race" looking horse. He is by Dexter, a not particularly famous son of Hambletonian, out of a mare of whose pedigree there is no record. His career began in 1891. During that season he started twelve times, winning five races and closing with a record of 2:14¾. He has been campaigned this season by W. J. Andrews, who has succeeded in pulling his record down by more than 10 seconds.

SPORTING NOTES.

It is estimated that A. A. Zimmerman, the champion cycler, has won prizes amounting to over $35,000 in the last two years of his racing career.

All of Princeton's old football team, with possibly three exceptions, will play with the eleven this year, and Valeand Harvard will have anything but a walkover.

Hoyland Smith, the long distance bicycle racer, has stated that he will not do any more track riding this year.

Sheridan's Duck.

Sheridan, who was no sportsman, once went out on a shooting excursion. Everything flew before him and his gun, and he got nothing. On his way home, with an empty bag, he saw a man, who looked like a farmer, standing over a gate at a flock of ducks in a pool.

"What will you take," said Sheridan, "for a shot at those ducks?"

The man looked at him in astonishment. "Will half a crown do?"

The man nodded, and Sheridan gave him the half crown, taking his shot at the ducks. About half a dozen fell dead. As he was preparing to bag them he said to the man, "I think, on the whole, I have got a good bargain of you."

"Why," said the man, "they're not mine!"—Chatterbox.

Her Cruel Advice.

"It is very kind of you, Mr. Jelly, to ask me to be your wife, but it can never be."

It was a fair young woman who spoke.

The man whose doom she had thus sealed had the appearance of a wreck.

She was the two dozenth woman who had crushed his hopes, and it began to have its effect on him.

He rose from his knees trembling.

She was sorry for him—as women are under such circumstances—but she had done the best she could.

In a few brief moments he recovered his speech.

His lips quivered, but he was bound to say something.

"What shall I do?" he moaned.

The girl shook her head.

"I've asked two dozen women to marry me," he went on, "in the last ten years and every one has sat down on me. Even you have," he sighed, "and now what shall I do? I am completely worn out?"

Her face was ablaze and her eyes snapped.

Then she became cold and cruel.

"You would better have yourself upholstered," she replied in a steely voice, and swept out of the room.—Detroit Free Press.

1498—Columbus' two ambassadors returned; they had visited the capital of a chief, a village of about 1,000 people, and had been well received, but could hear of no Chinese, Cathay or great khans; on their return they reported what looked several of the natives going about with firebrands in their hands and certain dried herbs, which they rolled up in a leaf, and lighting one end put the other in their mouths, and continued to exhale a dense amount of the smoke, whereupon the Spaniards were struck with amazement at this singular and apparently unknown indulgence; this custom thus called tabacc syphilis appeared a few weeks later.

Moderation.

M. de Garneraut was a French magistrate of great integrity and learning and many fine qualities. No one appreciated better than he the beauty and utility of patience, but his naturally quick temper and irritable disposition sometimes betrayed him into droll inconsistencies.

M. de Flesselles, president of the superior council at Lyons at a time when the chancellor, Maupeou, was making great changes in the government, was instructed to suppress the parliament of Treroux, of which M. De Garneraut was president.

M. de Flesselles visited Trevoux, assembled the magistrates and gave his orders. De Garneraut replied with dignity that it was his duty to obey his sovereign, left his place, and followed by his associates presented his march out of the courtroom. But unfortunately his valet opened the doors. Instantly M. de Garneraut in a passion threw his cap and robe on the floor and cried: "Here, Antoine, take those things. They are only for the use of valets now!"

At a public meeting of the Lyons academy, of which he was a member, he read a paper on "Moderation." The discourse was fine, but the effect was somewhat marred by an incident at its commencement.

The speaker began: "Gentlemen, moderation—Please shut that door.

"Gentlemen, moderation is a—Will you be so kind as to shut that door?

"Gentlemen, moderation is a virtue—Confound you, shut that door or I leave this hall!"—Youth's Companion.

NO NEW CASES OF DIPHTHERIA.

The Board of Health's Prompt Action Prevents an Epidemic.

Plainfield's Board of Health deserves great credit for the manner in which it has looked after the cases of malignant diphtheria in the city. Their prompt action in having the house of Mr. Canfield, of West Third street, quarantined, no doubt stopped the disease from becoming epidemic, as that portion of the city is thickly settled and there are such a large number of little children allowed to play in the streets together, the disease would have spread rapidly.

This morning Health Inspector M. M. Dunham had Canfield's house fumigated so as to completely destroy all the germs of the disease.

One of Mr. Canfield's children has so far recovered as to be able to walk from room to room in the house, while the other child, a baby, is reported as very much improved since yesterday.

—Such a copious and steady downpour of rain as we had yesterday afternoon and last night made glad those who have been suffering from scarcity of water. The continued drought was beginning to tell on wells and streams.

—How the enterprising village to the south of us came to be named Dunellen is thus explained by an old resident. Before the locality had any name some New York investors in the land visited it with their wives, and, after expressing general satisfaction with the place, went to dinner as guests of some of the residents. They were in a quandary for a name for the place. Various names were suggested at the dinner, but none could be agreed upon. Now the wife of one of the visitors had become so much interested that she forgot to eat her dinner until the others were nearly finished, so the others had been waiting so long, that it was feared all would miss the train. At last the husband, to the grief of his wife had decided, said "Are you done, Ellen?" The others at the table only heard the words: "Done, Ellen?" and hit upon them as a help out of their dilemma, and so called the place "Dunellen." Another says it was named after an old pioneer, Samuel Dunn. If named after Dunn people would suppose it applied to a person instead of a place. Just imagine a conductor, on a train, just arrived at that station, shouting out, "Here, Dunn!" People might think he was asking an impertinent question. Dunn's names were transposed to Dunellen, as it is not so strange when you recall how Elberon was formed after Elberon, and that by a former Plainfield leader, Mr. Braley. At least, he is credited with it.

Shot a Gray Fox.

While Messrs. Robert Hushton and L. Van Doke, of this city were hunting yesterday they started a gray fox, which was afterwards shot by Mr. Hushton. The fox weighed twenty pounds. Long after they met a farmer, who said nearly the same. He told the hunters that he had missed a number of his sheep, but now, he said, he knew where they had gone.

HOW NEWS IS GATHERED

AND HOW IT IS DISSEMINATED THROUGHOUT THE LAND.

Great Combinations which Cover the Earth, and the Meaning of Important Changes which are Taking Place.

Have you ever stopped to think of the wonderful perfection of organization which enables the gathering of news from all parts of so vast a country as these United States? The news of the recent election is a conspicuous example which suggests this article.

Most people imagine that all the telegraphic news comes through what is commonly known as the Associated Press as an adjunct of the Western Union. Much of it does.

The more correct title of the "Associated Press" is "The New York Associated Press." It formerly meant an association composed of New York newspaper publishers banded together to facilitate the gathering of the news of New York city and its environments only.

It was originally composed of the Herald, Tribune, Sun, World, Times, Journal of Commerce, Express (now The Mail and Express), Evening Post, and News.

It was and is still a great association, but by no means the only one in the country.

There is the New York State Associated Press. It gathers the news of the State outside of New York city.

There is the New England Associated Press. It gathers the news from all points east of New York State.

There is the Western Associated Press. It gathers Western news, and includes some of the Pacific and Southern States.

Then these various associations are themselves part of a combination which sells news to its members only. They do not—or were not—attempt to trade in each other's territory. There are, however, disputes as to territorial limits.

The New York Associated Press, for instance, claims that its territory goes as far south as and includes Atlanta. The Western press objects, claiming Atlanta as its territory.

There are also disputes as to prices. The Western press claims that it pays too much, and that all the expenses of the New York Associated Press, for its so-called exhibitant charges to the Western press alone.

It ought to be understood here that membership in the New York Associated Press costs, or is reported to cost, $ 0,000. The Western press claims that it has cost the New York press nothing. Each outside combination named had to pay $10,000 membership fee into the New York Associated Press to secure its privileges.

The franchise, however, is considered very valuable. A member of the New York Associated Press informed the writer a few days ago that the associated had been recently offered for one franchise $50,000.

There are various news centers in the United States. The publishers in these great centers control considerable of the news in their respective sections through their respective paid correspondents, and this is the news they resell to the other associations in the combination for use at non-interfering points.

Then the home press associations have combinations with foreign press associations.

Of course all the great newspapers have special foreign correspondents, through whom they sometimes beat the regular combination.

The foreign news of the world comes principally through the New York Associated Press, passing through the hands of Mr. F. X. Schoonmaker, of Putnam avenue, this city, as the foreign news editor, or rather that was the case until recently.

Mr. William H. Mountford of the corner of Somerset street and Mountain avenue, is the chief official in this country of the Atlantic and Pacific Cable Company. This is owned by English capitalists, and through it considerable foreign news reaches this country by other combinations abroad.

Mr. Walter F. Phillips, formerly of Broad way, Plainfield, is the organizer and manager of the United Press Association. This, as its name implies, had for its object the uniting in one organization of leading newspapers on a certain circuit in the different news sections of the country. Direct wire connection is had with each paper on the circuit. Each contributes its share, and in addition the United Press holds a franchise for news from the Associated Press and the Western Union.

Mr. Phillips got these two companies taking place in these combinations at present, by the forming of new combinations, and, perhaps, the leading factor in promoting these changes is this same Mr. Phillips, who is "a hustler from way back."

First, Mr. Phillips got The Sun to cut loose from the Associated Press. Then he got the Commercial Advertiser (the successor of the Journal of Commerce) to follow suit, and now has a combination consisting of these papers and the New York Press, Recorder, Evening Post and Journal. The Tribune is to join it at the beginning of the new year, its obligations as a member of the Associated Press expiring this year. Each member of the combination must give six months notice of intention to withdraw or forfeit the $10,000 membership fee.

These withdrawals hurt the Associated Press, and it has now received a worse blow. Mr. Phillips has just consummated a new combination, combining the United Press and the Western Associated Press into one organization, Mr. Phillips to manage the eastern end, and the western association the western end.

This combination makes the Western Associated Press independent of the New York Associated Press for its Eastern news, and shuts out the Associated Press from this great source for western news.

The New York Associated Press is now suffering so much from these desertions that it is driven to try and make new combinations as a matter of self protection.

It has been making efforts to form combinations with what are known as "plate" concerns, among them the American Press Association. This association now pays the United Press Association about $16,000 per year for its news service at wholesale, retailing it on stereotype plates to newspapers in small towns like, Plainfield. Thereby such papers as THE NEWS, for instance, is enabled to have all the news of the world just as complete as the biggest of the metropolitan dailies. It is furnished to the association at the same time that the great dailies receive it and is at once put into type and distributed when the readers of local papers have most time to read it, with all the local news and late telegraphic news of the world to the hour of going to press in addition.

The contract of the American Press with the United Press expires this year, but the latter has the option of continuing the contract for five years longer.

The total number of daily newspapers in the United States and Canada for over seventy millions of people is only 1,935, although the number of publications of all kinds, weeklies and monthlies, including story papers and magazines, is about 18,000 more.

The daily newspaper is, however, the only one in which the venders of telegraphic news are interested. The great success of the concerns which have catered for the local newspaper trade—some of the owners of these concerns becoming millionaires within a very few years—has given the concerns which have ignored this trade alarm. They have suddenly realized that the world does not revolve around New York city, and that the many comparatively little, but independent, towns make in the aggregate a desirable constituency. Hence the new combinations of next year will probably not overlook the importance of the smaller towns for trade as news customers.

The proprietor of the New York Herald owns a majority of the stock in the Associated Press, and is, therefore, very much interested in these combinations.

The getting of news by correspondents located in surrounding towns was a Western idea, introduced into New York by Mr. Pulitzer, when he bought the World. That, and the illustrations he also introduced, crude though they were, formed important factors in changing the previously unprofitable World into an institution which Mr. Pulitzer said recently yielded him a million a year, though the labor of building up such an enterprise has made him totally blind. He added to the remark that he would rather give up all he has acquired, and be as the commonest beggar in the street, if he could thereby have back his eyesight and general health, which he sacrificed in getting the wealth.

There are some thirty millionaires in the newspaper business, but not one of them made his fortune so rapidly as Mr. Pulitzer.

Under the news' correspondence plan which he introduced, most outrageous abuses have grown up. The local correspondent, finding that an unvarnished tale did not find so much favor as if the account was highly colored, the more sensational the better, was, in unfortunately too many cases, tempted to draw on his imagination and distort the facts out of all recognition. In this way the correspondent got more space, and, consequently, being paid by space, more money. As a general thing he did not trouble himself about the facts. One correspondent, getting several newspapers, would furnish the country on the one, and get paid for the article over and over again.

By the new combinations it is proposed to stop all this. The story of the local correspondent will be paid for but once, and each other paper of the combination will be permitted to use it at the same time, condensed or altered to suit circumstances.

Altogether great things are promised all around when the new deal is consummated.

You have in this article more exclusive information than have the publishers of the great dailies themselves, who only know what is going on in their own sphere, which in this matter is but a small part of the whole. Now do you think you will get a pretty good idea of how the news of the world is gathered.

Rough on Wagons.

The rails used by the Plainfield Street Railway Company on their track on Front street are a continual menace to teams and vehicles and are compelled to use that thoroughfare.

A local wheelwright, in conversation with a NEWS reporter, last evening, said: "There isn't a day passes, that we do not have a wagon of some sort to repair, because of accidents caused by the street railway tracks. Sometimes it is a wheel that has been dished, and others want a shaft fixed, which has been twisted out of place."

Sunday evening as Mr. Charles Debele of Evona was driving along Front street with a team and carriage one of the rear wheels of the vehicle was wrenched off suddenly by being caught in the frog of the switch near the corner of Somerset street.

ALFRED KOECHLI ACQUITTED.

He was Tried Yesterday at Elizabeth for Larceny.

The indictment against Alfred Koechli of this city was brought up in the Union county court, at Elizabeth, yesterday. Young Koechli was charged with petit larceny. He was a clerk for Mr. Eugene Laing on Park avenue, and the allegation was that he appropriated $5 of his employer's money. Judge Ulrich, of this city was counsel for the defendant.

The complainant swore that young Koechli was helping him in the store on Saturday evening. On the second of August he took $5 from the top of a box near the money drawer. Mr. Laing testifying that his son saw the theft.

Mr. Laing testified that he suspected the boy of dishonesty for some time before the theft. When he accused Koechli he admitted that he had taken some money and would pay back.

On the cross examination Mr. Laing said there was another boy employed in the store whom he had charged with stealing from him.

Allan Laing, a son of the prosecuting witness, testified to seeing Koechli near where the m..... was, and saw him act in a suspicious manner, as though he had taken it.

In defence young Koechli testified in making change of a $5 bill he made a mistake of $2 against the laundry drawer. He took the $2 from the main drawer, and placed it on the box as described. He took an opportunity to put it in the laundry drawer. He denied taking the money from the store.

The case was concluded at noon and the jury retired. They returned in a short time with a verdict for acquittal.

The Coal Combine Cases.

In the Court of Chancery, at Trenton yesterday morning Attorney-General Stockton asked Chancellor McGill to set a day for argument in the coal combine cases.

Thomas N. McCarter, for the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, asked for an extension of time, saying that his answers were not fully prepared. Judge Stevens, for the State, said if more time was given the State would want to file additional evidence.

After a long wrangle between the counsel Chancellor McGill set Dec. 1 as the day for final argument. The date for cross-examining the witnesses by the State will be named Friday.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The registration of voters in New York city and state during the present campaign was the heaviest ever reported.

Chauncey Depew—Providence always arranges in some mysterious way to put an Irishman where there is going to be a row.

Christopher Columbus discovered America on Friday. He also set sail on Friday from the port of Palos when he started on his great voyage westward.

If you want to know for certain whether your diamond is genuine, rub it sharply across any unpainted board in a dark room, just as you would a friction match. If it is real it will give off a phosphorescent light as the match does.

An oscillating washing machine has been invented for which great claims are made. The tub rocks upon a frame like a cradle. A lever on the top must be plied by hand, but the inventor declares that by the use of his machine washing clothes becomes as easy as rocking a cradle.

A joint commission from the United States and Canada will investigate and report recommendations for the protection of fish and the fisheries in the land lakes bordering on both countries. It is an admirable commission except for one thing. The members are allowed two years to investigate and report. Perhaps by that time there will not be left many international fish to be protected.

On the very day that the Grand Army veterans held their review in Washington one of their number, General Daniel Ullmann, eighty-two years old, died at his home in Nyack, on the Hudson. The colored people should enshrine him as one of their patron saints. He it was who organized the first negro troops during the war and himself led south the first colored brigade.

Triumph and Tragedy.

One of the saddest, most ancre- lives in this generation ended a few time ago. William Harnett, who was called the greatest painter of still life in his time, was found unconscious in his New York studio one afternoon. It was taken to a hospital, where he died two days later.

William Harnett was a poor Irish lad born with an unquenchable love for art. He had little education, and was early obliged to contribute to the support of his family. The artistic impulse drove him to become a metal engraver. After toiling some years he saved a trifle—enough to take him to Europe to study awhile. He loved art and his mother. Between the two he stripped himself of necessaries of life. None but his most intimate friends knew that while studying in Munich he went often cold and hungry that he might save a little more to send home to his mother.

The privation and exposure brought on rheumatism. He never recovered from it, and it finally caused his death. At last success came—splendid success. If he had lived he would have probably in time got Meissonier-like prices for his pictures. As it was, a painting of horseshoe hanging by a nail brought him $1,000. A tiny picture of a brass flagon sold for $2,000. Yet at the age of forty-two, with his greatest fame and success all before him and the road all smooth and bright, he died, because he had starved and chilled himself while getting his art education and supporting his mother.

Chrysanthemum Development.

The evolution of the chrysanthemum is a striking feature in floral decoration. Twenty years ago beautiful, rather modest flowers, in size little larger than a small rose, were favorites in the outdoor garden, because they bloomed late in the fall, almost into winter. Four varieties were prominent—all exquisite golden brown, a brilliant crimson, a vivid yellow and a pure white.

Now there are several hundred varieties. No belle is equipped for the promenade unless she has a gorgeous yellow feathery chrysanthemum as large as a sunflower at her bodice. And the chrysanthemum shows this November her single flowers as large as the biggest cabbage head. Last of all, the chrysanthemum salad has been introduced, made from a recipe obtained from the cook of the mikado of Japan so it is said. The chrysanthemum grows no more in the open garden, it is forced in the greenhouse by the latest imported fashionable gardener.

No flower has ever come into fashion with such a whirl, or increased in size and variety so rapidly. The most fashionable kinds are perhaps like the most fashionable bonnets—those which are most grotesque in shape. Where is it all to end? Perhaps next year the prize chrysanthemum will be so large that it will have to be brought to the flower show in a special car constructed for it. And yet, with all this new blown splendor, one happy enough to have had a childhood in the country goes back in memory and asks, Are these gorgeous creations of the florist really any more beautiful than the brown and gold, the deep crimson, the greenish yellow and the snowy white of the old fashioned chrysanthemum that grew outdoors in the garden?

MR. CLEVELAND SPEAKS

The President-elect Addresses New York Business Men.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL TALKS

Although Somewhat Embarrassed by an Unexpected Task, He Makes a Very Sympathetic Response to the Toast, "The President of the United States."

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—President-elect Grover Cleveland was one of the honored guests at the 124th annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce held at Delmonico's. There were many other honored guests present, including Whitelaw Reid, Chauncey M. Depew, Secretary of the Treasury Foster, Senator Carlisle, Carl Schurz, ex-Governor Campbell, of Ohio; Murat Halstead, Rev. Dr. John Hall and Attorney General Miller.

Mr. Miller responded to the toast, "The President of the United States," for which Secretary Elkins had originally been slated. Mr. Miller was hardly prepared for the change, and said he approached the task assigned him with great diffidence and really under protest. Continuing, the attorney general said:

"The President of the United States."

I am also embarrassed in the subject which has been assigned to me as the toast. I have not been wont, in the twenty years of intimate association with President Harrison, to attempt to analyze his character, to catalogue his great qualities, to try to determine wherein he was greatest and where he was weakest; but I have been accustomed to work along side by side with him, each of us trying to accomplish that which was set before us to task, and in only say in a general way that to err in all that twenty years have I found him to fail below the expectation which was entertained as to what he could and would do.

Now as I think of my friend sitting in his lonely home watching for the face that shall never gladden his fireside again, waiting for the footfall that shall never come, listening for the voice whose music he shall never again hear, I cannot but feel that the best tribute I can pay to him is that of simple, unspoken sympathy.

Secretary Charles Foster also spoke, referring at length to treasury department work, immigration and the recent cholera scare.

*When President Orr introduced Pre*sident-elect Grover Cleveland there was loud applause. Mr. Cleveland spoke as follows:

Mr. Cleveland's Speech.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: I am exceedingly gratified by the kindness and warmth of your greetings. It does not surprise me, however, for I have seen and felt on more than one occasion the cordial hospitality and heartiness of those who assemble at the annual dinners of our Chamber of Commerce. We all have noticed that many men, when they seek to appear especially wise and impressive, speak of "our business interests" as something awful and mysterious, and quite often when a proposition is under discussion its merits are no longer apparent to those whose hair is on end at the supposition that "our business interests" are lying in wait with numerous evils of wrath in complete readiness for those who arrive at an unexpected condition.

I am fortunate in being able to state that my relation to the Chamber of Commerce of the state of New York, though merely of a complimentary kind, arising from honorary membership, has not familiarized me with "business interests" that I no longer regard these words as meaning a hobgoblinsty beast, nor do I have constantly before my mind's eye children in the Biblical story who were torn in pieces by bears for discussing too much at random the sadness of a mixed multitude.

Not Dreadful Beings.

It is entirely natural that my familiarity with business interests, arising from my relation to which I have referred, should be of a very pleasant sort and free from fear and trepidation, for the only meeting I have ever attended of the Chamber of Commerce have been precisely such as this, when the very best things to eat and drink have been enjoyed and discussed. I am bound to say that on these occasions the dreadful beings representing business interests have been very human indeed.

I know you will not do me the very great injustice of supposing that I in the least underrate the importance of the commercial and business interests of our country. On the contrary, no one appreciates more fully than I that while a proper adjustment of all interests should be maintained, you represent those which are strictly indispensable to our national growth and prosperity. I do not believe that any other interests should be obliged to feed from the crumbs which fall from the table of business, nor do I believe that table should be robbed of the good things which it presents, and fairly there merely because some other fables are not well provided.

Will Remember the Business Men.

It comes to this—we are all interested as Americans in a common pursuit. Our purpose is, or ought to be in our several spheres, to add to the general fund of national prosperity.

From this fund we are all entitled to draw, perhaps for equality, but surely, and expect a fair portion of individual prosperity. Let us avoid trampling on each other in our anxiety to be first in the distribution of shares, and let us not attempt to appropriate the shares of others.

As I close I cannot refrain from expressing my thanks for the courtesies often extended to me by the organization at whose hospitable board I have sat this evening. I beg to assure you that though I may not soon meet you again on an occasion like this, I shall remember with peculiar pleasure the friends made among your membership, and shall never allow myself to be heedless of the affairs you so worthily hold in your keeping.

Reid and Depew Speak.

Hon. Whitelaw Reid spoke briefly. He said:

I have been making a great many speeches within the last three or four weeks, and I am bound to say I do not admire the result of them. I did not think too highly of them when I made them and I think a great deal less of them now. I think I may speak for the audience as well as myself in saying to the gentlemen who are soon to take control of the government that whatever they may do to sustain the honor of the flag and promote the prosperity of the country, they will find the United States not Republicans and no Democrats, but we are Americans all

Chauncey M. Depew said in part:

I expected to be here tonight attending the obsequies of a distinguished friend of mine, and I had prepared an eulogium which would have been satisfactory to the spirit of the deceased. Instead I discover that I am a helpless democratic rallicanism meeting. I find that the places are changed. I am the corpse. But such the boniface have privileges.

Mr. Depew referred to the speech on "the typical American," which he delivered at the Astor House two years ago, and said that this speech had formed a campaign document of the Democrats, and had inspired him to the promise that he would pronounce an eulogy still further of taffy over Mr. Cleveland at the present dinner after Mr. Cleveland's defeat. He continued:

I cannot add anything to what I was about to have said on that occasion, because a greater than I has spoken. It is the American people who spoke last Tuesday. They have pronounced Mr. Cleveland's eulogy, not on the eve of speech, but in figures which were disastrous to us.

Held Up and Robbed.

MONTREAL, Nov. 16.—D. O'Brien, of Messrs. D. O'Brien & Son, contractors, was held up by three men and robbed of $4,300.

IN THE POLITICAL ARENA.

Chairman Harrity Does Not Desire a Cabinet Position.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—National Chairman William F. Harrity does not want a position in the Cleveland cabinet. Ex-United States District Attorney John R. Read, who is very close to Mr. Harrity, says: "Knowing him as I do, I don't think there is a position within the gift of the president that Mr. Harrity would accept. The best position would pay him but $6,000 a year.

"He would inevitably relinquish such a post without having profited financially, and inasmuch as he is a comparatively young man and has his fortune to make, and considering the fact that he is establishing his life in a business connection that will realize him a substantial income, it is too much of a sacrifice to expect from him that he should surrender all this for the honor of a cabinet portfolio."

Campbell for the Cabinet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Ex-Governor James E. Campbell, of Ohio, is a guest of the Hoffman House. Being asked if he intended to become a resident of New York, as reported, he said, "No, not at present." Friends of Mr. Campbell say that one reason why he will not settle in New York is that he expects to move to Washington as a cabinet minister or as some other important official under the new administration.

No Indictments at Trenton.

TRENTON, Nov. 16.—Many politicians of both parties drew a sigh of relief when it was announced that the grand jury of the county had adjourned and indicted nobody for bribery at the polls on election day. Half a dozen prominent men—four Republicans and two Democrats—were charged with the offense.

Brittlebower Declared Elected.

CARLISLE, Pa., Nov. 16.—At a meeting of the return judges of the Nineteenth congressional district at York Hon. Frank E. Brittlebower, of Bedford county, Democrat, was formally declared elected to congress. He is opposed to an extra session of congress.

Two New Ministers Named.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—The president has appointed William Potter, of Pennsylvania, United States minister to Italy; David P. Thompson, of Oregon, United States minister to Turkey, and Edward C. Little, of Kansas, United States consul general at Cairo, Egypt. Mr. Potter is a manufacturer of oilcloth at Philadelphia, a prominent member of the Union League club and of the common council. Mr. Thompson is a leading merchant of Portland, Or. Mr. Little is president of the Republican State League of Kansas and a lawyer of Abilene.

Father Mollinger's Bogus Jewels.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 16.—The supposed priceless jewels and sacred relics owned by the late Rev. Father Mollinger, and which played such a prominent part in the theosophical craze performed by the priest, are bogus. According to J. J. Wright, Father Mollinger's carpenter, the jewels are mostly pieces of colored glass, and the alleged golden altar is nothing but wood covered with cheap gilt.

New Jersey Blue Laws Enforced.

HACKENSACK, Nov. 16.—Mrs. Elizabeth Berry and Garry Storms were brought to the jail here to serve four days each for violating the Sunday law. They reside at Woodcliff, and were arrested on complaint of Martin J. Myers, a farmer of that place, who charged them with husking corn on Sunday.

Two Women Struck.

BETHLEHEM, Pa., Nov. 16.—Mrs. Stout, aged seventy years, and Mrs. Cole, aged forty-five, both of Bath, this county, were struck by a Lehigh and Lackawanna train at Bethlehem junction. Mrs. Stout was instantly killed. Mrs. Cole had both her legs cut off. She cannot live.

Billie Coddington Goes Back.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 16.—Mrs. Billie Coddington, the child wife of Herbert B. Coddington, the alleged Brebug cowboy, has left her husband and returned to her father, whose house she and her husband married at Trinidad, Colo., when they eloped.

Charges Against Mrs. Deacon.

PARIS, Nov. 16.—Maitre Clunet, Mr. Edward Parker Deacon's lawyer, says: "We have abundant proof that Mrs. Deacon has for a long time neglected her children, and that in other respects she is unfit to have the custody of her daughter."

Rev. Dr. Pierson and Immersion.

LONDON, Nov. 16.—The Rev. Dr. Pierson, temporary pastor of Spurgeon's tabernacle, has declared that American immerviewers have atrociously lied about him. He adds that his belief has always been that a pastor should immerse.

HE LOVED THE COUNTESS

Elmer Billings' Letters Read in Court at Philadelphia.

THE WOMAN HELD FOR CONSPIRACY.

Sensational Evidence in Druggist Toplis' Suit Against Billings and Mrs. Anita McMorrow, Alias Countess Betancourt. Thirty-two Million Dollars Out of Sight.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16.—The hearing in the case of Mrs. Anita McMorrow, better known as the Countess Betancourt, who is charged by William G. Toplis, a German-town druggist, with obtaining $2,500 by false pretenses on the representation that she possessed $32,000,000 of Spanish bonds, took place before Magistrate Durham. The charge of obtaining the money under false pretenses was dismissed, but the magistrate held the countess under $1,000 bail for court on the charge of conspiracy.

The allegation of conspiracy was that the countess and Elmer M. Billings, secretary of the Mercantile Safe Deposit company, of New York, had conspired to defraud Mr. Toplis.

His Heart's Darling.

To substantiate the charge of conspiracy letters from Billings to Mrs. McMorrow were offered in evidence and read. They were filled with love passages. Mr. Billings addressed her as his "heart's darling" and in other terms of endearment.

The countess came to the magistrate's office accompanied by her husband, John McMorrow. Druggist Toplis testified that he had known her for three years. "In September of last year she asked him for a loan, and showed the witness a package tied with red and yellow tape and richly decorated with seals. On the outside of the package was some writing in Spanish, which, translated, read:

"Certificates of deposit of $32,000,000 in gold belonging to Mrs. Anita Betancourt de McMorrow. After my death this should not be opened except by my testamentary executors, Mr. Henry C. Grant and his excellency, Don Antonio Mantilla de Los Rias, minister of Spain at Washington."

He said that she also showed him a paper containing a list of American railroad securities valued at $10,450,000. She told the witness that she owned these securities.

Toplis was questioned concerning his meeting with Billings in New York, and said he met Mr. McMorrow and Billings *by arrangement. The countess had in*duced Toplis to go with the understanding that "if Mr. Billings liked him he would be engaged to write letters for Mrs. McMorrow and cut the coupons from her bonds."

Love Letters Laughed At.

Then followed the reading of the love letters which Billings wrote to the countess from New York. The crowded court room was convulsed with laughter during the reading. John McMorrow, the husband, edged close to the magistrate's platform while the reading of the epistles were being divulged. The letters were of the most affectionate nature possible. The first epistle was dated Aug. 18, 1892, and was to "My only darling Anita." After letting off his love Billings concludes:

"I write continually having cause to praise and admire you for your unbounded love for me. How I would like to hug you and feel your warm love! I will write you again, Dollie, this evening.

"Your Elmer is true to his Anita. He loves you as he loves no other. What he says to you, and no other. In haste, I am yours till death, ELMER."

Another letter read was even more affectionate than the first. It was dated August 23, 1892, and was to "My only love, my darling Anita." Billin- ...ecrases his devotion to the countess and says:

"I leave kiss [illegible] mark signifying a kiss] here for you, and will think of you lovingly till I see you. God bless you and help you to rejoice in the love of yours and ever true, Elmer."

The defense protested against the reading of the letters. Mr. Herwin, however, argued that they were relevant.

The last witness was George E. Lewis, who said that Mrs. McMorrow owed him $5,000. He was in New York several months ago and Billings showed him two bonds, which Mrs. McMorrow kept her $32,000,000 of bonds.

Billings also told the witness that Mrs. McMorrow was worth $40,000 a day, and that she was the richest woman in America.

THE ARCHBISHOPS MEET

Important Convention of Catholics at New York.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION UP AGAIN.

Conditions Upon Which State Aid May Be Accepted—The Views of the Two Condemned Secret Societies to Be Considered by the Distinguished Prelates.

NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—The convention of Roman Catholic archbishops began at the residence of Archbishop Corrigan.

Cardinal Gibbons will preside at the conference and Archbishop Corrigan will act as secretary. The most important topic to be considered by the conference will be that of the parochial schools. As the outcome of the conference these results may be obtained:

First—Autonomy of the denominational schools—that is, the establishment of the right to choose their own teachers, but legally among those who have qualified before a state or mixed board.

Second—The opening of the doors of the schoolroom to ecclesiastical and secular inspectors.

Third—Establishing the right of municipal officers to examine the schools in secular branches.

Fourth—The support of the schools by the civil power and the payment of the teachers by it, or at least contribution for the purpose of an amount corresponding to the school tax paid by the parents of the pupils.

Only on these conditions, it is expected, will the majority of the archbishops entertain a proposition to accept state aid.

They will simply ask so much per capita allowance for the children in the state assisted schools, and in return will concede the right of the state to examine the pupils and teachers in secular branches, and will pay for instruction given in purely secular directions.

The subject of the two condemned secret societies, the Sons of Temperance and Odd Fellows, will also be discussed.

THE IMMIGRATION PROBLEM.

Mr. Powderly Wants the Gates Closed Ten Years.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 16.—The report of the credentials committee of the K. of L. convention seated all of the delegates present except Mrs. Lake, of Philadelphia, who was refused a seat on a technicality.

Quite a breeze was stirred up by some of the members when it was discovered that the hall they were meeting in belonged to August Delebar, a man who had fought the knights for years. Some of the delegates flatly refused to sit in the hall, and a committee was sent out to find another hall.

In an interview Mr. Powderly said: "There ought to be some legislation to further restriction of immigration. We are being overrun by a very undesirable class of Europeans, and the sooner indiscriminate immigration is stopped the better for the laboring classes of this country.

"Senator Chandler's proposed bill will require all persons desiring to come from Europe to this country to make application to a United States consul three months in advance, but I think it is better to close the gates completely for ten years."

Mr. Powderly was asked if there was any truth in the statement that he would refuse to serve under a general master workman of the Knights of Labor. He replied, "I resign because my present term is up and I cannot refuse to serve because I have not been re-elected."

The Farmers at Memphis.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 16.—In his address to the National Farmers' Alliance convention President Loucks stated that the political harvest of 1892 had been successful, and next the work of sowing for a greater harvest in 1896 would begin. Hon. A. L. Sims, on behalf of Governor John P. Buchanan, welcomed the delegates to the state, and Farmer Dean, of New York, responded. He said that the Alliance more than any other body was wiping out the Mason and Dixon line.

TO ENLARGE THE CARNEGIE PLANT.

President Frick Tells Secretary Tracy of His Plans.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 16.—Mr. H. C. Frick, chairman of the Carnegie Steel company, called at the navy department and had a conference with Secretary Tracy. The delay of the Carnegie company in furnishing armor plate for the new warships was discussed, but the most important part of the conversation related to the enlargement of the Carnegie plant.

Secretary Tracy has been anxious for the company to enlarge their plant for some time, and Mr. Frick informed the secretary that the company had decided to do this. The company, he said, would soon begin the desired improvements. They would enlarge their floor space, secure new machinery and otherwise improve their works, so as to be able to promptly fulfill their contracts. Mr. Frick said the company is now recovering from the recent strike.

The house adjourned until Jan. 3. Hon. John P. Healy said in the house that on May 3 he had introduced a resolution relating to a change in the constitution regarding the election of state officers. That resolution had been referred to the house committee on amendments to the constitution and the committee had not yet reported. He moved that the committee be discharged from the consideration of the resolution. S. O. Griswold, of Windsor, moved to table the motion. The yeas and nays were called for, and the motion to table was carried by 112 to 90, the Republicans voting in the affirmative and the Democrats in the negative.

The Brainerd Will Contest.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn., Nov. 16.—The case of Mrs. George P. Hart, of New York, who is trying to break the will of her father, the late Erastus Brainerd, of Portland, is before the superior court. The petition claims that the will presented was not the last will of Erastus Brainerd, that undue influence was used to have him make this one, and that said Brainerd was not in his right mind when it was made.

Old World Styles Revived.

Outdoor garments have undergone a complete change within the last few months. Coats are longer than they were, the sleeves are twice as large, most of the new models have enormous revers, and the long cloaks are being made with short waists. Authorities in fashion predict that it is in this sort of attire that fashionable women will be coming out presently, for in cloaks as well as dresses we seem to be copying the Old World styles. A new cloak is make of short velvet—favorite material for really handsome garments at present—trimmed with sable tails, and the bonnet to accompany it is of the same material, ornamented with waving plumes. It is impossible to tell how much bigger sleeves will grow. A favorite sleeve is divided into two equal parts. The upper half is enormously wide and full, and the lower as close fitting as a glove.

Lace and Other Accessories.

Recent importations make it appear that the combination of lace and fur will continue popular. French bonnets illustrate this combination—so do the muffs. Cloth and velvet toques are trimmed with sable or mink and guipure laces. Sables' tails, guipure lace and an aigrette of heron's feather's and brilliants are also shown, and a dark blue, with white lettering, is a novelty. Gray in softest dove tints has the address in silver.

At several of the recent New York weddings the English fashion of a number of bridesmaids in large "picture" hats was introduced, with pages to carry the bride's train.

The fashion of having diamonds set in platinum is becoming pronounced.

Single sleeve buttons are larger than ever. They are worn chiefly by men and women who affect masculine dress, and are in dead gold.

Green bids fair to be a favorite color in English cloth gowns, and short waists are a certainty in evening dresses.

It is difficult to get a good substitute for the black lace evening dress, but it is said that fancy grenadines, with line stripes or flower patterns, will probably find favor

THE HOUSEHOLD

BED FURNISHINGS.

The Artistic, Sensible and Fashionable Way in Which to Make Up a Bed.

There are nowadays elegant springs and hair mattresses piled high in place of the old feather beds, and as to stiff white bed covers, pillow slips and sheets, false sheets and plaid comforters (trimmings, monogrammed and ruffled fineries, there is a truce. They were so slippery, so troublesome and so fickle in what the beds that have known them shall know them no more forever. They had always to be unpinned and unhooked before the sleeper could enter his bed, and they were the torments of the housemaid. They entailed a degree of washing and ironing that was endless, and yet many a young housekeeper thought them indispensable. That idea has gone out completely.

The bed now is made up with its fresh linen sheets, its clean blankets and its Marseilles quilt, with square or long pillows, as the sleeper fancies, with bolster in plain linen sheath. Then over the whole is thrown a light lace cover lined with Liberty silk. This may be as expensive or as cheap as the owner wishes. Spreads of satin may be used, covered with Chinese embroidery or with patchwork designs. One light and easily aired drapery succeeds the four or five pieces of unmanageable linen. Of the bed it matters not, and the curtains of silk or chintz, the bed covering should match in tint, and in a very pretty bedroom the walls should be covered with chintz or silk, says The Decorator and Furnisher.

Kitchen Hints.

There are many minor conveniences that are within the reach of every housewife. Numbered with these is the side table depicted in the cut reproduced from Farm and Fireside. If the kitchen be small, one or two side tables, hinged to the wall, with hinged legs in front, which brace back against the baseboard when the table is in position, are a great convenience, as they can be folded and fastened with a hook up against the wall and out of the way when not in use.

A yard or two of table oilcloth for the kitchen table saves much scrubbing and labor at the time if nothing is cut on it and no hot dishes set on it. Plenty of holders are a necessity, if one would save their fingers and temper also. A wire put around the scrubpipe and the ends twisted into hooks makes a handy place to hang a holder and a stove lifter. Two or three horseshoe nails driven into the wood for the witches away exactly—but to lay on the top of the stove to set a preserve kettle on when the fire is low for it or to

White & Van Arsdale,

Under a pan in the oven. A dresser with plenty of drawers is almost a necessity and old bureau, if you happen to have one, can be utilized in this way.

Pineapple Sherbet.

One pint of freshly grated pineapple slightly sweetened, one pint of hot water, one pint of sugar, the juice of two lemons, one tablespoonful of gelatin. Soak the gelatin in just enough cold water to cover till soft, and dissolve with the hot water. Stir in sugar and lemon juice, and when cold, freeze. When half frozen, add the grated pineapple and continue the freezing. One must be careful to beat the mixture at once, or the gelatin will form in lumps and sink to the bottom of the can, thus impairing the smoothness and lightness of the sherbet.

Mending Table Linen.

A housewife whose table linen always does her good service mends it with flax embroidery cotton of a number to correspond with the texture of the cloth. Under the ragged edges of the tear she basts a piece of stiff paper and makes a network of fine stitches back and forth over its edges, carrying the stitches about an inch beyond the edges of the cut. This places and breaks in linen may be run with the flax or embroidery floss, and towels should be mended in the same way.

Candied Orange Chips.

Cut some oranges in half, squeeze the juice through a sieve, scrape the peel in water; next day boil it in the same until soft, drain it and slice the peels, put them to the juice, weigh an equal quantity of sugar and put all together into an earthen dish; place near the fire, stirring often until the chips candy. Set them in a cool place to dry for about three weeks.

Potato Olives.

Pear the potatoes and cut them into shape of olives; deep fat boiling salted water and cook until tender, but quite unbroken. Drain them carefully, then dip each one into beaten egg, and roll in a mixture composed of fine breadcrumbs, half the quantity of grated cheese, a little minced parsley, and salt and pepper. Fry in deep fat, drain and serve hot.

Lemon Dumplins.

Mix into a stiff paste one egg, one teacupful of sugar, half a teacupful of butter, three teaspoonfuls of milk, one of cream of tartar, half a teaspoonful of soda, the juice of two small lemons and the grated rind of one; when the dough is ready, roll it out rather thin, cut into shapes, bake in a quick oven, having previously sifted sugar over them, or not, as desired.

Professor Gray and the Spring Beauty.

One of the favorite flowers that greet the boys and girls in their spring rambles through the woods is the dainty little spring beauty, Claytonia virginica, and it may interest them to learn that it was this same delicate plant which early in life attracted the attention of the eminent Professor Asa Gray and turned his mind to the study of botany, in which he attained such prominence.

An English Storm Dress.

A rainy day dress skirt, new this autumn, is of cheviot, which comes within eight or ten inches of the ground, and is supplemented by a band of mackintosh of the same shade. This band buttons on invisibly and can be taken off and cleaned. It is the invention of an English tailor.

THE DRESS OF WOMEN

A PLEA THAT OUR SISTERS JOIN COMFORT TO BEAUTY.

Abolish the Corset and Many of the Garments Which Now Weigh Down Long-suffering Women—A Brooklyn Girl Offers Suggestions on This Subject.

Do serious faults exist in our present system of dress? Is correction of them necessary and desirable? Can we look lovely and feel comfortable at the same time? Let us consider these three vital questions.

Most women will confess to sudden and complete comfort when they remove their "things" at night and slip into a warm wrapper for a lounging time before getting into bed. Is there a woman in all the world who has not heaved a sigh of relief and filled the poor, starved bases of her lungs thereby, when an inordinately tight corset has been opened after half a day of compression? Surely every one has experienced a delightful sensation of lightness and a desire for active movement in the change from the innumerable trappings of ordinary attire to the bathing or gymnasium suit? Now is there not something radically wrong when our clothes are worst in the least burdensome or irksome, which to be relieved of them is to enjoy a mild pleasure?

I admit, and many other women admit, that our clothes are too tight and too heavy, and that their warmth is unequally and badly distributed.

The corset has deservedly received the brunt of all the censure and odium lavished by the medical profession on women as a class of herself. We are told that unless a corset is so loose that when removed not the slightest degree of relief is felt it is too tight to be healthful. If the average woman wore her corset so, it and her petticoats would slip down on her hips in an uncomfortable and untidy fashion.

We are quite familiar with our own natural figures; compare them with the dressmakers' models. There is nothing more ridiculous and yet pitiful than these amazing waists of the young ladies in fashion plates submitted to a reasonable female public for imitation.

It is a common thing for women to measure about the waist from one to four inches less in a corset than without it. The corset, even if it is not "pulled in," compresses the vital and most delicate organs of the body, causes deficient circulation and presses down, in a long sustained sitting position when the body is inclined forward, with the abominable steels, the soft abdominal cavity with injurious results. A doctor only could enumerate the effects of tight lacing.

The corset should go. A boned waist might be substituted in the case of stout people, but the lean, the young, the strong, the weak could be stripped of all compression and trained by exercise and healthy domestic labor to a new erectness of stature and muscular endurance and activity that might be bequeathed as a precious legacy to the coming generation.

Take a woman at the fall season of the year, when she is donning her winter flannels. She will then be carrying on her person, with the exception of shoes, stockings and outdoor garments, nine different articles of apparel. With two petticoats—a flannel and an outside one of silk or muslin—a dress skirt and two sets of drawers, a considerable weight is sustained by the abdomen and hips. About her waist will different layers of material, mostly double, will be bound. But she has weights without warmth. A woman's lower limbs are not properly protected from cold by this petticoat system. The heat of course collects under the heavy corset and numerous waist bands, and that part of the body may be bathed in perspiration when the extremities are numb with cold. One-half the women we see on the street the newspaper day in winter carry overshoes in addition to their customary household garb, a wrap or jacket reaching just to or below the hips.

The remedy for this insufficient and cumbersome clothing of our bodies is simple and direct. We can reduce the seven articles of underwear to two—or three at most.

First—A combination garment of wool, or wool with cotton back or silk or merino, reaching to the wrists and ankles, to be worn next the skin. This may be of lisle thread or silk or fine wool for summer wear, without sleeves and short to the knee.

Second—The underskirt and waist combined of muslin or silk. If a short jacket or wrap be worn outdoors, without other warm covering for the limbs than the dress skirt and stockings, this may be made of flannel and adjustable to the waist.

Third—Equestrienne tights or leggings to the thighs, to be worn only in winter when going out, and removed on return.

The only petticoat might be a divided skirt, but the divided skirt has proved itself to be a snare and a delusion. The equestrienne tights or leggings certainly do keep the limbs delightfully warm and snug, but one cannot remove them handily at the kitchen door to wash or wet stopping in for a friendly chat with a neighbor. They are well adapted for long tramps over country roads or open air winter sports. A long garment from top to toe is more practical and feminine for ordinary outdoor wear in any but the severest weather, and obviates the necessity of tights or the clumsy flannel petticoat.

The dress skirt is supported by a lining waist, cut low in the neck and deep on the shoulder. The sleeve, cut to conform to the natural lines of the figure, may be made by the use of good whalebone as free from wrinkles and as neat and jaunty as the most fashionable finish. A good stocking supporters depending from safety combination garment will remove the last drag from the hips and abdomen.

We have escaped putting rings in our ears and noses, and it is to be confidently hoped that other obnoxious practices that are rampant today may be with these comparatively trifling changes.

This improved dress for women distributes uniform warmth, lightens and removes about two-thirds of the clothing

STOLE A DIAMOND RING.

An Employee of the City Hotel Robs her Employer's Wife.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Chas. E. Beerbower, wife of the proprietor of the City Hotel, missed a valuable diamond ring. She immediately accused a colored girl in her employ named Minnie Morris. The servant denied the theft and ran from the room, in which they were, down into the laundry. Mrs. Beerbower followed her, but the girl made her escape from the hotel before she could be apprehended.

Captain Grant was notified of the theft and the police are now on the lookout for her.

The girl had only been employed at the hotel about three weeks, and it is said resides in Plainfield.

The ring was found later at Drier's pawn shop, where it had been pawned by a person answering the description of the Morris girl.

PERSONAL.

An evening sociable was held last evening at the Dobbie Homestead, on the Terrill road. Two stage loads of people from this city were present.

Principal Maxson of the Plainfield schools will make an address at the meeting of the Teachers Institute of Hunterdon and Somerset counties, to be held at Somerville, next week.

Messrs. J. Haberle, C. Smith, C. Taylor and F. Sandford returned yesterday from a hunting trip near Pohpack. They succeeded in bagging thirty-six rabbits, eight quails, and two squirrels.

Last evening a number of the members of the Seventh-Day Baptist church met at the residence of Mr. Chas. Potter, Jr., on Seventh street, and enjoyed a sociable evening. Music and recitations were included in the evening's programme.

The announcement elsewhere of the marriage of Mr. Harry A. Thorn of East Ninth street will be a pleasant surprise to his many friends here. He was married on Wednesday, Nov. 16, by the Rev. Charles Temple, to Miss Inez M. Weldon of Moore's Forkes, N. Y.

Mr. A. D. Thompson of this city has recently purchased the Fowler property, on Morris avenue, Elizabeth. Mr. Thompson is a man of exceptional energy and business shrewdness, and has shown himself, in many real estate ventures, to possess the foresight that usually distinguishes successful men.

Prof. Audsley of Brooklyn, who is soon to become a resident of Plainfield, says that the Scotch have a word for which there is no word in the English language of corresponding meaning. It is the word "Kal-ier." The a is pronounced as in calf. A kaller fish means a fish just from from the water. After it has been out of the water an hour it is no longer a kaller fish. The nearest English word is callow, so callow youth, one who is immature, "green," or, to use a more common slang phrase, "fresh"; but there is no way to designate in one word that the youth is just out of the fields" by the Scotch word "kaller," according to Prof. Audsley.

Teachers' Institute for Union County.

The annual institutes for the teachers of the State as provided by the school law are now being held in the various counties. That for Union county will be held in the assembly room of Public School No. 4, Cherry street, Elizabeth, commencing on Friday next, the 18th. On that day there will be two sessions and an evening lecture. On Saturday there will be a morning session only.

Among the subjects to be treated are English literature, penmanship, bookkeeping, reading, drawing, moral training and zoology. The speakers are Miss McAvoy, of Newark; Prof. Farley, of Trenton, the State Superintendent; Dr. L. R. Thompson, of Jersey City; Miss Williams and Miss Morgan, of the Trenton Normal School; Mr. Clark of Newark; Prof. Cook, of Trenton, and Prof. D. T. Ames, of this city.

Borrowed His Wagon.

When Mr. Peter Wooden went to his barn this morning he discovered that his fine carriage was gone. He says he supposes somebody borrowed it during the night. He does not think it has been stolen. Mr. Wooden expects it will be returned to-night.

Awarded $87.50 Damages.

Mr. William A. Woodruff of this city was awarded $87.50 for damages done to his horse and wagon by reason of falling through a bridge on Hamilton avenue, North Plainfield, by the Somerset County Board of Freeholders, recently.

RECOGNITION SERVICES.

At the Park Avenue Baptist Church To-Night.

Recognition services are to be held to-night at the Park Avenue Baptist Church, when the Rev. Mr. Richardson will be made pastor of the church. Dr. Yerkes will be moderator. The charge to the pastor will be by the Rev. Dr. Luther of Newark, and the charge to the congregation will be by the Rev. Joseph Sagebeer of Flemington. The Rev. Dr. Lowrie will extend to the new pastor the hand of fellowship, and the ministerial welcome will be given by the Rev. Dr. Richards.

How Hottentots Sing their Babes to Sleep.

We are accustomed to regard the Hottentot as among the lowest of South African savages. But it is difficult to associate savagery with mothers who sing to their babes as these Hottentot mothers are said to sing to theirs. Mme. Fanny Raymond Ritter has given a translation of the words of one of the Hottentot lullabies, and this we give below. It is one of the many charming lullaby songs which had to be omitted from the programme of the entertainment to be given at the Casino this evening, because all could not be given in one night. Here it is:

HOTTENTOT CRADLE SONG.

Why dost thou weep, my child?
Wherefore dost thou weep?
Hush, sleep, calm thee,
And sleep, my child, and sleep.
The sky is bright, the sun is shining,
All the silver rivers sing;
Amid the trees the flowers are twining,
Gay green lizards are on the wing.
Hush, sleep and rest—
On mother's breast;
Sleep and rest,
Sleep and rest.
Thy father to his heart will press thee,
Bring thee shells from yonder shore;
Oh, let him kiss, let him caress thee,
Laugh and dance, and grieve no more.
Hush, sleep and rest
On mother's breast;
Sleep and rest,
Sleep and rest.

Miss Lena Bass, Miss Mary E. Brown, Miss Bessie Cornwell, Miss Amy Greene, Miss Augusta Holmes, Miss Clara Helwig, Miss Jessamy Harte, Miss Lelia Howard, Miss Florence Huntington, Miss May Kirkner, Miss Lulu Lewis, Miss Gussie Murray, Miss Minnie Murray, Miss Emma Miller, Miss Eleanor T. Morrison, Miss Minnie Morse, Mrs. Esther K. Miller, Mrs. Charles Munn, Miss Constance Patton, Miss Wilhelmina Patton, Miss Bessie Pound, Miss M. Robinson, Miss Clara Shepherd, Miss May Tracy.

"Paris, the Magnificent."

A large, select and appreciative audience was present at Music Hall last evening to "enjoy the delights of travel without the discomforts." Mr. H. H. Ragan, who is well-known and very popular in this city, delivered the first of his series of illustrated lectures. It was entitled, "Paris, the Magnificent," and was composed of photographic gems of the beauties of that wonderful city, many of the views being beautifully colored.

Prof. Ragan's lecture showed a very noticeable lack of dryness, and was told in such an entertaining manner that the audience was sorry when it had ended.

Prof. Ragan's second lecture, which is entirely new one, will be given next Monday evening. It is entitled, "Shakespeare and The Avon."

Fair for the Benefit of the German Church.

The fair, under the auspices of the Ladies Aid Society of the German Reformed church on Craig place, opened Tuesday evening in Thorn's block. On account of the stormy weather very few people attended, but last night there was a large attendance, and everybody seemed to enjoy themselves.

The committee in charge of the fair are Mrs. Schiersch, president; Mrs. Utzinger, vice-president and secretary; Miss Kettenring, treasurer; Mrs. Kister, Mrs. Mehring, Mrs. Williams and Mrs. Schaffer.

The fair will be continued this week.

Warmest November Day in Fifteen Years.

Meteorologically considered yesterday was remarkable for two reasons, its excessive moisture and its heat. No November day in the record of the Weather Bureau has been damp, and none since 1877 has been as warm. In the twenty-four hours ending at noon 3.65 inches of rain fell. The southerly storm brought with it some of the atmosphere of the South, and the temperature fluctuated between 57 degrees and 60 degrees. To-day has been a very warm and beautiful day.

The New Pastor to be Installed.

The Rev. Chas. E. Herring will be installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian church next Tuesday. The Presbytery of Elizabeth will meet at the church at four o'clock in the afternoon to receive Mr. Herring from the New York Presbytery. The congregational services will be held at eight o'clock p. m.

WALTON CONVICTED YESTERDAY.

He Burned Alfred & Campbell's Factory in Elizabeth.

John H. Walton, former foreman of the cigarette picture factory of Alfred & Campbell in Elizabeth, which was destroyed by fire two months ago, was convicted yesterday in the Union County Court of burning the factory in order to conceal the theft of silver worth $3,000, which was stolen by Walton and a confederate named Fergus out of the delivering room. The Union County Grand Jury indicted both men for arson and grand larceny. Fergus plead guilty and turned State's evidence, and was the chief witness yesterday against Walton. The evidence was conclusive, and the jury promptly found Walton guilty of burning the factory. Then, to the surprise of all in the court room, Walton retracted his plea of not guilty to grand larceny and pleaded guilty. He was remanded until Saturday for sentence. His companion in crime will escape with a light punishment on account of the service he has been to the State.

BREVITIES

—An entertainment is to be held in the Bicycle Club house on Saturday evening.

—Mr. George A. Ditts of Somerset county was sworn in as sheriff yesterday at Somerville.

—The next of the Ragan lectures will be Monday evening. Subject: "Shakespeare and the Avon."

—In 1846 we produced 1,800,000 tons of coal; in 1860 the quantity mined was 15,000,000 tons, in 1888 it was 142,000,000 tons.

—The Boards of Registry of this city will meet at the polling places on Tuesday, Nov. 29, from one to nine p. m. to revise the registry list.

—Among every 1,000 bachelors there are thirty-eight criminals; among married men the ratio is only eighteen per 1,000. Young men, take heed

—The increase in the world's production of cotton since 1840 has been 2,223,000,000 pounds, three-fourths of which was contributed by the United States.

—The second meeting of the week of prayer for young men will be held at the Y. M. C. A. rooms, this evening at eight o'clock. All men are invited to be present.

—An automatic match igniter is a recent novelty. You pull a lever, a match travels along a roughened surface and is then thrust out of an opening already ignited.

—The Plainfield Electric Light Company wants to give some attention to its plant. The lights have a very troublesome way lately of growing very dim at frequent intervals as if something was wrong. This occurs so often as to be annoying.

—The City Council of Elizabeth has appointed a special committee of five to examine the plans of the track elevation of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Elizabeth. This is an answer to a protest from residents and property-owners on Morris avenue.

—There are 935 religious papers in the United States, whose combined circulation is about one-eighth of all the newspapers published in the country. The Methodists publish 147 papers; the Roman Catholics 127, Baptists 136, Presbyterians 83, Protestant Episcopal 47.

—Frank W. Sanger and Gus Bothner have, from all accounts, struck an entirely new and original vein in a piece called "The Voodoo, or, a Lucky Charm," in which that inimitable comedian, Thos. E. Murray, is the bright light. This amusing skit has been praised in the highest manner wherever presented, and is booked for Music Hall, Plainfield, Nov. 23d. The supporting company is said to be a remarkably clever one and includes many great favorites of a high order of merit.

—The enterprising people of Plainfield are taking a lively interest in favor of exultation over the prospect of another railroad. They have recently added electric cars to the other progressive institutions of the city, and now it is rumored that the Cherry Valley Railway Company has decided to run a branch road from Newark through the Oranges, thence through Millburn, Springfield and Scotch Plains, and ending for the time being as Plainfield. This ought certainly to be of great advantage to Plainfield, and it is not marvelous that the people are more or less excited over the project.—Elizabeth Journal.

—Those people in New Jersey who are interested in the study of nature in its geographical and geological aspects are to be congratulated upon the helpfulness and facilities afforded them by the annual reports of the State Geologist. For some time Prof. R. D. Salisbury has been studying the glacial drift of Northern New Jersey, and the latest report contains a very interesting paper from his pen, in which he discusses in the clearest manner the origin, formation, and characteristics of the drift, and the application of the many facts he mentions to the work of the great ice sheet in New Jersey. Such papers as this cannot fail to stimulate interest in scientific study, and are invaluable aids to students on the ground. Prof. Salisbury's researches confirm the earlier reports that glacial drift extends from and dance South of the terminal moraine as it is marked on our maps. In the southeast portion of Plainfield there is one of the finest examples of terminal moraine to be found in this country, according to the report of the Geological survey of a few years ago.

FOURTH TRIENNIAL CONVENTION.

Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut of this City in Attendance.

Two hundred delegates were present yesterday at the fourth triennial convention of the New Jersey Sunday-School Association in the Roseville Methodist Episcopal church, Newark. It was also the thirty-fourth anniversary of the association. Rev. A. P. Richardson, of Camden, opened the proceedings with prayer and singing, and then the Rev. J. M. Meeker delivered the address of welcome, and Carlton M. Williams, president of the association, responded.

Rev. Dr. J. L. Hurlbut, of this city, spoke on "The Gains of the Sunday-School Teacher." He said: "I believe in putting women in charge of boys classes and men in charge of the girls. The men and women have a monotonous routine of work through the week, and the teaching of Sunday-school is often a great relief. There is no department of the church that reaps such a harvest as to small an outlay of money."

At the afternoon session the Rev. Dr. Hurlbut spoke on the early Christian church. Israel P. Black, of Philadelphia, delivered an address relating to the primary classes and how they could be improved. The remainder of the afternoon was taken up with conference meetings. Service in the evening began with singing and several interesting discourses were delivered. To-day the reports will be presented and discussed.

ANOTHER QUACK DOCTOR.

He Causes a Girl's Death and is in Serious Trouble.

A colored herb doctor who has been practicing on the same line as the colored individual who was in this city several months ago, and was known as "Dr." Williams, has caused the death of a girl at North Branch.

"Dr." Williams had no license to practise and lacked even the knowledge of the rudimentary principles of the profession. He "doctored" a little girl here, who died while he was attending her. "Dr." Williams stopped practicing and left for parts unknown.

Concerning the practicing of the quack doctor at Somerville, the New Brunswick Home News has the following to say:

"Jacob Van Nest, a colored herb doctor, was yesterday convicted in Somerset county court of an unprofessional operation which caused the death of Josephine Haver, of North Branch.

"The evidence showed that the defendant sent for a certain drug, which was procured at Raritan and delivered to Miss Haver by Simon Cole, who is alleged to have caused her ruin. Cole, who is a well-to-do farmer, was regarded as the young woman's lover. He was tried last month on a similar charge and was acquitted.

"The State presented almost the same evidence against Van Nest, which resulted in his conviction. It was shown that Van Nest had been practicing medicine for some time without a license, and had used drugs for illicit purposes."

Amusing Election Bets.

Many election bets have been paid in this city, but none of them equalled the following, taken from exchanges: Yesterday evening M. Wolfard of Yonkers was seen rolling a peanut down South Broadway to Main street. Mr. Wolfard weighs over 200 pounds, and before election agreed with Henry Bower that if Cleveland was elected the loser was to roll a peanut the full length of Broadway. Mr. Wolfard kept his word and was followed by a large crowd. It took him nearly an hour to perform the task, and when he had finished he was hardly able to stand erect on account of the attitude he was in during the rolling of the peanut.

Harry Adams of White Plains was notified by his landlady that he could have board free for a year. Mr. Adams won his election bet and his landlady lost hers.

Buying More Rolling Stock.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has contracted with the Baldwin Locomotive Works for 61 first-class locomotives. In addition, they have issued orders for the construction of 2,000 box cars, which will have a carrying capacity of 35 tons, and 500 gondolas. The most welcome order is that of General Manager Odell directing the employment of 2,000 additional workmen at the company's shops in this city, at Pittsburg, at Grafton and at Newark, Ohio.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Wheat.

In 1869 the Suez canal was opened. That made the shipping of wheat easy from India to Great Britain. About the same time railroads began to be built with extraordinary rapidity in both India and the northwestern part of the United States. Both regions thus being opened up began to produce wheat for export in large quantities. It was not till 1880, however, that the export from India began seriously to threaten the United States trade with England in wheat.

The enormous production still goes on. Great Britain preferably takes her supply of wheat from her own colonies. There are besides thousands of English, Irish and Scotch farmers in the Argentine Republic who send their crops to the mother country. Before the Russian famine our export of wheat to England had fallen off over 50 per cent. This much is certain—the United States cannot any longer depend on Great Britain to take from her the former quantities of wheat; Our own population will in time grow up to the point of consuming all our wheat at home, but it will not be next week, nor in five years.

Meantime a dispatch says, "There is not an elevator in all the west that is not crammed to bursting with wheat. The storehouses at all the lake ports are in the same condition. In one day not long since there were as Chicago 1000 cars loaded with grain. Never before in the history of the country has there been so vast a store of wheat within its borders. It is really worth considering whether it will not be well for farmers to let up on the raising of wheat for a year or two and try something else. The southern farmers raised too much cotton last year.

The Universal Sense.

Evolutionists believe that the five senses were developed one after another, first of course that of touch, and that the nerves controlling them were specialized in the course of the ages necessary for such accomplishment. In truth, the whole five senses are specialized variations of the original general sense that of touch. A ray of light from an object touches the specialized nerve of sight the impression is conveyed by the specialized nerve to the brain; thus we see. A sound vibration touches the specialized nerve of the ear; we hear.

The psychological evolutionist concludes that these special senses have been developed originally from the original sense of touch, and still have related intimately in the brain. That having come from one sense, they may in time be so developed as to reach on and touch one another again. In brief it may be that color will also impress the nerves of hearing, that sounds will also impress the nerves of sight, and so on. Late experiments show this to be true to a certain extent. It is not uncommon for a sudden sound to produce a flash of colored light as well as pain. On the other hand, the sight of red or yellow makes persons whom Dr. Gruber has experimented with hear certain notes of the musical scale. A member of the English parliament writes that when he is fatigued mentally he catches at times a distinct violet odor, with no known source. Hence it can come. Will the five senses in time perhaps develop into a sixth or universal sense?

In places where kerosene is cheaper than coal it has been used to a considerable extent as fuel on locomotive engines. It is more extensively used in the Argentine Republic than elsewhere. On the Oroya railway, of Peru, a mixture of coal and oil steam is used in fuel box, which is built of firebrick. The oil is sprayed into the firebox by means of a steam jet. The spray is consumed at a white heat in the firebox. It has been found that these brick furnaces do not burn and crumble away so rapidly as might be expected in the fierce heat produced. The retort in which the oil was consumed was used in one case six months on one locomotive of the Oroya railway, and at the end of that time showed no signs of burning out. On one of the engines upon the little railway that leads up Pike's peak oil is used instead of coal as fuel.

Professor Frederick Starr, of the anthropological department of the Columbian exposition, has been making anthropometric measurements of the eastern Cherokee Indians in North Carolina. He finds there is an undoubted mixture of two races among them—one in color light yellowish brown; the other very dark. The features of the two are different. It is probably owing to the admixture of negro blood among the eastern Cherokees. Professor Starr found, however, a fact still more curious. The little children all had decidedly the oblique or Chinese eye—almond shaped, as it is called. But as they grew older this disappeared, and they had the round, open eye of western nations.

American patriots must welcome every step in advance made toward the construction of the Nicaragua canal. They will therefore do all they can by good words and good wishes to further the success of the convention which will meet in New Orleans Nov. 30 to work for the immediate construction of the Nicaragua canal under the protection and control of the United States.

THE POLITICAL WORLD.

Mr. Weaver Pleased with the People's Party's Work.

VIEWS OF PRESIDENT HARRISON

He Utters No Vain Regrets, but Advises His Party to Organize for Future Contests—Cleveland Would Not Commit Himself on the Extra Session Question.

DES MOINES, Nov. 17.—General Weaver has issued an address in which he congratulates his followers on the splendid showing made by the third party, and sounds a note of warning as to what alleged vicious legislation may be expected from the party in the ascendency. He says:

"Untold millions of money, our grand young party has made an enviable record and achieved surprising success at the polls. We are left in behind the Republican party in the number of states carried. As a result of the late election we will doubtless have the balance of power in the senate of the United States, have doubled the number of our adherents in the house of representatives, secured control of a number of state governments, hold the balance of power in a majority of states in the Union, and have succeeded in exchanging a spirit of political independence among the people of the northwest which cannot be disregarded in the future.

Democratic Leaders Scored.

"We have awakened fraternal feelings in all sections, and as an earnest of our good will toward the south the grand people of Kansas—a state containing more Union soldiers than any other elected a vote armed ex-Confederate soldier of the People's party to represent the state at large in congress. The country is to be congratulated upon the fact that the leaders of one of the heretofore great parties have been abandoned and overthrown by the people, and their organization well nigh annihilated.

"This leaves the foremost minds of that party free to align themselves with the great anti-monopoly and industrial movement. The old pension of the two party to power is the result of violent reaction, and not, I am sure, of the deliberate judgment of the American people. The battle leaders of the triumphant party are without any well defined policy except that of contemptuous disregard for every element of reform within the ranks of their own party and among the people at large.

"The new administration will ignore the three great contentions of modern times relating to land, money and transportation, and will not attempt to solve either. In fact, the bold force of the new regime will be exercised to prevent reform in these important matters. The urgent demand of the people for the coinage of silver is to be disdainfully ignored, and new obstacles will doubtless be interposed to further restrict the use of the white metal. In contempt of the doctrine of Andrew Jackson, European aristocrats are to be permitted to dictate our financial policy.

Mr. Weaver denounces the state bank system approved by the Democrats. He says his party has made its advent too soon, but urges that the work of organization and education be pushed with energy throughout all the states.

Extra Session Talk.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Representative W. L. Wilson, of West Virginia, chairman of the Democratic national committee, strongly favors the calling of a special session of congress to consider tariff legislation. "The true worth and value of a tariff bill," he said, "cannot be tested in a short time. I think it would be most impolitic to place a new tariff bill before the country just previous to the elections of 1894. For this reason I favor the extra session idea."

Senator Carlisle, who is known as one of Mr. Cleveland's close political associates, says he does not believe Mr. Cleveland can tell whether or not he will call an extra session. He thought the tariff alone would not furnish sufficient reason for such a session, but the financial affairs of the government might be in such shape as to make an extra session imperative. "We shall have to see what congress does at this session," he said, "If it does not repeal the Sherman law relating to the purchase of silver and the present officer acts as the situation demands we may be swamped."

Cleveland and the Extra Session.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Before Mr. Cleveland went to the dinner of the Chamber of Commerce on Tuesday evening he was asked to say in his speech that he had no thought of calling an extraordinary session of congress after his inauguration. Mr. Cleveland finally announced that he would not commit himself publicly in any way concerning the subject. While personally he has at the present time not the slightest notion of calling an extraordinary session, he told his friends he might if he wish, one week after his election, to commit himself irrevocably to such a programme.

He was ready to admit that the future might create such an emergency that an extraordinary session would be advisable, and he emphasized the word "might" especially.

Democrats Plan for the Inauguration.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The first definite movement looking to the organization of the citizens' inaugural committee, to arrange for the ceremonies incident to the inauguration of President-elect Cleveland, was taken at a meeting of the Democrats of Washington. James L. Norris, the district member of the national Democratic committee, announced that after a conference with Senator Gorman it was decided to recommend that the plan of eight years ago be followed on this occasion. It was to designate a general committee of fifty citizens and a smaller committee of fifteen citizens, known as the executive or working committee. At the head of the list of the general committee is the name of Colonel J. G. Berrett as chairman, who acted in the same capacity in 1884.

What the President Says.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—Officials and others who have talked with President Harrison since the election say that the president's utterances have tended to encourage them to activity in the work of organizing and strengthening the party. He wastes no time in vain regrets, but is earnest in the feeling that more than ever there is need for co-operation and unity of purpose in the party.

Arrests at New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The grand jury concluded their investigation into the charges of fraud made by General C. H. T. Collis against the inspectors of election at the polling place at 68 Oliver street. Woman Suffragists Choose Officers.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 17.—The woman suffragists closed their twenty-fourth annual convention in this city yesterday. Hon. Elizabeth B. Antony said that forty years ago she was almost hissed from a platform in this city. Now a woman could speak almost anywhere in the country. These officers were elected: President, Jean Brooks Greenleaf, of New York; vice president, Martha H. Henderson, of Rochester; recording secretary, Harriet E. Mills, of Rochester; corresponding secretary, Mary S. Anthony, of Rochester; treasurer, Henrietta Banker, of New York.

John L. Very Drunk Again.

YORK, Pa., Nov. 17.—John L. Sullivan was very drunk while here. He assaulted Detective Sergeant Wallack because Wallack would not give up his seat in a cab. The detective was roughly handled, and would have shown fight but for interference by citizens. There is a warrant out for Sullivan's arrest on the charge of assault and battery and for tearing his coat, but Sullivan's manager settled the case before the warrant could be served.

Canada May Get Newfoundland.

HALIFAX, N. S., Nov. 17.—The conference between members of the Canadian and Newfoundland governments agreed upon a united line of action to be pursued in regard to counteracting the modus vivendi and the supply of bait to United States vessels. A basis of terms of union was agreed upon, which the Newfoundland delegates will submit to their government.

The Proposed New York Bridge.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.—The board of army engineer officers have reported to Secretary Elkins that they see no objection to the erection of the two bridges over the East River from New York to Brooklyn. They recommends that they be not less than 135 feet high in the center and not less than 120 feet high at the piers.

A Line and Staff Row.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—Developments in the naval court martial trying Assistant Engineer George W. Danforth, of the United States steamer Philadelphia, for alleged disobedience of orders, justify the impression which has got abroad that this is a "line and staff row" of no mean proportions.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—The Catholic club, under the auspices of Archbishop Corrigan, gave a reception to Mgr. Archbishops at Work.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17.—At the annual conference of the archbishops of the Roman Catholic church of the United States there were present eleven of the thirteen archbishops, the absentees being Archbishops Kendrick, of St. Louis, and Salpointe, of Santa Fe, N. M., the former being represented by his vicar general, the Very Rev. Philip C. Fahy, and the latter by his coadjutor, the Right Rev. P. L. Chappelle. Archbishop Satolli, from Rome, was also present. Cardinal Gibbons, archbishop of Baltimore, by virtue of his rank, officiates as presiding officer. Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, acts as the secretary of the council.

Archbishop Satolli was introduced as a pontifical representative from the holy see, who had some instructions to communicate from his holiness, the pope. He delivered an address in Latin embodying these instructions from the pope, of which he was the bearer. The tenor of his remarks demonstrated the fact that he was simply the bearer of a letter of counsel from the pope to the American archbishops-conate, and that he was not clothed with extraordinary and plenary powers.

Having finished this address Archbishop Satolli took his seat, and general discussion on the United States before the conference was begun. This consisted of a debate as to the best methods to be pursued in obtaining a complete uniformity in the matter of diocesan regulations and discipline.

The sessions of the conference are secret, but in addition to the foregoing facts it may be stated that the school question was not touched upon, and in all probability will not be the subject of any debate during the continuance of the council.

DARING ROBBERY OF A BANK.

The President and Cashier Held Up and Five Thousand Dollars Stolen.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 17.—President Perry and Cashier Craig, of the First National bank of Woodstock, went to the bank after supper. The bank is situated in the most likely populated part of the town, being owned largely by residents of people. The citizens were all up, and passersby could give no difficulty in seeing what was going on.

Perry and Craig were looking over some books, and had been there about half an hour when they heard the door open. They were surprised, as they had locked it. Two men, fairly well dressed, came in. The bank officials imagined at first that they must have left the door open by mistake, as the fellows sauntered toward the cash desk with perfect equanimity. But no sooner had they got there than both drew revolvers and demanded the money in the vault.

Perry and Craig were too surprised to obey at once, and one of the men reached through the window and hit Craig over the head. The vault was then opened, and $5,000 in gold and bills to the amount of about $5,000 was secured. The robbers then made both Perry and Craig get into the vault and closed the door. They then disappeared, and no trace of them has yet been discovered. The robbers forgot to turn the combination, and Perry and Craig soon managed to get out and gave the alarm. A posse is now searching for the thieves.

Tennessee's Gubernatorial Predicament.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 17.—It looks as if, after a hard fight to defeat him, Governor Buchanan will be governor for two more years. Governor-elect Peter Turner is now dangerously ill. The constitution says the governor shall keep his seat until another has been inaugurated, or if the latter dies he shall appoint his successor. Turner has not been inaugurated, and therefore if he dies Buchanan will remain in the governor's chair another term.

ALLIANCE MEN QUARREL.

President Loucks Gives Southern Members a Scoring.

THEY VOTED WITH THE DEMOCRATS.

Loucks Thinks They Should Have Backed the People's Party—The Fight for the Alliance Presidency—Master Workman Powderly's Annual Report.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 17.—The executive sessions of the national Farmers' Alliance were not harmonious. President Loucks' annual address was essentially a third party political document, and the southern members were rebuked for voting the Democratic ticket. In this state, the Carolinas and Alabama, if the Alliance men had all voted the Populist ticket, the Democracy might have been overthrown, but the members in these and other states hold that the Alliance is not a political organization, and they voted against the force bill. The southern members are Macune supporters, and President Loucks' address made the factional fight still hotter between Loucks and Macune.

Tillman Turns the Tables.

In the president's address was a reference to a complaint against J. F. Tillman, of Tennessee, general director of the educational bureau. This was suppressed, but when Tillman's report was called for the president acknowledged that his address made reference to this complaint and he began to read it. Tillman made a vigorous defense. He had sent out a circular during the campaign embodying an extract from the Ocala platform denouncing the Ledge elections bill. This he admitted was Democratic doctrine. He turned the tables on Loucks and his following, however, by accusing them of repudiating the Ocala platform by failing to urge this particular section.

Powderly's Annual Address.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 17.—General Master Workman Powderly, in his annual address to the Knights of Labor convention, favored the exclusion of foreigners of a certain class for a period of ten years. He said, "I foresee great danger to the whole country if the immigration question is not carefully and heroically met in the future." The general secretary and treasurer's report was next submitted. His statement showed that, including the balance on hand July, 1891, the total receipts have been $60,614.19 and the total expenditures $50,743.81, leaving a balance on hand July 1, 1892, of $865.37. FRILLS OF FASHION.

Brilliant red, with black trimming, is popular.

Changeable silk umbrellas are shown for autumn use.

New plaited waists and blouses are elaborately finished with feather stitching.

Glace silks, in two or more colors, are made up with wool goods into combination suits.

Handsome silks are brocaded with tiny rose buds, and look very quaint and old fashioned.

Early autumn millinery shows some very stylish sailor hats with gray and bright colored quills and wings.

We are promised cape fichus with very long plaited points, some of them falling some distance below the waist line.

Among the semi-decorative garments for autumn wear are net lace jackets, to be worn over waists of silk or fine wool goods.

The latest form of Russian blouse is made of very elegant brocaded silk. This is worn with dark skirts of either silk or wool material.

Sealskin Plaits and Ruffs.

Fur this winter is to be treated exactly as though it were cloth. Every effort is and will be made to render the fait pliable, that it may be worked up in designs never before dreamed of in fur. The shirring, plaiting and ruffling of furs is especially adapted to the present style of dress. Women like it, too. Sealskin is the chief reliance in the execution of the new ideas. Though other furs are being brought as nearly as possible to the sealskin's perfection of pliability none are liable to rival it successfully.

Latest in Hat Pins.

A hat pin has appeared upon the scene that is destined to bring joy to every feminine heart.

The beautifully straight pin is now curled in a spiral that gyrates through the wearer's hair and challenges the wind or any other element to eject it. Imported pearls are largely used for head these pins, and the defects of the former are cleverly concealed under gold and jeweled serpents.

New Belts.

The latest novelty to belt in the silk blouse or the fancy flannel gown is a bodice-pattern belt of soft, firm macrame cord in almost any of the many patterns we learned in the days of the hammock rage. The ends are on one of the narrow side strips and tie with cord and tassel.

One of the best skin tonics is pure alcohol. After washing bathe the face with it and dry with a towel. It clears the face of impurities and leaves it as smooth and cool as a rose-leaf.

A Sad End.

"Good gracious! No wonder my tail pained me so. Just see how long it has grown in the last five minutes."—Life.

Chipper Chestnuts.

Susie (at her music lesson)—I'd like to catch a wild air I heard in the music room last night, Professor.—What air was that, Susie (demurely)—Oh, it was a millionaire.—Tit-Bits.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

Master Pin and Lady Needle.

A pin and a needle, being neighbors in a work basket, and both being idle folk, began to quarrel, as idle folk are apt to do.

"I should like to know," said the pin, "what you are good for, and how you expect to get through the world without a head?"

"What is the use of your head," replied the needle rather sharply, "if you have no eye?"

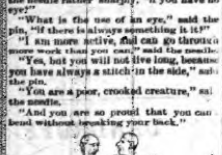
"What is the use of an eye," said the pin, "if there is always something in it?"

"I am more active, and can go through more work than you can," said the needle.

"Yes, but you will not live long, because you have always a stitch in the side," said the pin.

"You are a poor, crooked creature," said the needle.

"And you are so proud that you can bend without breaking your back."



"I'll pull your head off if you insult me again."

"I'll pull your eye out if you touch me; remember your life hangs on a single thread," said the pin.

While they thus conversing a little girl entered, and undertaking to sew, she very soon broke off the needle at the eye. She then tied the thread around the neck of the pin, and attempted to sew with it, but pulled its head off and threw it into the dirt by the side of the broken needle.

"Well, here we are," said the needle.

"We have nothing to fight about now," said the pin. "It seems misfortune has brought us to our senses."

"A pity we had not come to them sooner," said the needle. "How much we resemble human beings who quarrel about their blessings till they lose them, and never find out they are brothers till they lie down in the dust together, as we do."—New York World.

Fooling the People at Home.

A young lady recently misled a family in a most heartless way. She remarked, "I had a letter today, and how do you imagine the little pet said in it? was used?"

"Tee," suggested mamma.

"Twe," suggested papa.

"Tew," "ten," "tu," ventured various voices.

Lilly, who was much engaged with her French lessons just then, suggested "teut," and Tom, in derision, improved upon that with "tueue," declaring that must be right in order to rhyme with "queue."

"All wrong," exclaimed the young lady, when the others and their ingenuity were well exhausted.

Just then Teddy, who had been soberly absorbed in his bread and honey, and who was in his first term at school and well filling with the problem of words in two letters, raised his head, and with an air of delusion and importance gravely spelled, "T-o, to."

"Yes," cried the young lady, with a pea of laughter.

"Why," exclaimed the others in dismayed chorus, "that is the right way to spell it!"

"Exactly," she replied; "and that is the way my correspondents spelled it. You do not suppose I corresponded with persons who cannot even spell 'of' correctly, do you?"—Harper's Young People.

A Boy's Philosophy.

"If you tell the truth about something," says Johnny, "you get licked, and if you tell a lie you don't, unless you get found out, and then you get licked twice.

"I know," he adds, "who always tells the truth. His mother is in Europe and his father is out west."

The same youthful philosopher delivers himself upon another point after this fashion:

"Some boys is brave 'cause they always play with little boys, and some boys is brave 'cause their legs is too short to run away, but most boys is brave 'cause somebody's lookin."—New York Herald.

Squirrels Playing Tag.

While in Central park the other day I was much amused in watching two squirrels which were plainly imparting the game familiar to children as "tequat tag." One squirrel started off over the grass, closely followed by the other, until the first "treed" upon the branches of "berkies," as the young people say. Then the parts were exchanged, the second squirrel now being "it." By and by, with a whisk of the tail they were off for the nearest tree, where they amused themselves by playing "hide and seek."—Youths' Companion.

Dolly's Mishap.

The doctor came, and he said 'twas plain
That Dolly's trouble was chronic;
And he thought a ride on a railroad train
Would suit her best for a tonic.
So I wrapped her up with the prettiest care
And put on her Sunday bonnet;
And the engine, that was the rocking chair,
With Engineer Harry upon it.

I gave my Dolly all she would need,
And propped her up with a pillow;
She was flying along like lightning speed
In her palace car of willow.
But all at once she fell on the track—
Oh, 'twas a dreadful mishap!
The engine rocker went over her back,
And Pa 'fraid she'd get all mangled.
—Eudora S. Bumstead in St. Nicholas.

Little German Boys and Girls.

Little German lags, and girls, too, for that matter, are taught to work out in the fields almost as soon as they can walk. A German baby of four years can weed his mother's garden without ever pulling up a flower, while boys of ten or twelve are experienced farmers. The laws of Germany compel children to go to school ten months in the year until they have reached the age of sixteen. But during holidays and vacations they must work out of doors. And they enjoy it too.—New York Recorder.

GOOD AMERICAN FOOD.

You can talk about your gamey birds
And fancy rolled grouse,
A food that's good enough for me
Is pickled homemade sauce.
No "gory" pudding, "aged" kraut
And other stuff like that,
But sausages and bucks best cakes
And dandy nuts tried in fat.

You may talk about your canvasback,
Your woodcock and your snipe—
I'll take some chicken fricasee
And oysters stewed with tripe.
No terrapins, with diamond back,
Which cost their weight in cash—
Give me some breaded "feet of pig"
And honest corn beef hash.

Don't talk to me of "charlotte russe,"
"Meringues" and soft "eclairs,"
And other curious French dishes
Put down on bill of fare.
Give me some pie—thick "punkin" pie,
Some custard, plum or mince—
Some nice boiled cider apple sass,
Well "flavored up" with quince.

Don't talk to me about the food
You get when you're "abroad;"
It's all a perfect humbug
And a continental fraud.
Whether English, French or Spanish
(They all think best the Dutch),
Or German, Swiss or Russian
I don't want any such.
No Chinese "bird's nest stuff" for me
No stale Italian;
Give me homemade United States,
Good plain American.
—Albany Evening Journal.

Tea Table Screens.

One of the most embarrassing positions in which a woman can be placed at the tea table is when she is pouring the tea and coffee. Those minutes for the meal are usually given to the guest at a time when there is a lull either in the eating or conversation, and naturally the attention of the company is attracted to the hostess, more especially so if she be a pretty and graceful woman. The English long ago recognized this fact, and made a very pretty provision for it. It consists of a neat woven wire or metal frame work about eighteen or twenty inches high, which is placed on the outside of the tea tray, leaving it on either side, thus partially hiding from view the fair one who is doing the honors.

Generally speaking, the frame is ornamented with pretty little draperies of light, flowered silk or some other flimsy material, and thus she is shut off from the curious gaze of the guests and can pursue the even tenor of her pouring without experiencing the slightest degree of nervousness. These screens are not, to our knowledge, very well known in this country, but once their utility is recognized would doubtless become very popular. They could be trimmed with bows of ribbon or draped with lace or delicately painted designs on silk or satin. Suggestive and appropriate mottoes could also be woven in the center or in any other manner that might suggest itself to the maker. This would greatly enhance their beauty and make a very ornamental addition to the furnishings of the table.—Housefurnishing Review.

Arms Considered.

Fat and shapely arms are often ruined by a castic soaplike coloring, which might be avoided by attention to space in armhole and waist. Tightness of any part produces congestion, and arms as well as bones suffer. Hirsute tendencies can be defeated by toilet remedies, and the appearance of arms, when only the elbows are objectionable, can be improved by delicate falling laces at the bend. When the wrist bone presents a prominent appearance a Knot fountain ruffles are a congenial resource. Any chiffon apology for a sleeve can be used, so long as it travels down the arm and culminates in the mystic cache wherein the offending bone can lie concealed.

Bandeaux of delicate Medallin or knotty Irish point should be perpetually at hand for our elegantes whose anatomy is addicted to nubiness. Arms that are over-muscular and obese should also be sparingly exhibited; indeed they appear ugliness when veiled by a puffy sleeve, which prevents the adipose outlines from demonstrating themselves too vividly. The scraggy and cadaverous arm also requires a full covering, a difference in the construction of the sleeve puff only being needed. A combination of materials is long, flimsy, clinging puff, while the bony one needs a series of crisp gatherings and flutings, through which the offending leanness is scarcely revealed.—Philadelphia Times.

The Shopping Mania.

Why is it women love bargains so? Why do they pounce upon yards upon yards of embroidery or silk or ribbon they don't want, have no place to put in and no earthly idea of using, because they are wonderfully cheap? I knew two women whosewere drawn as if by magnet to a shop where velvet ribbon was "going at a slaughter," as they dramatically expressed it, and who bought reams of it because it seemed like flying in the face of Providence not to do so. One of them trimmed her child's dress until it was absolutely hidden under corn rows of this slaughtered adornment; and the other bought a dress on purpose to trim with it. Both husband and child still boast of their thrift and "management."

Both of them wear themselves, their clothes and their boots out with walking aimlessly about, their eyes absolutely protruding for bargains. They give up whole days to shopping, lunching down town, and coming home pressed at night, but triumphant, as in their hands they clutch the precious bargains. What good do they do them? And is shopping an end and not a means?—Chicago Post.

Stenographers in New York.

There are now more than 5,000 women, young and old, who earn a living wage in New York and Brooklyn as stenographers, a host of them combining the manipulation of the typewriter with their shorthand work. In the Cooper union are still a room as Cooper union in which Mrs. Eliza B. Burns might teach a free class in stenography. Mr. Cooper himself did not approve of this branch of work for women for three specified reasons: The art was difficult and complicated, requiring a long period of study and practice to use it successfully; the places where shorthand was practiced were not suitable for the presence of women; the business was a very limited one, and already fully occupied by competent practitioners. But where are Mr. Cooper's objections now?—New York Letter.

Rowing Is Good for Women.

A physician considers that nothing is more conducive to the development of a race yet unborn than the practice of rowing, but many mothers forbid their daughters to row much for fear of their busts becoming unduly large. Small busts certainly give an effect of refinement to the appearance, but the health and enjoyment to be had out of an almost daily row are well worth the sacrifice. Next to "walking rowing is one of the best exercises for strengthening the chest and invigorating the frame.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

TO AID THE HOUSEKEEPER.

HINTS AND SUGGESTIONS THAT WILL BE APPRECIATED.

Practical Information That May Assist the Busy Housewife in Making Home More Attractive and Cheerful—Useful Helps in the Kitchen and Pantry.

A valuable German method of removing rust from iron articles consists of placing them in a nearly saturated solution of chloride of tin, which will entirely eat off the rust in from twelve to twenty-four hours, without in any way injuring the articles, if care is taken that the tin solution contains no free hydrochloric acid. When removed from the solution the articles are silver in appearance. They are then washed off, dipped in ammonia, and then dried, after which they can be polished. There are often valuable pieces of metal that are apparently ruined from rust that can be saved by the above process.

AN ELECTRICAL OVEN.

Recent Interesting Improvements in Household Economy.

Inventors are now turning their attention to devices for the utilization of electric heating, especially for domestic purposes. Of these the latest is an oven heated by electricity on a new principle. It consists of an outer and inner case, so as to give an air space to prevent loss by radiation. Electric heaters are placed at the top and the bottom of the oven, and thus an even temperature is secured. The heaters may be put in series or parallel, so that the temperature can be varied at will. The heating surface being entirely contained in the oven, there is very little loss from surface radiation.

The English public are very much alive to the advantages of electric heating for domestic purposes, and it is said that at the recent Electrical Exhibition at the Crystal Palace, the best frequented and most popular exhibit was that of the apparatus for the house use of electricity in cooking and heating, and the people watched the cooking of pancakes, the boiling of coffee and eggs, and the baking of bread with the greatest interest, and, judging from the avidity with which they consumed the viands gratuitously provided, seemed to fancy that there was some special virtue in the process of electric cooking.

Sunflower Head Rest.

A sunflower head rest is very pretty and appropriate for a piazza chair. The round pillow has a puffing of brown India silk sewed around it, and the back is covered with the same. The center of the flower is made of brown plush sewed on the pillow; the petals, of yellow ribbon, are then sewed around this, these being turned over, finished in a point, and sewed to the puffing. Pieces of the ribbon are sewed on the top to fasten on the chair.

Covering for Kitchen Walls.

The covering of the kitchen walls has always been a matter open to discussion. The old-fashioned whitewashed kitchen was probably the most wholesome room for cooking that we could have. With modern improvements and modern servants, however, we have outgrown this, and some wall-covering must be devised which is easier kept clean, and does not absorb the odors and minute particles of matter which are ever present in a room where food is prepared and cooked. An ideal wall-covering in a wealthy mansion recently built, says the Tribune, is exclusively of tiling, the highly glazed stoneware covering the ceiling, side walls and floors, so that every part of the room can be thoroughly washed by means of a hose. While such a kitchen wall as this is hardly practicable, except in mansions of great wealth, there are several things which offer a fair substitute for it. A painted or enamelled wall is nearly non-absorbent, especially if the paint be finished with a coat of varnish. The chief objection to such a wall is that it presents a hard surface not pleasant to look upon. A prettier wall-covering than this may be made from the many fine papers which are specially finished so that they are non-absorbent. These papers usually come in tile patterns, and the blue and white paper in quaint old Dutch tile designs, are especially to be commended for kitchen use.

Grape Sherbet.

Wash a good quantity of grapes; pick off the stems and put in a porcelain-lined kettle; heat until the juice comes out freely; pour in a jelly bag and drain until you have one quart of juice. Cut oranges in halves and squeeze until you have one pint of juice. Add half a pint of sugar to the orange juice. Sweeten the grape juice until it suits the taste; mix the grape and orange juice together; put over the fire until the sugar is well dissolved; cool and put in the freezer. Freeze, turning slowly. When it begins to get thick, add the whites of two eggs well beaten, mixed with two spoonfuls of powdered sugar; stir it into the sherbet; pack the freezer with fresh ice and salt; turn a while and let stand until ready for use. Serve in sherbet glasses.

Hot Milk.

Sterilized milk diluted with water and served hot is a good drink for the sick. In hospital practice nurses have often told me that patients for whom hypodermics of morphine had been ordered for sleeplessness have been put to sleep with hot milk instead. It is particularly comforting and, of course, exceedingly valuable as a nutrient.

It is claimed that white spots on varnished furniture will disappear if a hot plate from the stove is held over them.

Reflections on Poesy.

When the snow falls in the winter;
When it falls upon the mountain,
On the meadows, in the valleys,
Soft and white and rather pretty,
Then the poet sings the praises
Of the Frost King, with his mantle
Made of ermine, very royal.
When the spring comes and the weather
Makes the nature somewhat dingy,
Quite mellow and not so pretty,
Then the bard begins another
Song of nature light and airy,
With a soft refrain of verdure
And the breaking of the shackles
That the Frost King forged and welded—
That which used to be the mantle.
In the summer he is full of
Gush about the blooming daisies
And some other things and nothings
Which would take a mighty volume
Just to mention in this story.
Then in autumn he becomes a
Devotee of color, and
Dedicates his pen to singing.
His new fountain pen to singing
Songs of bursting blue and brown nuts;
Makes the corn grow on the marshland
And some other things as doubtful.
For your poet as a sage is Still his ink runs out he'll go it
Up one side and down the other.
Neither flies nor bumble bees are in him:
He's a cyclone, that's what he is,
And he doesn't care who knows it.

LOVING CRADLE SONGS.

AS SUNG BY MOTHERS OF MANY NATIONS.

Rendered in Costume by Plainfield Young Ladies Last Night at the Casino Before a Fine Audience—The Affair a Great Success.

When the "Cradle Songs of Many Nations" were sung by a number of charming Plainfield young ladies last year in the pretty little Congregational church on Seventh street, it was unanimously agreed that such an unusually interesting entertainment ought to be repeated on a larger scale. The entertainment was a most agreeable surprise. Not but that the audience expected something good from so many bright young ladies, but that it was so much better than could reasonably be expected, considering all the circumstances.

Mrs. W. L. Patton of Ninth street, through whose efforts as the manager and conductor the entertainment was made such a gratifying success, and the young ladies who so ably assisted her, feel deservedly encouraged at the way the entertainment was received, and, when she this year proposed that the entertainment should be repeated, they readily assented, especially in view of the object. This was to benefit the Day Nursery, in the welfare of which Mrs. Patton and other Plainfield ladies, prominent in promoting benevolent enterprises, take an active interest. The exercises to alleviate the burdens of the poor, were interested.

The entertainment at the Casino last evening was in every respect, and the large and notably fine audience which filled the hall seemed greatly delighted from first to last with the programme, showering applause on every number.

Audience requested to join in singing.

Miss B. T. Barnes, Accompanist.

Each scene had to be changed to suit the circumstances, and this involved much labor, but when the curtains were drawn apart the way the audience manifested its pleasure and appreciation, must have been very gratifying. The scenes showed good judgment and taste throughout.

The costumes of the ladies, besides being appropriate for the nation represented, were also very unique and strikingly beautiful.

In several cases the costumes were direct from the country represented.

The Norwegian costume, for instance, was brought from Norway, by Miss Yates of Seventh street, during her extensive travels there a year or two ago, while the Japanese costumes were bought in Japan by the Misses Murray of Eighth street, during their extended tour abroad at about the same time.

Mrs. E. K. Miller of Archerwood assumed the character of the great grandmother in the American Home scene, in which the American mother was Miss Jessie Harte (the daughter of that prince of authors in his time, Bret Harte). Mrs. Miller is a sprightly and cheerful old lady. While among the young ladies who were waiting behind the Japanese scenes until they were to appear, she inquired of each young lady her name. At last she reached Miss Miller, who so cleverly impersonated the Russian Countess. Said Mrs. Miller: "And what is your name, dear?"

"Miss Miller," was the smiling reply.

"Why, that is my name: what are your initials?"

"E. K."

"Well, that is a singular coincidence: mine are E. K., too."

Further inquiry elicited the fact that they were not related to each other, and had never heard of each other before.

Mrs. Miller said her eightieth birthday anniversary occurred this month, and two of her nieces in Dunellen were to be present on that day, which she said she thought was so nice of them.

In the American Home scene, in which Mrs. Miller took part, four generations were represented.

Altogether the affair will long be remembered, and, what is more to the point, the proceeds will make a substantial addition to the fund for the relief of those whom the Day Nursery is intended to benefit.

In this nursery mothers who must depend upon their own exertions to support their families are, upon proper recommendation, permitted to leave their children at the nursery for a mere nominal charge—say fifteen cents per day for one child or twenty-five cents for two, including a meal and the attendance of a matron. It is hoped by the assistance of the ones who gave the entertainments as that of last evening to be able to reduce the charges to mothers to ten cents per day. Where the mothers are too poor to pay, no charge at all is made, but the mothers who can do so prefer to pay.

THEIR NEW PASTOR.

RECOGNITION SERVICES HELD BY THE PARK AVENUE BAPTISTS.

Last Evening the Rev. J. W. Richardson was Formally Installed as Pastor—Very Interesting Exercises, and He was Accorded a Hearty Welcome.

Recognition services were held last evening in the Park Avenue Baptist church in honor of the new pastor, the Rev. J. W. Richardson.

The large auditorium of the church was well filled with people, all taking part in the order of exercises.

The platform was beautifully decorated with flowers, potted plants and ferns.

The exercises opened with an organ voluntary, after which the anthem "Jubilate Deo" was sung. Next was reading of Scriptures by the Moderator, the Rev. Dr. Yerkes.

Rev. Dr. Eddy, who had been engaged to preach the sermon, was unable to be present, and his place was ably filled by the Rev. Dr. Middleditch of Brooklyn, N. Y., taking for his text Thess. 3-1, "Finally, brethren, pray for us." He spoke of the qualities necessary in a minister, his duties, dangers, trials and opportunities, and urged the people to pray for their pastor.

The prayer of recognition was made by the Rev. J. A. Cubberly of New Market.

The charge to the pastor, by the Rev. H. M. Luther of Newark, N. J., was very interesting and full of good suggestions, particularly about pastoral calls. He spoke of the three-fold relationship the pastor sustained in a community—as man, pastor and minister.

The Rev. Joseph Sagebeer of Flemington, N. J., delivered the charge to the church with great earnestness of power, and dwelt upon the church as the mind of God in operation.

After the singing of hymn 441 by the congregation, the Rev. Robert Lowry, D. D., said, in extending the hand of fellowship to the new pastor,

"The minister saw the saints in many different phases. The church had its ups and downs, but now its ups were to outnumber its downs. The road behind was rough and rocky, but ahead was smooth. And we most heartily welcome our new pastor."

The Rev. Dr. Richards, pastor of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian church, next spoke of the unity of the early church, and said in Plainfield something like the old unity was being approached, as the churches were all united and bound together by a strong band. He most cordially welcomed the new pastor to a place among the churches and the whole Christian community.

The services closed with the benediction by the Rev. J. W. Richardson, now pastor of the Park avenue Baptist church.

Union Thanksgiving Services.

Union services will be held as follows next Thursday at 11 a. m:

The congregation of the Crescent avenue Presbyterian, Park avenue Baptist and Congregational churches will meet in the Crescent avenue church and the Rev. J. W. Richardson of Park avenue Baptist church will preach.

The congregations of the First Presbyterian, First Baptist, Methodist, Trinity Reformed and Seventh-Day Baptist churches will meet in the First Baptist church and the Rev. Dr. Hurlbut will preach.

Another Gray Fox Shot.

Yesterday afternoon Messrs. W. Richardson and L. Perrine of Westfield shot a gray fox while gunning near that place. It weighed 19 pounds. They sold the fox to a baker at Westfield, who will have the skin stuffed and put in his show window for exhibition.

The Ring Thief Arrested.

Minnie Morris, the servant accused of stealing a diamond ring from Mrs. Beerbower, as told in yesterday's NEWS, was arrested last night by Officer Kiely at the depot. She was taken to Elizabeth this morning to await the action of the Grand Jury.

His Foot Was Crushed.

George Raggles, a thirteen year old colored boy, while catching on coal trains this morning, near Richmond street, had his foot crushed. He was taken to the hospital. The foot will have to be amputated.

QUEER ELECTION BETS.

THE AMUSING THINGS MANY LOSERS HAD TO DO.

More Amusement for Spectators than Participants—One Witty Loser of a Wager Turns the Laugh on the Winner, in a Droll Way.

Election is well over, and many amusing election bets are now being settled. Often, when the question of money is of slight consequence, wagers of personal payment, by some ridiculous act, are entered into, frequently a large money forfeit is imposed. A few of the most amusing wagers are given below.

Two Philadelphian social leaders made a bet. The loser was to wheel the winner in a wheelbarrow along the main street for several blocks. The wager also was that the winner must not leave the wheelbarrow. A heavy forfeit was put up by each. The other day the couple, followed by a laughing crowd, started on their trip. The man in the wheelbarrow joined the crowd in buying the loser, who was wheeling him along. When they started it was clear. Soon, however, it commenced to rain heavily. The loser saw a chance to turn the tables, and, when they passed a club house, he stopped—to rest—and went indoors. The winner had to stay in the wheelbarrow, and the loser, taking a good position at the club house window, calmly smoked a cigar. The winner in the wheelbarrow was by this time sitting in a pool of water. He, naturally, failed to appreciate the joke, although the loser, possibly to impress it, and the fact that he had won the bet, upon him, stopped at every possible place. He took six hours to wheel the winner the required distance. It rained during all that time.

Here is another peanut bet in which the loser was obliged to push a peanut seven blocks along the pavement with a toothpick.

Women are often interested in election results and in the following wager the women certainly has the best of it. A certain man is a Republican and his wife is an ardent Democrat. Shortly before the election they became involved in a dispute over the relative merits of the two candidates. This was renewed at intervals, until the husband made the following proposition. He said: "If Cleveland is elected, every night for a year I will clear off the supper table, wash the dishes and put them away. On the other hand, if Harrison is elected, you must shave me and shine my shoes every morning." To this the wife agreed and now the unfortunate husband spends the better part of the evening struggling with a dish rag and swearing, while his wife wears an angelic smile.

Charles Haven, of Pitchburg, Mass., walked nearly a quarter of a mile on his hands, his legs being held by two men.

In another town a grocer who boasted a flourishing beard was obliged to shave one side of his face and wait on his customers.

A storekeeper in Germantown was obliged, in payment of an election wager, to place a bed near the front window of his store and to remain in the bed, in full view of every passer, all day long last Sunday.

ANOTHER FACTORY TO SHUT DOWN.

Manufacturers in New Jersey Fear Democratic Tariff Tinkering.

Hermann Aukam & Co., of South River, near New Brunswick, have notified their employees that they will shut down their factory December 1 for an indefinite period. The reason given for the shutdown is the uncertainty as to what action the Democrats will take on the tariff question.

Large additions to the factory were made recently in anticipation of a continuance of the protective principles which benefit their industry. Mr. Henry Hermann was a strong Democrat prior to the enactment of the McKinley law, but when he experienced its benefits he became a Republican.

The shut down will come hard on the employees at this season.

To Have Plenty of Fish.

Member of the Hudson County Fish and Game Protective Society purpose to have spendid fishing for Oswego bass, perch and pickerel two years hence. They have just placed in the waters of the "Branch" 800 young fish, weighing from six ounces to two pounds each. Fish Warden A. C. Hallock procured them from Lake Hopatcong. The Protective Society will protect these fish by enforcing strictly the laws relative to fishing. Two years from now the waters of the "Branch" will be fairly alive with fish, so the society members say.

Concerning Hand-Shakes.

The New York papers, without exception, in telling of the horse-show in New York, make fun of the absurd fellowship of society and the now prevalent society hand-shake, which has about as little welcome and cordiality expressed in it as could possibly be imagined.

A Plainfield young lady, in speaking of society's "finger grip" said it was preferable to the old hand clasp because some clasps were so very strong as to cause injury, especially if the hand clasped had rings adorning it.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

Almost Ran Over Mr. Gladstone.

LONDON, Nov. 18, (Special.)—As Mr. Gladstone was crossing Piccadilly last evening he stepped directly under the heads of a team of horses attached to an omnibus that was swinging around a corner.

The horses or the pole struck him a slight blow upon the shoulder. He staggered a short distance, then recovered himself and escaped to the pavement.

A Convict Captured at Elizabeth.

ELIZABETH, Nov. 18. (Special.)—Sebastian Slotterer, the ex-convict who assaulted Mrs. C. C. Fitzgerald at her home on Madison avenue, a week ago, and escaped with $1,200 worth of diamonds, jewelry and money which he took from her, was captured last night on a farm near the New Jersey Jockey Club grounds.

STATISTICS BY DR. H. K. CARROLL.

Read at the Madison Avenue M. E. Church, New York.

At yesterday's session of the New York City Evangelization Union of the Methodist Episcopal church, a most interesting paper was read by Mr. H. K. Carroll of North Plainfield, editor of the Independent, on "The Census of 1890; Its Declaration as to Churches."

At present, according to Mr. Carroll, there are 141 distinct denominations in this country, and five of the leading churches have, respectively, the following number of communicants: Roman Catholic, 6,238,579; Methodist Episcopal, 2,240,354; regular Baptist, (colored,) 1,314,425, regular Baptist, (south,) 1,271,092, and Methodist Episcopal, (South,) 1,209,976. The value of church property among five of the foremost denominations was stated as follows: Roman Catholic, $118,000,000; Methodist Episcopal, $97,000,000; Protestant Episcopal, $61,000,000; Presbyterian, (North), $76,000,000, and Northern Baptist, $49,000,000.

The total figures for the whole United States, including all denominations, were given as follows: Church edifices, 165,000; organizations, 163,730; seating capacity in churches, 42,681,094; value of church property, $630,687,106; communicants, 20,488,670. These figures showed that one in every three of the population was a member in good standing of some church.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Bear in mind the reason assigned by Bill Nye for the growth of American cities at the expense of the country. He says people crowd into cities so that they can go from one store to another without getting mired. This is William's shy at American country roads.

A Jewish Sunday school is something unique. Yet a system of Jewish Sunday schools is gradually spreading. The object of these schools is to teach Hebrew children the tenets of the Israelitish faith, and likewise to give them knowledge of the Hebrew language and history. The schools meet on Sunday because that day is most convenient for all.

No age less irreverent than ours would have permitted to be carried into execution the plan which has been formed for getting sulphur out of the crater of Popocatepetl. No other age could have conceived such a plan. In the old time men would as soon have thought of getting sulphur out of the infernal regions. It would have been considered a meddling with Satan's own mysteries and the tempting to sure destruction.

Politeness in the Public Schools.

It is better for a schoolboy or girl to enter life with gentle, courteous manners than to know the names of all the British sovereigns in their order; better even than to be able to repeat the battles of the American revolution. The charge is brought against the people's schools that the pupils are rude and jostling; that they are harsh and discourteous in their manner to strangers and to one another. In the kindergarten training it is certainly not so. There one of the first, greatest lessons is to learn the application of the golden rule. Kindergarten teachers are gentle, low voiced and kindly, and the pupils naturally fall into the same gracious ways.

It is quite compatible with robust training and strict discipline that the public school teacher should have the gentle, low voice, the gracious, magnetic manner. The pupils will catch something of the gentleness, and object lessons and stories should be constantly placed before them besides, to produce this result. If there is no time, then leave out a little of the mechanical drilling and memorizing. At any rate a harsh, wooden manner, a loud, hard, metallic voice, as dry of human sympathy as a stick or stone is one of the poorest qualifications for the public school teacher.

A New Idea in Building.

A French civil engineer, M. Somesco, has built himself a house on a marsh between two rivers. It is so dry and warm that measures have been necessary to produce greater moisture in the rooms. It is likely that as the science of sanitary architecture advances M. Somesco's mansion will become the type of models dwelling houses.

The ground was so swampy that it was necessary to dig six feet below the cellar floor to get a solid foundation. The cellar walls are of massive masonry. The Somesco's new plan begins. The house is square, and has two walls, one inside the other, with a hollow space of five inches between them. Up through this hollow space the heat from the furnace which warms the house passes and filters through the porous walls all through the mansion.

Somesco has his furnace room outside the house. A pipe passes from it conveying the smoke and heat to the house into a heat chamber in the cellar or basement. Inside the basement, about level with the top of the ground, a hollow, square passageway runs all around the walls. Supported upon brackets in the centre of this passageway runs the iron flue which conveys the smoke and heat all around the bottom of the house walls. At intervals are openings from the passageway to the hollow between the walls. The iron pipe heats the air of the hollow passageway while carrying the smoke around again to a flue whence it escapes upward. Inlets of fresh air from the garden open at intervals into the hot air passage.

Somesco's great idea is the porosity of his walls, both the inside and outside one. He will allow no paper or plaster. Both are made of porous bricks, the inside one being covered with wooden tapestry hangings that can be taken down and cleaned. The whole house is so warm that constantly in all weathers it is possible to leave the windows open.

A writer in the London Lancet says:

Over and above all these considerations Somesco maintains he has realized the idea that a dwelling should be like our clothes only not portable, but permeable. It should be warm, because it should be made of materials that are bad conductors of heat. Indeed we should protect ourselves against the chilling effects of the outer air. We ought to live indoors as we live out of doors, and should not be more incommoded by a cold or a storm in an extra apartment. The cost, it seems, will be warm and healthful. One of the reasons, says why we are so fond of fine mercer furniture when it rains is that the rain like any porosity of the walls, and that, too on the windward side.

As for microbes, M. Somesco proudly points to the artificial drapery which covers the bricks of his porous walls. "These are," exclaimed, "my microbe traps. If I have any reason to believe that injurious microbes have been introduced into my house, I know precisely where to find them. It would take only a little time or trouble to unhook all this drapery, to put it into the disinfecting stove, and then superheated steam under pressure, with additional pains of fifteen pounds, would assuredly kill the microbes. Even without these artificial methods of purification, if the walls were porous, oxygen would go wherever the microbes went, and nature would effect its own cure."

CLEVELAND AND CROKER

The Tammany Chief Says No Pledges Were Given.

NONE WERE ASKED FOR, HE SAYS.

The Famous New York Politician Gives His Version of What Occurred at the Historic Victoria Hotel Banquet—But One City and State Ticket Wanted.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Richard Croker denies the statement that Tammany asked and obtained any pledges from Grover Cleveland at the Victoria hotel banquet. Thomas G. Shearman, speaking at the single tax banquet Wednesday night, declared on "unimpeachable authority," backed up by the Brooklyn Eagle, that pledges had been demanded from Mr. Cleveland by his Tammany guests, but that he had indignantly refused to bind himself in any way when elected and had received his refusal with an unparliamentary d——, which cast a gloom over the subsequent proceedings.

What Mr. Croker Says.

Mr. Croker says, "There were no pledges made and for a very simple reason—he came no pledges were asked for."

"It is not true then that Lieutenant Governor Sheehan made a long appeal to Mr. Cleveland showing the necessity of having things put on a 'satisfactory basis' to the party leaders?"

"No, sir; that is not true."

"Did no one present at this dinner make such an appeal, and were no pledges or promises demanded either directly or indirectly?"

"Neither directly nor indirectly."

"May I state," continued the reporter, "that at the present moment neither yourself nor Tammany Hall holds any pledges from President-elect Cleveland, whether written or verbal, in regard to the coming administration?"

"Yes, sir, you may state that, and I give you my word of honor that it is true. We tried to help Mr. Cleveland all we could during the campaign, and we shall continue to do so now that he has been elected. And I tell you, in spite of what the Republican papers may say, we have established a new doing is for the good of the Democratic party, to which we are loyal, and not for offices or patronage or plunder. The Tammany tiger has not going to fatten itself at Mr. Cleveland's expense. The Republicans are good enough eating for us.

But One Democratic Ticket.

"Let me add one word more in order that my statement may be perfectly accurate. In the course of the dinner you refer to Mr. Cleveland and the rest of us came to an agreement upon one point about which there had, I may say, never been any difference, and that was the advisability and the necessity of there being only one Democratic ticket for the state and city. There was no pledge there, as Mr. Cleveland was of precisely the same opinion."

Would Mr. Sheehan and Mr. Murphy confirm your statements about this dinner?"

"I think they would," said Mr. Croker.

Cleveland and the Pledge Question.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Mr. Edward Murphy, Jr., the chairman of the Democratic state committee, denies the statement of Mr. Shearman that Mr. Cleveland said at the recent Victoria hotel dinner that "he would not be bound before the would give such pledges as the Democratic machine demanded."

CLEVELAND GETS ONE VOTE.

That Appears to Be the Situation in the State of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Nov. 17.—Though Thursday was the last day allowed by law for making county returns to the secretary of state, at the close of business Fayette, Franklin, Stark, Lucas, Lawrence and Guernsey were still out of hail reported only in part. With the official figures from the eighty-two counties reported and the semi-official figures of those still out, the Republican majority in the state ticket appear to be elected.

The same figures show Bushford, leading elector on the Republican ticket, has a plurality over Seward, leading elector on the Democratic ticket and over the other Democratic electors 3,873. Seward has 1,300 plurality over the Republican electors below Danford, and thus gives Cleveland one electoral vote from this state. The average Republican plurality is 1,067.

TRENTON, Nov. 18.—When the grand jury of this county finished its labors they were censured by Judge Woodruff for failing to return indictments against the politicians charged with bribery at the polls on election day. MITKIEWICZ WINS HIS CASE.

The Count Once Said He Had Colonel Shepard on the Hip.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—"Count" Eugene de Mitkiewicz, the famous promoter of Chinese concession schemes, appeared at the Tombs police court for examination on the charge of having obtained $1,750 under false pretenses from Arthur L. Tomes, of Brooklyn. The "count" came on from Washington, where he has been living recently, and surrendered himself to Police Justice Grady, who paroled him in the custody of his counsel.

Before the case was begun Lawyer Burke, counsel for Tomes, said he did not care to go on with the case until he had all the witnesses present. Justice Grady thought the case could proceed until they ran out of witnesses, and Tomes then began to testify. He told how he met Mitkiewicz, and how the latter induced him to place a mortgage on his home in Brooklyn, assuring him that the money would be returned by Colonel Elliott F. Shepard and others.

The court then said that the only point involved was whether the money had been obtained on a false pretense that it would be returned by Colonel Shepard and others.

Colonel Shepard testified that Mitkiewicz had asked the witness if he would advance money toward procuring Chinese concessions. Finally witness agreed that in case Mitkiewicz secured the concessions from the Chinese and brought him sufficient proof of the fact he would enter into the scheme and pay all the expenses in the matter that had been incurred.

William P. Burr was the next witness after Tomes. He testified that through all the transaction he understood that the money was to be repaid by Colonel Shepard. On cross examination witness said that Mitkiewicz once told him "that he had Colonel Shepard on the hip, and that he could force him to pay the money back."

Lawyer Brooke, counsel for Mitkiewicz, asked for the dismissal of the complaint on the ground that no evidence had been submitted showing that the count had handled one cent of the money in question. Justice Grady thereupon granted his motion.

Tomes now charges Mitkiewicz with obtaining from him $21,000 on false representations, and he will have the count arrested again.

ARCHBISHOPS AT WORK.

The Secret Society Question Discussed at Length.

THE CASE OF THE ODD FELLOWS.

Attitude of the Vatican Toward Secret Orders Like the Masons and the Carbonari at Present Under the Pope's Ban. Indian Catholics in the West.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The second day's session of the annual conference of the archbishops of the Roman Catholic church in the United States was carried on behind closed doors. The major portion of the time, it was learned, was occupied in the discussion of the question on the condemnation of certain secret societies. The debate referred chiefly to the Odd Fellows, numbering about 800,000 in the United States, and the Sons of Temperance, who will include about 70,000 membership. Archbishop Katzer, of Milwaukee, brought the matter to the attention of the council by presenting the petition of the German Catholic Central Society of the United States, which was adopted at Dubuque in September last, asking the conference to clearly define the designation "secret society" in plain and unmistakable terms, as some doubt has been raised in the minds of some of the church authorities as to whether the societies named come under the papal bull.

Societies Under the Ban.

In explaining his position Archbishop Katzer said that it is absolutely not true that the Freemasons are the only society forbidden by the church, but that consequently a Catholic may join any other lodge or society except the Freemasons.

He quotes from the injunction of the third plenary council at Baltimore as follows:

First—That all former decrees of the Roman pontiff and all societies condemned by the holy see are to remain in full force, according to the tenor of the constitution "Apostolicae Sedis" and the making of the Roman pontiff.

Second—That the Freemasons and the Carbonari are excommunicated by name.

Third—That all other societies of the same nature as the Freemasons and the Carbonari—that is, all those societies which openly or secretly plot against the church or against the lawful government of the state.

Fourth—That all societies are excommunicated which have their own minister or chaplain, their own (religious) ritual and their own (religious) ceremonies, in such a manner as thereby to become a heresy or schismatic sect.

Fifth—That any society which requires its members not to reveal its secrets to any one, not even to the ecclesiastical authority—that is, the bishop—when he demands it, from members a blind and absolute obedience, is forbidden under grievous sin.

Sixth—That the faithful and especially the youth are to be taught and earnestly admonished carefully to avoid all such societies as in the judgment of the bishops of the place or diocese are in any way dangerous to faith and morals.

The Case of the Odd Fellows.

According to Archbishop Katzer the society of Odd Fellows has within late years gained a large increase of membership from the Catholic ranks on the plea that they are not Freemasons, and therefore not a society forbidden by the Catholic church. The council at Baltimore has appointed in the college of the archbishops of the United States as the only competent tribunal in the matter of secret societies, he argued, and it is the duty of the present conference to determine exactly the question at issue. The majority of the council coincided with the opinions expressed by Archbishop Katzer, and appropriate action will be taken before the close of the conference, so that the matter will be indisputably settled.

The only phase of the school question touched upon was that of the treatment of the Catholic Indian children in the western reservations, who have been compelled to attend non-Catholic schools, despite the protests of their parents. Right Rev. Bishop P. L. Chapelle, of Santa Fe, N. M., was the principal speaker, and he called for some decisive action on the part of his colleagues.

STRUCK BY A CYCLONE

Redbud, Ills., Feels the Storm King's Wrath.

TWO KILLED AND MANY INJURED.

The Track of the Storm Was Three Hundred Feet Wide and It Demolished Eighty-four Buildings in Half a Minute—List of the Dead.

REDBUD, Nov. 18.—The city of Redbud (population, 2,000), situated thirty miles southeast of St. Louis on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, was visited by a cyclone of wonderful intensity at 3:30 a. m. Eighty-four buildings were demolished, two persons killed, twelve seriously hurt and many more injured. It is estimated that $100,000 worth of property was destroyed. The dead are Willie Koppe and Mrs. Nob Koppe.

The injured are Mrs. Louis Bayon, Emma Crow, Peter Dose, Margaret Havermann, Mr. Heitman, Mrs. Peter Kardell, Mrs. John Manderfield, Aidell Starr, Mrs. Aidell Starr, Charles Starr, S. A. Sperr, Mrs. S. A. Sperr.

Several More Will Die.

It is believed several of the injured will die. A partial list of the buildings demolished by the cyclone follows: Catholic church, German Methodist church, Lutheran church and school house, public school, city jail and engine house, German Catholic school house, Charles Bodeker's office and lumber bloom away, the postal building, the Centennial hotel, and Henry Batterner's icehouse and brewery. Sixty dwelling houses were also demolished and many others were damaged. The estimated value of the buildings destroyed is about $100,000, while the total loss will considerably exceed this amount. The storm came out of the southwest. In thirty seconds it came and accomplished its work of destruction and death. The path of the "twister" was 300 feet wide.

A Cincinnati Hotel Blown Down.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 18.—This city was visited by a fierce windstorm, during which the Twelfth Street hotel was blown down. No lives were lost.

An Aristocratic Girl Thief.

LONDON, Nov. 18.—When the case of Gwynath Maude, the eighteen-year-old girl who was arrested on the charge of swindling Spink & Son, jewelers, came up, it was announced that the girl's mother had committed suicide. The hearing was therefore postponed. The daughter had accused her mother of inciting her to steal. The accused girl is connected with the illustrious family of De Montalt, the head of the family being the Earl de Montalt, who has been lord in waiting to Queen Victoria.

Bishop Wigger Adjourned It.

NEWARK, N. J., Nov. 18.—The diocesan conference of the Catholic clergy being held in Newark ended by Bishop Wigger dispersing the meeting. A paper was circulated among the priests for them to sign pledging allegiance to Bishop Wigger. In discussing the matter Father Corrigan declared the circular was an insult to every priest. At this point Bishop Wigger peremptorily adjourned the conference.

A Policeman in Trouble.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The tables were quite dramatically turned upon Park Policeman Michael P. Tallon when Justice Kilbreth held him for trial on a charge of perjury in having falsely sworn that he had arrested Mrs. Lillie F. Coleman, of 119 East Forty-second street, because she solicited. The woman swore that Tallon arrested her because she resisted his advances.

The New Orleans Mob Trials.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 18.—The trials of the entire list of the families of the Italians murdered here March 14, 1891, against the city and the leaders of the mob of murderers will be held next week. The lawyers for the plaintiffs have joined together and are to get one-half of the money recovered, the aggregate being $300,000.

The Grand Lodge's Officers.

TRENTON, Nov. 18.—The Grand Lodge of New Jersey, I. O. O. F., has elected the following officers: Grand master, A. A. King, of Paterson; deputy grand master, N. W. Tussey, of Camden; grand secretary, Lewis Parker, of Trenton, and grand treasurer, Joseph Lamb, of Jersey City.

FIGHT AT THE HORSE SHOW.

Mr. Neville Hits Mr. Howland with an Umbrella.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—At the horse show proceedings were considerably enlivened by a scrimmage between two prominent horsemen in a private box, which resulted in the arrest of Robert Neville, one of the participants, who is a well known club member.

S. S. Howland, proprietor of the Bellewood stud, a son-in-law of Mr. August Belmont, sat in his box conversing with friends when Mr. Neville entered. Quickly following a short and excited dispute Mr. Neville's umbrella was raised and landed across Mr. Howland's face. Mr. Neville was immediately placed under arrest and taken to the Thirtieth street station.

Mr. Howland says the cause of the trouble dates back two years, when at a horse show in Chicago he rendered a decision against George Pepper's horse Roseberry in favor of his own, Ontario. After the decision had been rendered Neville, who is a friend of Pepper, offered to bet $5,000 that Pepper's horse could jump higher than Howland's. Howland refused to bet, as he said the question had been conclusively settled. Thereupon there was an animated dispute and Neville struck Howland.

Neville is a member of the Union club, of this city; one of the governors of the Maryland club, of Baltimore, and a director of the Washington Riding academy, of Washington.

It is understood that Mr. Howland will press the charge of assault against Mr. Neville.

GAMBLE WEIR WAS POISONED.

Three Poisons Used to Kill Pittsburg's Police Superintendent.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 18.—There is now no doubt that Gamble Weir, the late superintendent of police of this city, was poisoned. Hugo Blanck, the chemical expert, has completed his analysis of the dead man's stomach, and states positively that he found three different poisons in sufficient quantities to cause death.

Mrs. Marsh, who has been arrested at Staten Island, N. Y., with whom Superintendent Weir boarded, is accused of the crime.

Colonel W. D. Moore has been retained by Administrator Harry Fehl, and will assist District Attorney Burleigh in the prosecution of Mrs. Marsh on the charge of larceny, the accusation being that she appropriated valuable personal property of the deceased superintendent. The trial will likely be very sensational, as developments that may throw some light on the manner of death are expected. Several movements after she left Pittsburg are closely watched. As a result two women who reside at Tottenville, S. I., are under the city and will appear as witnesses for the commonwealth.

—Truth.

No Fun.

In Bermuda, says Mrs. Rollins, your driver and your washerwoman bring you every day bunches of flowers that in New York would cost five or six dollars; but not even five or six dollars would induce them to hurry their horses or change the day for bringing back the wash.

In the shops dealers almost resent your demands upon their stock, and the story is vouched for of one shopkeeper who explained his lack of something inquired for by the extraordinary statement:

"People kept coming and coming for it and bought us all out just as fast as we got it in, so we stopped keeping it."—Youth's Companion.

FASHIONS

Fashion Notes.

There is a decided tendency toward trimming skirts for evening wear with fur, lace or rich embroidery.

Pompadour satins with small patterns furnish a charming material for young girls' ball gowns.

Large felt hats are worn trimmed with a double crown of velvet, and feathers of some kind, quills especially, thrust through stiff long looped bows.

French felt hats of plateau shape, either in light or dark shades, have the brims always lined with velvet. French bonnets are smaller and smaller.

Muffs, we are assured by those "who know," will be most "grandmotherly" in size.

Torchon lace is largely used for trimming underwear. For more dressy models the lace—insertion and edging—is threaded with baby ribbon, or torchon edging is combined with insertion of fine swiss embroidery.

A Knockout Blow.

He criticised her puddings till he found fault with her cake;
He whined and he'd make such biscuit as his mother used to make;
She didn't cook the dishes and she didn't make a mess,
Nor even mend his stockings, as his mother used to do.

His mother had six children, but by night her work was done;
His wife seemed dredging always, yet she only had the one.
His mother always was well dressed, his wife would be so, too,
If only she would manage as his mother used to do.

Ah, well! She was not perfect, though she tried to do her best,
Until at length she thought the time had come to have a rest;
So when one day he went the same old rigmarole all through,
She turned and boxed his ears just as his mother used to do.

WOMAN AND HOME.

CANNOT LEAVE THE BABIES TO GO OUT WITH HUSBANDS.

Work of a Teacher—Basis of Dressing Well—Exercise for Growing Girls—Dress of English Women—Women Who Manage—For the Housekeeper.

How often do mothers with grown up families look back upon that period when the children were small and they were obliged to stay at home to watch over them day and night. What a change the coming of the first little one wrought in the well regulated home!

Prior to its advent the house was still and spare, its mistress with plenty of leisure on her hands, ready at any moment to go out for a walk or to a place of amusement with her woman friends or her husband, as the case might be.

With the first little wailing cry the change begins, the house must be hushed when baby sleeps, loud laughing or talking must cease utterly, whispers prevail. Doors and windows are hermetically sealed lest his babyship takes a cold, and as for any more outings they consist only in a stroll up and down in the sunshine with the nurse and baby carriage in tow, or, minus the nurse, a Sunday spent at the adoring grandparents, whither they repair in a street car, papa carrying the newly crowned monarch.

Papa cannot exactly see why everything should be so completely metamorphosed in his home and his comfort simply because a pink atom sticks its tiny fist into wondering blue eyes up startle in a late trimmed bertillonet crib, when he returns to mildly put his wonderment into words and invite his wifeless companion, the wife's mother, out for an evening entertainment he is quite surprised to have his proposition met by a reproachful glance and still more reproachful, "Oh, Harry! And leave the baby?"

He makes these sociable overtures several times with no better success, and after awhile, finding the library very lonesome with no wife to talk or read to, he goes out where it is brighter than in the quiet home, whose new occupant completely monopolizes his wife's attention, and thus the trouble begins.

It is no idle statement, but one many men will corroborate, that they were not the least bit cheered to spend their evenings away from homeuntil the nursery sovereign deposed them and their invitations always met with the same response, "I cannot leave the baby." It is no one's fault. The precious infant must be looked after, yet how little the children realize that their love has sometimes to make up for the attentions of a husband who since the advent of a son or daughter has ceased to show them.—Philadelphia Times.

The Wearing Work of a Teacher.

Close observation shows that teaching is one of the most wearing occupations for women. Even the hard working clerk, typewriter, journeyman sewing machine, longer hours and more drudgelike employment, keeps her health and strength better through the year than the institutions teacher does the average school teacher. The girl who begins with sweet carriage and rosy cheeks will be seen in the course of a few years to have lost both. Much of this is attributed to the nervous strain necessary for the regular routine of governing often from sixty to eighty children, and ceiving the required studies. But although teaching is hard work, without entering into the reasons, certainly nothing should be neglected which adds physical comfort to these positions of honor, filled many times by earnest women who strive by enthusiasm in their work and by a noble example to make teaching a profession.

It would seem to be absurd to declare it is their right to occupy cool rooms which can be properly heated and ventilated, and yet it is not too strong a statement to say that, to the writer's knowledge, one girl last winter owed a severe attack of pneumonia to the lack of comfort of her room, while others suffered more or less from the same cause. Because there are conditions over which the teachers themselves have little or no control, they should be all the more carefully attended to by those who do.

This is another consideration, however, for which they themselves are responsible, and that is the midday luncheon, which is very apt to be a basket affair, eaten as rapidly as possible in order to get on with school work, or, as one teacher said, "She took a bite while correcting papers, which left no time for digestion or comfort." The full hour's rest at noon should be enjoyed; when possible a breath of fresh air and a few minutes' walk will make the duties of the afternoon easier.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Personality the Basis of Dressing Well.

Women do not, as a rule, attach the slightest significance to their own particular type. Hair, eyes and complexion are forgotten as the ensemble for an outfit. As we see, shy little blonds appearing day after day in all the glories of a new gown pointedly put the question, "How do you like it?" I longed to frankly tell the shiny little creature that her prettiness had been ravished by a subtle something, I could hardly say what. Certainly from the crown of her golden brown head to the tips of her smart slippers she was a grievous mistake.

Why? Because in selecting the robe she had left out in the cold all her best points—points which should have been consulted before a single yard of material had been purchased. The rich, dull blue, and the shimmer of gold and scarlet, demanded the figure of a Juno and not the fairylike beauty of the woman who owned it. What she needed was something light and floating, a poetic drapery, clinging lines and an utter absence of fuss and feathers.

The woman suffering from flesh is very apt to insist that her company gown shall be of black satin, which, when she has crowded her ample proportions within this fabric that shines like stove polish, and garnishes it with diamonds, proclaims to the world that she is very rich and very uncomfortable. To be in harmony with her clothes the flesh woman should affect textures that fall heavily and conceal ungraceful curves and lines. Tiny ruffles, bows and frills are decidedly out of place upon the figure that to be graceful must move with rhythmic motion. In truth, fripperies ought never to be allowed a position next into the person of a woman who has lost her willowy charm of figure.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Exercise for Growing Girls.

Growing girls of twelve to sixteen are apt to be very awkward both in their movements and gestures. Sometimes they outgrow these shuffling, ugly habits of carriage and deportment without any especial effort on the part of their instructors, but it is a dangerous experiment to trust to those as the only cure for these evils. Besides, it is not only grace that is of chief importance, but the much more vital question of health. How is it possible for a body to grow and develop without the necessary amount of pure air to feed the lungs, and how can a cramped up, flat chest and narrow shoulders give the requisite supply?

In arranging th refore for a child's curriculum do not forget the body while providing for the mind, and besides the daily walk see that the children have some form of regular exercise particularly adapted to expand the chest and improve the carriage. There are so many excellent methods now that one can hardly go astray, but perhaps a combination of the Delsartean movements with simple dumbbell exercise would be the best. The former certainly gives grace and suppleness, and there is no better medium than the latter for developing muscle and inflating the chest.

There is no need to give much time to these exercises, and in no case should gymnasium work take the place of long walks in the open air. Fifteen or twenty minutes' regular and daily practice is all that is necessary, and it will be found in every case to be of incalculable advantage. A breathing exercise should always accompany the manual performance.—New York Tribune.

The Dress of English Women.

Class distinctions are more decidedly drawn in England than elsewhere in Europe, but the women all dress so near alike that there is no way to tell to what class a woman belongs except by that uncertain standard of smartness or shabbiness of attire. When her grace the duchess has finished with her gown it is sold to a dealer and reappears soon again upon the back of some lower person in the social scale. There is one exception to the rule that all women in England dress alike.

There are two classes which an observant person soon learns to distinguish without chance of failure. These are the west end shop girls and the barmaids in the hotels, restaurants and railway stations. I don't know that it is true, but I suspect that personal appearance has a good deal to do with securing such positions, for it is very rarely we see one of these young women who is not well to look upon. And they are the best dressed women in London. They do not have the most expensive clothes, but they seem to hold together better and the tout ensemble is more harmonious. And what is more their boots and gloves are trim and in order; but, alas, the inevitable hat! Even the shop girls and barmaids have not escaped that.

The shoulders of English women are, I think, naturally broad, certainly broader on the average than the shoulders of American women. The habit of tight lacing accentuates this and makes them seem still broader. This peculiarity is more exaggerated in the shop girls and barmaids than in the other classes, for those comely young women lace till their waists are literally wasplike.—Godey's.

Women Who "Manage."

The world of the managing person is divided into those who allow themselves to be managed and those who object. Generally the managing person is a woman. Women are the born managers of this world. The woman who has this "executive ability" soon masters the affairs of her own particular household, and then she looks abroad for fresh worlds to conquer. She devotes herself to the business with energy. To those of her acquaintances and friends who will allow themselves to be managed she is amazingly attentive. She studies each case with order and perseverance, arranging circumstances publicly and privately, and giving advice by wholesale and retail.

The woman with a talent for management is quite a boon to those weak creatures who cannot settle their own affairs, and who are willing to take counsel and help from any outside parties willing to give it. It saves them troublesome and fatiguing thought. They are content to do the proper thing without controversy, and are thankful for the instruction.

But the people who object to be managed are a constant thorn in the side of the busy manager. She marvels that a mysterious and unregulated providence should have so blinded them to their own interests. Their obstinacy and opposition to their own best good are bewildering and unreasonable. There is something wrong. The world should have been divided only into the managers and the managed. Providence has made some mistake.—Boston Times.

Franklin Crain's Story.

Women who have missed in early life the privileges and opportunities now obtainable in all phases of culture will be encouraged by the story of Franklin Crain, of Germany, proprietor of one of the schools for girls in Berlin. The daughter of an invalid mother, Franklin Crain devoted her early life to the duties of nurse and housekeeper, and at thirty-six found herself not only without a family, but without a home, without means and without sufficient education to pass the series of examinations demanded by her country from one who aspires to be at the head of a school.

She took her final examination at forty, and began with less than a score of pupils the school which now has 300 students, and includes a normal department, a kindergarten and a separate school for boys. Beginning in small rented rooms, the school occupies a handsome building of its own on one of the most fashionable streets in Berlin, and includes a beautiful country home for day pupils. Franklin Crain is now assisted by a staff of forty teachers, including eighteen professors of national distinction.—New York Sun.

It Takes Courage to Retrench.

Is the furniture getting shabby? Are our expenses this year so great that we can offer only the cheapest and simplest refreshments to our friends? Is it wisest to seek the establishment to a storm fearing, to answer one's doorbell one's self and lay down—not a carriage, indeed, for such an equipage would be out of place—but a French nurse, or a German governess, or a high priced cook, supplying their departments in other ways? Have much more courage does this reeding imply than selling still closer in disaster's face with all our old extravagances? Yet the courage is really on reduction's side.

To wear the last year's hat and a "benspeckle" gown—a good gown, but one that everybody knows you by, you have been seen at so often—takes a deal of courage, if you please, than to run in debt for new ones. While the old ones are perfectly good, yet so recognizable, this taking of rest is simply terror then to shine out in new finery.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Comforts for Servants.

Certainly the richest working woman in the house should have at night as comfortable a bed as anyone, but very often this is not the case even in luxurious houses, a surprising out being thought good enough for the girl's room, though in a city home, the room of the maid of all work is a small hall bedroom on the upper floor. This may still be next, even fine in its appointments, with dainty spreads, convenient toilet articles and a whole looking glass. There should be a harvest of rest in description, with a drawer reserved for her towels and bed linen, so that she need not call on the mistress for these things common enough in the rest of the chambers, but luxuries here.

A very good way to appreciate a girl's weariness by those who serve never is to take her place. After getting thoroughly tired out with still half the work undone, a mistress begins to understand what day after day of domestic toil means. When on Tuesday an ambitious girl is hurrying to complete a large ironing in one day, it is hardly fair to call on her repeatedly to do something else, as often happens when there is only one servant.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Children and Their Teeth.

All diseases which profoundly affect the nutrition influence the development of the teeth, and since the growth of the teeth is mainly limited to the age of childhood their condition is especially influenced by children's diseases.

Faulty nutrition or severe wasting illnesses show themselves nowhere more prominently than in the development of the bones and teeth. Of all the other hard, good teeth in children play a very important part in producing a healthful and robust manhood or womanhood. Decaying and loosened teeth directly favor imperfect mastication and consequent indigestion.

Indigestion favors poor nutrition. It causes the secretions of the mouth to become acid in reaction—a perversion of the normal reaction of the saliva, which attacks the teeth and favors their rapid decay.—Youth's Companion.

Cleaning Diamonds and Silver.

Diamonds can be cleaned at home to look as well as when done by a jeweler if only a little trouble is taken. They should be thoroughly cleaned in alcohol and then dried in boxwood sawdust. Ordinary sand is too oily for this purpose. Silver filigree may be brightened by washing it in ammonia and water, using a tiny brush and castile soap and drying in the same manner as diamonds. In case it is very much darkened and the stains refuse to disappear with ordinary treatment, a few drops of soda may succeed. Hyposulphite of soda should be purchased of a trustworthy druggist and used only according to his advice.—Philadelphia Press.

The Rights of Women.

Women being the mothers and nurses of human races have always been subservitude to men, owing to their love of children.

Mothers prefer to suffer and die, if need be, rather than let harm come to their offspring.

This is a divine condition all through higher animal life—the adnegation of the weak.

The natural place for woman is in the home, made happy by just industrial conditions and love.

It is right that women should have perfect freedom in the choice of occupations.—Dr. Henry S. Chase in Chicago Woman's News.

Lavender in Place of Camphor.

Lavender, dried and strewn in drawers and presses, is an excellent preventive of moths. For furs, feathers and other small belongings that need protection the aromatic flowers are especially useful, since they lend a fragrance as well as keep off the destroyer. Many women find the lingering odor of camphor or mothaline so exceedingly disagreeable that they prefer to run the risk of moths rather than use either. Such will welcome the new value of lavender.—New York Times.

The Country Wife in England.

A sad feature of country life is the lack of beauty in the women. Once the heyday of youth is passed and the haven of marriage is reached the woman of the people seems to lose all sense of vanity. Her figure grows bowed with the tummy, her face careworn and weary; one by one her teeth drop out and are not replaced, her hair becomes thin and often unkempt. She is the wife that gets tired, and long before she is middle age she is no longer the woman.—Lady Greville in London Graphic.

For Best Dresses.

It is often difficult in small rooms to find accommodation for evening and best dresses. An ingenious contrivance was shown me recently, and I am sure many women will be glad to hear of it. It consisted of a wooden box on castors, fitting underneath the bed, long enough to take evening dresses folded almost at full length. It was not quite as wide as the bed, and it could be drawn out very easily by means of a handle at each side.—Decorator and Furnisher.

Miss Ella Bradley publishes a small paper at New Orleans in the interests of colored women, hoping to raise their standard and give them a chance to express their own opinions.

Women in France receive much less in proportion to the work they do than the men, but notwithstanding this fact they draw 35 per cent. of the entire sum spent in wages.

In 1380 black masks were worn in public by ladies of all ranks. The mask was held in place by ribbons passed behind the ears, or by a glass button held between the teeth.

Mrs. Leland Stanford, wife of the California senator, is said to be liberal in her contributions to churches, irrespective of denominations.

A widow never wears a white wedding gown at her second marriage. It may be dove gray or any pale shade, but never white.

Ah, what a change! The hotel stands
As empty barn, deserted,
And locks across the tenantless sands
Where summer crowds thirsted.

A bowling waste of barren beach,
Forsaken by the million;
The hungry arms of ocean reach
The empty red pavilion.

Where once the band's Teutonic throats
Blew Wagner airs before us,
Now sound the deeper, grander notes,
Of summer's solitude.

The flower beds are choked and dead,
The beach has changed and shifted;
"Keep Off the Grass" is dimly read,
Where "Hands Off" was printed.

And on the board pinazza, where
I used to sit with Mabel,
There stands a weather beaten chair,
A seamed and worn out table.

And leaning up against a post,
In that once dear enclosure,
I see the grim and pallid ghost,
Of my two weeks' vacation!

SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS

OF NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY MEET IN THIS CITY.

They Convened Last Evening and Will Hold Meetings Until and Including Sunday Evening—Some Facts Concerning their Denomination in New Jersey.

The Seventh-Day Baptists of New York and New Jersey are holding their yearly meeting in this city. They convened last evening at 7:30 o'clock in the old Seventh-day church on Madison avenue.

On account of the stormy weather only a few of the delegates arrived yesterday.

The sermon last night was preached by the Rev. Mr. Bowen of Marlborough, N. J. This morning the Rev. Mr. Cottrell, of Shiloh, delivered an address.

To-morrow the business session will be held. The delegates present last night were: The Rev. Mr. Livermore, of New Market; the Rev. Mr. Burdick, of New York; the Rev. Mr. Bowen, of Marlborough, and the Rev. Mr. Cottrell, of Shiloh.

These yearly meetings have been held for nearly two hundred years. They were held alternately at the old Seventh-day Baptist church near New Durham, and at the West Jersey churches at Shiloh, Salem and Cohansey at that time.

The old Seventh-day Baptist church in Piscataway township is 188 years old. When the people, or great number of them, were called there, were held there people would attend from fifteen to twenty miles distant. Other churches would sojourn their meetings on Sunday to attend them. They would do this often enough with them to last several days. They had smart men to preach from Rhode Island and New York State.

The first Sabbatarian in New Jersey was found in Piscataway. A man by the name of Bonham who was at work in his field on Sunday, when another man named Dunham went to him and asked him to stop work. Bonham told Dunham if he could find anything in the Bible to show Sunday was the right day he would stop, but Dunham could not, so he went on keeping the Sabbath. Dunham was converted to Bonham's belief and he also became a Sabbatarian.

One of the first Seventh-day Baptist ministers in New Jersey was Mr. Edward Dunham, the man who tried to get Bonham to quit work. Some great, great, great grand children are well along in years, still living in this vicinity.

The first meeting houses were built at Squan, Cohansey and Piscataway, and these are the oldest in New Jersey.

The families of the Dunhams, Randolphs, Dunns, Woodens, Titsworths, Clawsons and Maxsons and others have always been identified with the Seventh-day Baptists, and ministers are familiar to the people of to-day.

Mr. Isaac Titsworth and Mr. Peter Wooden are the eldest Seventh-day Baptists in this locality.

HAVE YOU SEEN THE COMET?

It Can Easily be Detected with a Field Glass.

The great comet which is rushing toward the earth has now come into the field of vision so that it may be seen with the naked eye. From this time on it will grow larger and larger until next week, when, if the predictions of the astronomers be correct, it will be the most conspicuous object in the heavens. The comet's position at present is in the constellation Leo Minoris. That is the way the scientists indicate its whereabouts to each other, and a brief examination of an almanac will enable any amateur astroopomer to readily find it. In the earlier part of the evening it is almost directly overhead, near the zenith, where it can easily be detected with the aid of a good field-glass, and its position once known it can readily be found with the naked eye. Within two or three days the most casual observer cannot fail to notice the fiery monster. It has travelled millions of miles since it was discovered on the evening of Nov. 6. Since that time all the leading astronomers, both here and in Europe, have turned their telescopes upon it.

But whether the present comet is Biela's or an entirely new one, no doubt is entertained of its immense size and that it will come very close to the earth.

In finding the comet with the naked eye its distinguished reddish color should be remembered.

A Chicago man says that the comet will strike the earth and knock it into smithereens. But this need not cause any anxiety as scientists say the closest it will come to the earth will be 1,000,000 miles.

One of "Jack the Slasher's" Victims.

John Clark of Elizabeth was arrested last night for being drunk and disorderly. A sentence of 15 days in the county jail was imposed this morning by City Judge Codington. Clark was one of the victims of "Jack the Slasher," who cut several person's throats in New York several months ago. He has a scar from ear to ear across his throat, from a cut he received from that individual.

—The people of Pearl street are complaining again about the misconduct of Frank Conshea. They say they cannot get police protection. That the man is continually annoying them, and, though they complain, the man is not arrested. The misconduct, it is said, occurs nightly. It seems a shame that the people should be subjected to so much annoyance from this fellow, if what is said of him is true. The Mayor and Council ought to have tignte it and see why he is not locked up until he learns to behave himself.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"We Told You So."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Will you kindly give a place in your valuable paper to the enclosed from the New York Evening Post of Thursday?

STREET RAILWAYS IN PLAINFIELD.

When the Newark, N. J., street railway capitalists went to Plainfield, N. J., to secure a franchise for street-car privileges, they pointed to the prosperous condition of Newark as a reason why that the service there would be as good as it was in Newark, if not better in several ways, which has been for years past. Upon this they got a franchise for several months. Lately the street Railway Company has met with additional privileges, such as permits to extend its lines, etc., but it has failed to give any reason for these concessions. The good grading of streets that was to be given by the company for extensions in the fine streets, and when the other capitalists sought permission to place their tracks upon the city streets, the people, through their elected representatives in the Common Council to refuse the concessions without paying for Plainfield.

It is time that Plainfielders should stop the unwarrantable destruction of our streets and vehicles, for which so much money was uselessly expended. Front street is reduced to a mire the whole length of the street railway. Peace street is in a worse condition, and Grant avenue, formerly a beautiful, smooth thoroughfare, is now almost impassible from the uneven car rails and deep mud and gravel on each side of them. Are all our principal streets to be handed over for the use of the dangerous trolley, leaving no place and no rights to the unfortunate drivers of vehicles and pedestrians who are forced to pass through them? In the name of justice A protest from A SUFFERER.

[THE NEWS alone opposed the way in which the city's rights were frittered away by the old combine, which ruled the Common Council.—Ed.]

The present Council is comparitively helpless in the matter.

It is not too late, however, for North Plainfield to help itself.

THE NEWS favors rapid transit, when the streets are not damaged, and the city is protected in its rights.

We consider that streets which have cost the city so much to make as good as ours have cost ought to be more carefully guarded from ingorious trespassing.

The company don't care, for the worse the condition of the streets and walks the more people are likely to ride.—Ed.]

Denies a Girl's Story About a Stolen Ring.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—In your issue of Tesurday evening you mention that a diamond ring that was stolen from the City Hotel was pawned at my establishment. I wish to say I never advanced any money on the ring, nor never had it presented by the colored girl or any one else.

Yours respectfully,

SAMUEL DREYER.

Plainfield Can Reduce the Average

An advertisement in a New York journal quotes a leading medical authority for the statement that of every 21,000 young women 7,000 die of consumption. Why should this be so with the present knowledge we have of diseases and their causes, as well as the means of prevention and cure?

The most eminent physicians of New York refer to the climate of Plainfield as most beneficial in its results to persons inclined to bronchial and pulmonary complaints. But the climate will do no good to persons who keep themselves caged indoors instead of taking systematic open air exercise, the best form of which perhaps is bicycling, when not carried to excess. They tell of a physician who died some years ago over the mountain at a ripe old age, and who at his deathbed said to his son: "My son, if you would live long, and enjoy life as I have done, keep a clear conscience, a good digestion and regular habits," and the doctor might have added, "above all don't worry, for worry shadows the eyes, wrinkles the face, and ruins the health, even when one has a clear conscience, a good digestion, regular habits." The exhilarating activity of bicycling gives no time to worry and fills the lungs with the oxygen they so much require. Ed.] To avoid the disease which the authority we quote says carries off 7,000 of every 21,000 young women.

—Messrs. White and Van Arsdale say they are offering inducements of the best kind throughout every department of their large store. They ask special attention to their underwear, cost and house-furnishing departments. See their advertisement.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

YESTERDAY'S STORM.

Chicago Shut Off by Snow.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19. (Special.)—For over thirty-six hours not a click has been heard from the telegraph instruments connecting Chicago with all that division of the Northwest having St. Paul and Minneapolis as a centre. The only way those cities could be reached was by way of Omaha, Ogden, Utah, San Francisco and Helena, Mont., and back by the Northwestern route.

The storm started in with a heavy wind and rain, and the rain suddenly turned to snow, about a foot falling through Western Wisconsin, Northern Iowa, and Southern Minnesota. The rain froze on the telegraph wires, making them useless. The wires were broken and telegraph poles are down in every direction. The fall in temperature was very sharp.

A smash-up occurred on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road, but no lives were lost.

The extreme north of Minnesota and North Dakota are reported to have a storm all together, but it raged with greatest violence through central Iowa, where it has been impossible to get a single despatch into or out of any town between here and Council Bluffs.

Train Blown Over an Embankment.

DENVER, Nov. 19.—A passenger train on the South Park railway was last night, near Kenosha, blown from the track by a heavy wind and toppled over an embankment. Eleven people were hurt, but it is thought not fatally.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Women and Humor.

Every once in awhile comes the Young-man-who-knows-it-all and explains to us why women are lacking in the sense of humor. This time it is Mr. Stinson Jarvis, writing in The Century Magazine. Mr. Stinson Jarvis says it is because women must always have something to adore, though why the necessity of having something to worship should interfere with seeing the fun in the world is not plain to anybody but Mr. Stinson Jarvis. If the sex have any humor at all in their souls they will get considerable amusement out of the article in The Century, part of which is as follows:

Dazzled by her ideals, blind to all else when gazing on her idols, woman does not arrive at the comprehensive and whole-soled view of humorist, and consequently loses in her writing the great moral uses of the sense of absurdity which has done more to kill out error than all the argument of centuries, and has made Americans a free people more than any declaration of independence that ever was signed.

Again, women generally exist in one of two conditions—the imagining of a happiness to come, or the seeking for consolation because it is not or never arrived. Between these two, in a limited way, much more serious than the men who have given up hoping for society and have learned to smile or try to smile at life as it comes. This serious concentration, this continuous necessity for exacting herself, for either joy or consolation, a part of an adored idol; this picturesque passion for the ideal element; this willingness, prepared for a raison d'etre in anything she desires—all these phases are poles apart from the mind that has been immersed in the brutality of truth into seeing the world as it is, and can pause to portray the humorous side of its events.

The study of George Eliot and her works goes far to account that for some time female humorists will be scarce. She, more than any other authoress, attained the general view, but always present with her was her woman's hunger for something to adore, and she never recovered from the heart-starvation which a perfect education and love for truth forced upon her. With her intellect into human nature, even her satire was full of fathomless compassion that yearned over the very weakness she aimed to with and bravely rejected. She formed the eternal impossibilities, her sex's absolute need for a certainty, and the divinity of her ideals, made it impossible for her to be content with the humorous view of life, for this world, apart from its tragedy, is highly absurd.

Speaking vaguely, then, men may be good humorists as they find that they know nothing. Women are not humorists because they never cease to think they know something.

Meantime, are women destitute of the sense of humor?

PRESIDENT H. L. LOUCKS.

Annexation Is Nothing New.

So long ago as 1778, when the original articles of confederation were adopted by the founders of this republic, it was I did about the matter. Taubeneck and half a dozen national committeemen of the third party have held secret sessions here daily, and so far have shaped the entire policy of the organization through their tools on the convention floor."

Additional details of the exciting secret session are leaking out. Hinman, of Connecticut, called Scott a liar and a coward. Scott started toward him and half a dozen hands reached for hip pockets. Scott was pulled back and Hinman made a remark that was not pleasing to a delegate, and the latter rushed at the governor with a baseball bat used by the sergeant at arms to keep the peace. He was pulled away.

What the Alliance Demands.

The national Alliance's manifesto demands a national currency, safe, sound and flexible, issued by the government only, a full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and without the use of banking corporations; the free and unlimited coinage of silver and gold at the legal ratio of 16 to 1; that the amount of circulating medium be increased to at least fifty dollars per capita, exclusive of legal reserves, the establishment of a graduated income tax; that national legislation shall be so framed in the future as not to build up one industry at the expense of another, the establishment of postal savings banks; government control of telegraph and telephone lines and railroads; the prohibition of alien ownership of land and the reclamation of surplus lands for the benefit of settlers.

Among the Macune men are John H. McDowell, Governor Buchanan, Ben Terrell and Secretary Taylor. Terrell and Taylor, though elected to offices, are in sympathy with Macune, and when the signal is given their friends assert that they will cast their fortunes with the new body. Their election was an attempt to conciliate the Macune faction, but it was a failure.

The Knights and the Federation.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 19.—A business likely to have some far reaching results came up at the session of the Knights of Labor. In the report Mr. Powderly had recommended that national trade assembly No. 135 (miners) be instructed to withdraw from the United Mine Workers of America, alleging that the officers of the united body have treacherously used their position to destroy the K. of L. part of the joint organization. Some pretty strong speeches were made in support of the proposition. The general sentiment was that a policy of consolidation had been tried long enough.

The talk ended with a reference of the matter to the executive board, which was instructed to see that the interests of the order were considered.

The question of compelling members to withdraw from the Federation of Labor was then taken up and a long discussion ensued. The feeling was strongly against the leaders of the federation, but the opinion prevailed that there was no cause for difference between the rank and file of the two organizations. The proposition, therefore, was voted down—82 to 36.

But little surface interest is apparent regarding the election of officers. It is practically conceded that Grand Master Powderly will retain that office. General Secretary-Treasurer Hayes will also probably be re-elected. For several months the (woman or vice president) the fight is between John Cavanaugh, the present incumbent, and J. R. Sovereign, of Iowa.

Cholera Still at Hamburg.

HAMBURG, Nov. 19.—The board of health still refuses to give clean bills of health, as three cases of cholera have been reported in the city within the last few days.

Hudson County Democrats to Meet.

JERSEY CITY, Nov. 19.—The Hudson County Democratic committee appointed next Friday, from 7 to 9 p. m., for holding the primaries for the election of new members.

SPLIT IN THE ALLIANCE.

Third Party Men Cause a Bolt at Memphis.

PRESIDENT LOUCKS IS RE-ELECTED.

Dr. Macune and Others Who Are Opposed to Politics Capturing the Alliance Leave the Convention Hall and May Form a New Farmers' Organization.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 19.—There has been a big bolt in the national Farmer's Alliance, and President H. L. Loucks has been re-elected. The other officers chosen were Marion Butler, of North Carolina, vice president; L. H. Taylor, of Nashville, secretary; Ben Terrell, of Texas, national secretary. Members of executive board—L. Leonard, Missouri; Mann Page, Virginia; I. E. Can, New York; H. C. Deming, Pennsylvania. The third party slate was not broken.

The members who opposed the idea of the People's party capturing the body held a caucus, and resolved to form a new association embodying the doctrine of the Alliance, but holding aloof from politics. The Taubeneck crowd having captured the conference, many of the delegates refused to attend the executive session. They got together and effected a temporary organization and began to shape matters for the issuance of a manifesto.

What Dr. Macune Says.

Dr. Macune, who was one of the bolters, says: "I withdrew from the convention hall because the national committee of the People's party have come here and are attempting to secure control of the Alliance. Considering that these men were in control of the convention and had determined to carry out their measures, contrary to all Alliance traditions and principles, I withdrew from the hall, and shall remain out as long as such methods are being used to divert the purposes of the Alliance. The delegates who left the hall felt the same as I did about the matter. Taubeneck and half a dozen national committeemen of the third party have held secret sessions here daily, and so far have shaped the entire policy of the organization through their tools on the convention floor."

Additional details of the exciting secret session are leaking out. Hinman, of Connecticut, called Scott a liar and a coward. Scott started toward him and half a dozen hands reached for hip pockets. CRITCHLOW'S TRIAL BEGINS.

He Is the First of the Homestead Strikers to Be Arraigned.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 19.—The case of Sylvester Critchlow, the first of the Homestead strikers charged with murder, was called for trial before Judge Kennedy. Critchlow is charged with the killing of T. J. Connor on July 6 during the riots at Homestead. The prosecution is represented by District Attorney Burleigh. Messrs. Patterson, Robb, Knox and Reck, and the defense by Messrs. Argo of Sioux City, Erwin of St. Paul, Marshall, Montooth, Reardon, Brennan and Cox.

Mr. Brennan moved to quash the indictment and also the array of grand jurors because said grand jury was not impartially drawn and the slips on rolls of paper containing the names of the jury were not uniform. Mr. Brennan said he felt that the effect motion was, but there was a fear that the drawing may not be fair and impartial. Judge Kennedy overruled Mr. Brennan's motion to quash.

Among the witnesses was Captain John W. Cooper, of the Pinkerton force, who described Connors' position when wounded and fixed the hour. This was the most important point in his evidence, as it was followed up by witnesses who saw Critchlow at that time firing toward the barges in a direction he would have to hold to hit Connors. This is one of the strongest points the prosecution has against any of the Homestead men.

A Big Break in the Strike.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 19.—The mechanics and day laborers who have been out on a strike in sympathy with the members of the Amalgamated association at Homestead held a meeting and voted to apply for their old positions. The laborers were given employment, as were also a large number of mechanics. There were not enough vacancies to go around, however, and many were turned away. The 600 members of the Amalgamated association also held a secret meeting and voted to continue the fight independently. Secretary Lovejoy, of the firm, said he had no news from Beaver Falls, except that several hundred of the old men have applied for their positions. He said that now that the laborers at Homestead have returned to work, the firm has back the only men it needed, and the mill would in future operate as fully as in June.

Pinkertons on the Stand.

CHICAGO, Nov. 19.—Patrick Foley, captain of the protective patrol department of the Pinkerton agency, testified before the senate investigating committee that as a general thing Mr. Pinkerton would not send men to do "strike work" unless they were sworn in as officers. The men who went from Chicago to Homestead did not take arms with them. Mr. Pinkerton's orders were that the men should be armed with clubs only, and Mr. Foley confessed that he disobeyed orders in causing the men to take Winchesters. John W. Halloway, a Pinkerton man, who had been through all the Homestead trouble, gave a minute account of the fight on the barges. The Chicago men, so far as he knew, were not sworn in as deputy sheriffs. This was in direct contradiction to the testimony given before.

Titusville Oil Cases Decided.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—The interstate commerce commission has decided the three cases of the Independent Refiners' association, of Titusville and Oil City, Pa., against the Western New York and Pennsylvania Railroad company. The commission holds that where oil is transported by the carrier both in barrels and tank cars, and the use of the tank cars is not open to shippers impartially, the charge for the barrel package in barrel shipments, in the absence of a corresponding charge on tank shipments, resulting in a greater cost of transportation to the shipper in barrels, is a discrimination for which no legal justification has been shown in these cases.

Taft to recover nearly $100,000 alleged to be due as a part of the share of the profits of the sale of the New York and Boston Dispatch Express company, the Kinsley Express company and the Union Express company to the Adams Express company.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—Henry White, United States secretary of legation, gave a dinner at the Savoy to Sir William Harcourt, United States Minister Bayard and Director of the Mint Leech, Senator Jones and President Cannon, of the Cause National bank, the delegates to the monetary conference in Brussels.

A MATADOR HIS MASTER

Bullfighter Lovente Kills a Mad Steer in Harlem.

THOUSANDS SAW THE DEED DONE.

But the Battle Was an Impromptu Affair and the Crowd Kept Carefully Out of the Way—Nerve and During of the Young Spaniard.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—A Texas steer, tall, gaunt and bony, with horns three feet long, broke from the cattle yard at the foot of West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street and captured Harlem. An enormous crowd followed at the animal's heels, and shied everything available at it during its wild trip across town to Second avenue and back to One Hundred and Thirty-ninth street and Twelfth avenue. A dozen persons were trampled upon or tossed by the beast on the way. At the latter point Policeman McGuire stepped out from the crowd of yelling men and boys to show how easy it is to tame a steer. Policeman McGuire and his new locust west sailing skyward from the tip of the steer's horns.

Some one in the crowd took a good aim with a rifle and tore out the steer's right eye. Then there was a mad steer in reality. The animal ran up and down the street, then leaped over a fence and dashed madly around a large open field.

Enter the Matador.

The crowd was so great that it stopped the cable car, and a tall, slender young man, wearing a sketch hat, jumped off.

"I will catch the steer if I get permission," he said.

The nearest policeman, who had run five miles or more after the beast without coming within gunshot, assured the young man that no one would interfere with him except the wild beast. The wild young man got the rope from the cowboy and made a peculiar noise in it.

Then he vaulted over the fence. The steer was in a corner of the lot, about 200 feet away, and the young man ran toward the animal yelling like a madman. It looked like a case of deliberate suicide. The steer waited until the runner was close to him, and then lowered the murderous horns and made a dash for the foolhardy youth, who kept going straight ahead.

The steer gave a snort as when it reached the youth, but only bucked the air, and the victim stood at its side patting its back. He had escaped the attack by jumping aside at the right moment. The infuriated steer turned quickly and chased the young man across the field.

The Steer Neatly Caught.

As he ran he took off his coat, spread it open in his hands and held the noose so that it made a fringe to the coat. The steer, with lowered head, jumped at the youth. Then, quick as a flash, the coat was thrown in the steer's face, and with a dexterous movement the young man slipped the noose around the animal's neck and jerked it tight. It was only a second's work to twist the rope around a fence post.

The youth stood by with folded arms until the animal began struggling. Then he punctured the spinal cord in the neck with a knife and bowed gracefully to the cheers of a thousand voices. When it became known that he was Miguel Lovente, a bullfighter, and the son of a famous bullfighter of Linia de la Conspesion, Spain, his numerous admirers in the crowd grew explained. Miguel came to this country three years ago and lives at 37 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

The Fight Against Rev. Dr. Pierson.

LONDON, Nov. 19.—The Rev. Dr. Pierson's denials of the American interviews with him are not accepted by the Spurgeonite faction of the Tabernacle. The Spurgeonites will secure, if possible, affidavits from the reporters who talked with Dr. Pierson. SCHOOL QUESTION CONSIDERED.

The Archbishops Give Out the Result of Their Conference on That Point.

NEW YORK, Nov. 19.—The conference of the archbishops of the Roman Catholic church of the United States continued its sessions at Archbishop Corrigan's residence in this city.

The business of the council have been more protracted than were expected. It is stated on positive authority that the debates have been carried on altogether harmoniously, and that Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, and Archbishop Keane, of Milwaukee, have generally been on opposite sides in some heated arguments.

At the close of the session the council gave out the following statement:

"At the meeting of the archbishops of the United States, held at the residence of the most reverend archbishop of New York on Nov. 16, 1892, to consider the best means to provide for the religious education of such children as do not at present attend the parochial schools or Catholic schools of any kind, the assembled prelates unanimously agreed on the following resolutions:

"First—Resolved, To promote the erection of Catholic schools so that there may be accommodation in them for more and if possible for all our Catholic children, according to the decrees of the third plenary council of Baltimore and the decisions of the holy see.

"Second—Resolved, That as to children who at present do not attend Catholic schools, we direct in addition that provision be made for them by Sunday schools and also by instructions on some other day or days of the week, and by urging parents to teach their children the Christian doctrine in their homes. These Sunday and weekday schools should be under the direct supervision of the clergy, aided by intelligent lay teachers, and when possible by members of religious teaching orders."

WHAT FALL RIVER MEN THINK.

Views of the Manufacturers on the Recent Election.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 19.—The Journal has secured the opinions of Fall River manufacturers on the probable effect upon their business of probable tariff changes. The Journal says a majority of the manufacturers are Republicans and these worked diligently for Republican success. They do not appear, however, to be greatly alarmed now.

A few manufacturers say that they do not believe the McKinley bill contributed to the boom in their business last year. They hold that if machinery had always been free factories could have been erected more cheaply, and with abundant cotton nothing could have prevented them from making money.

An agent, who is well known as a conservative thinker and talker, says: "I am not greatly concerned about the cotton industry in Fall River, considered as a whole. The tariff on goods is so high that if it were tinkered with it would not benefit competitors across the water. I do not believe there is likely to be any appreciable change in the conditions here. What I most fear is a series of reductions covering a long period, which would make us uncertain as to what was coming and keep us on the ragged edge. I am not prepared to say that absolute free trade would ruin the country, though I believe the conditions on this side are so different from those in England that there is no necessity for a change at present."

Their Wages Increased.

LOWELL, Mass., Nov. 19.—The carpet corporations follow at the heels of the cotton mills and raised wages 7 per cent.

FASHIONS

NEW DRESS SKIRTS.

An Endeavor to Revive Panniers—The Clinging Skirts of the First Empire.

Shorter skirts for street dresses are no longer promised, but are an accomplished fact. Paris gowns seen at recent openings show fuller and shorter skirts. Some of these are known as the round skirt, and are made just short enough to escape the ground. Others are similar in outline to the bell skirt.

EMPIRE SKIRT FOR WALKING DRESS.

There is quite a conflict, it appears, among several of the leading Parisian dressmaking firms as to just what fashions shall be in vogue for the winter. One is endeavoring to revive the graceful style of Louis XV, with panniers—short skirts for day and long trains for evening wear—and of course with this a tournure will have to be used again. Other important houses—Felix among them—desire to bring back the modes of the First Empire, with short waists and clinging skirts. Time will prove. As yet these empire dresses have been prepared for the most part for balls or soirees. They would be extremely unpractical for walking or carriage wear, for if made with the corsage high they would not be at all pretty; so for the present dresses for day wear will continue to be made much as at present. It is improbable that the exaggerated empire style will take generally. Women with long waists and good figures will not care to hide them.

The new empire skirt illustrated in the accompanying cuts is designed especially for a walking dress. Although suitable for wearing with most of the fashionable bodices, it has been specially prepared to be mounted to a short, round bodice, with slight gathers in front and closer ones at the back. It can be made in any material, the stripes being represented on the diagram merely to give an exact idea of the way the stuff runs in the various pieces. It will take four yards of a 48-inch material for the skirt figure. For a complete skirt four pieces are required—two straight ones without seams for the front and the back, the latter being on an average three inches longer, and two triangular pieces for the side gores, which are each made from a straight, narrow breadth, with the edges cut off in a point toward the waist. This skirt, which barely touches the ground, is likely to be popular for outdoor wear. The new taffeta dress skirts are lined with silk throughout, with a silk ruffle, either knife plaited or accordion plaited, for a lalapeuse. Many of the skirts are left quite plain, others show rows of stitching, while others again are trimmed at the foot of the skirt with narrow rows of fur or velvet.

MR. BLAINE AGAIN ILL.

He Had a High Fever, but Is Not Considered in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Alarming reports were in circulation that ex-Secretary Blaine was dangerously ill, and many inquiries were made at the family residence on Lafayette square by personal and political friends. Mr. James G. Blaine, Jr., assured callers that nothing serious was the matter with his father. He had a high fever, he said, but this had been reduced, and he is resting very comfortably. There is no cause for any alarm.

Mr. Blaine took cold Tuesday, and by the advice of his physician immediately went to bed. The cold brought on the fever, which was the worst form of his sickness.

Georgia's State Bank Bill.

ATLANTA, Nov. 19.—An important bill has been introduced in the legislature to allow state banks to issue bills after said bank deposits as collateral state or municipal bonds to an amount equal to the notes. To protect the circulation then the state shall indorse the notes. The law is to take effect as soon as the governor is notified that congress has repealed the act levying a tax of 10 per cent. on the circulating notes of state banks.

The Navy's Big Coal Bill.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19.—Commodore George W. Dewey, of the naval bureau of equipment, reports that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1892, the sum of $35,675, including $26,948 for 35,017 tons of coal, was expended abroad for the maintenance of cruising vessels. Commodore Dewey estimates that over $1,500,000 will be required for the equipment of vessels during the next fiscal year.

Carlyle Harris' Appeal.

ALBANY, Nov. 19.—The return in the notice of appeal of Carlyle W. Harris from the judgment of conviction of murder in the first degree, rendered against him on Feb. 13, 1892, was filed with the clerk of the court of appeals. The story of the case which convicted Harris of administering poison to Helen Mary Neilson Potts on Jan. 31, 1892, makes 5,000 folios, covering 1,475 type printed pages.

The Weather.

Slightly colder and clear.

The Interpretation Thereof.

Willie—Mamma, I dreamed last night that I had a fight with a grizzly bear as big as a house, and he tore me 'most all to pieces. Does it mean anything when you dream like that?

His Mamma (taking him tenderly but firmly across her knee)—Yes, my son, it does. It means that I know now exactly what became of that plate of cold ham that was left after our supper last night. [Whack! Whack! Whack!]—Exchange.

Parental Joys.

Fond Father—Why, Tom, what have you got there—my watch?

Tom—Yes.

Fond Father—And what is that in your other hand?

Tom—The can opener. I wanted to open the watch. I blow on it several times, and I'm tired. It's broke, 'cause it wouldn't open.—Harper's Bazar.

Harry (who had some money given him to spend at the fair)—Papa, things were so cheap at the fair that thirty cents of my money was wasted. Papa—Wasted! Harry—Yes, I didn't spend it.—Brooklyn Life.

Husband (going off on a hunt)—I know I'll miss you while I'm away, dearest. Wife—Of course you will. You always miss everything when you are off hunting. —Life.

A lady named Mary Ann Elridge had occasion to send a note to a gentleman, and put two r's in her first name in the signature thus, "Marry Ann Elridge." The man was a bachelor, and consequently took the hint. He married Ann Elridge. —Tit-Bits.

Science Notes.

DOUBLE REFRACTION.

Personal Experience Illustrating This Phenomenon of Vision.

Some discussion is now going on between recent observers of Mars as to the reality of the gemination or doubling to the sight of the Schiaparelli's lines representing the canals of Mars. Apropos of this, a correspondent of Science gives the following bit of personal experience, which points to what seems to him the explanation of the error, if one exists. He says: "The lens in my left eye possesses the power of double refraction. If I close the right eye and look at a line drawn obliquely, as at No. 1, the paper being held squarely in front of me, I see nothing peculiar; there is to me, as to any one else, only one ordinary black line; but if the line slopes, as at No. 2, I see two lines, the lower one being decidedly less black than the other. As I now hold the paper—the bottom toward me—No. 1 appears as a single line. Next comes a double one like No. 3. If now I turn the side of the page toward me, revolving it through an arc of 90 degs., No. 1 shows double and No. 2 single.

"If I draw a set of single lines, as at No. 4, and look at them with both eyes, or with my right eye alone, I seemingly see many single lines; but if I close my right eye, then with my left I see two lines, each original line being geminated by a fainter one exactly parallel and precisely close to it, as in No. 5. If now I turn No. 4 to the right or left the double images will approach each other, and at the same time slide by each other a little until I have turned the paper 90 degs., when the images will coalesce, each line appearing sharply defined, single and very black, except at each end, where, for about a sixteenth of an inch, the color will be fainter and the line less sharply defined.

"The application to the lines in Mars is very simple. If a person possessing an eye with this power should see the planet's image in the telescope and be able to perceive the Schiaparelli lines, he would see each accompanied by a twin line of the same length, but not quite so sharp and distinct.

"I know from my own experience that one may possess this power without being conscious of it. I discovered it only when experimenting on single vision. In ordinary use, with both eyes, I cannot perceive any indication of it. One can easily test his own eyes by making a black dot on a piece of white paper and examining it with one eye at a time. If he possess this power he will see two dots pretty close together, one much darker than the other. Then by a little effort the paper—the paper will go around, but the dots will retain their relative positions. If, for example, the normal dot is to the right of the

Who Named the Flowers?

"Who named the flowers?" asks Walter Besant, and proceeds to answer his own question thus: "Even perhaps, after Adam had named the creatures. I think, dear ladies, that Eve must have named the flowers, because her daughters are so fond of them. They were named before the time of Solomon, as we know. But how comes it that so many flowers have the same fancy names in more than one language? Thus, to take some common wild flowers, quinsy wort is in French herbe à l'esquinance; clematis is called by country folk beggars' weed; in French it is herbe aux gueux; mignonette—little darling—is herbe d'amour; scurvy grass, also called spoon grass, in France and Holland, is herbe à la cuiller; pansy is herbe à pensée; money wort is herbe aux ecus. How did these names come to be alike in both languages? On the other hand, some of the French names are not in the least like our own. Black henbry, for instance, is herbe aux femmes battues; centaury is herbe aux boulets; rib wort, or tongue is herbe aux mille miracles; goosefoot is herbe du bon Henri, and willow herb is herbe Saint Antoine."

Deadening Floors.

A method of deafening or deadening floors, attributed to General Loyre, is described in a French exchange. Instead of loading the floor with pieces of the joists, plan to fill in the space between the boarding and the plastering of the ceiling with shavings which have been refreshed immediately before by dipping them in a tub of thick whitewash. As it is known that soft substances inclosing air spaces form an excellent nonconducting material to sound, it is thought that the shavings so treated will be found of great service, and it is said they will be found valuable as adding considerable to the fire resisting properties of the building. When it is desired to disinfect the space between the floor and ceiling the shavings may be saturated with chloride of zinc, or the latter may be added to the lime wash.

Economy in the Use of Boiler Water.

Where fuel is expensive and water not abundant it has been found economically practicable to use continuously the same water for condensing purposes by allowing it to cool, or if the supply is too small to allow of cooling by natural radiation to hasten the process by causing the water to flow in thin sheets and in same cases forcing a current of air over it when thus in motion. Such an arrangement formed one of the exhibits of the Frankfort exhibition, and is described by Power.

Another method, illustrated by The Street Railway Review, consists apparently of spraying the water in circular sheets from four fountains in a large pond, also in jets from a pipe encircling the pond.

The Leaping Spider.

Science tells that the leaping spider in its mode of hunting reminds one forcibly of the devices employed by the cat family. It will lie concealed within its nest, watching with a long patience for the coming of its prey. When it appears the spider creeps gradually forth, approaching with the utmost caution, advancing, retreating, moving to the right or left, as the insect moves, till near enough, when, jumping—usually sideways—it pounces with a sudden, tiger like leap upon its victim, secures it, and then carries it away to eat at its leisure, or to preserve for future use, as necessity may urge or fancy dictate.

THE HOUSEHOLD

HOUSE DECORATION.

A Pretty Boudoir in Blue and White—A Yellow Room—Valance for a Brass Bed.

A pretty boudoir, described by The Decorator and Furnisher, has the walls in blue, with figures in white in geometrical designs. The ceiling is painted white, with a frieze of light blue and white. In the corner stands a bed of white enamel and brass, over which is thrown an exquisite white spread. The floor is covered with a rich carpet in fawn and white. In another corner stands a dresser in polished oak, with a beveled glass mirror on which are tastefully arranged on a pretty scarf, pieces of silver and a manicure set in frosted silver. On the walls are hung some very pretty etchings. In the center of the room is a table, over which is thrown a beautiful scarf of light blue silk. The windows are hung with curtains of silk corresponding in color with the rest of the room. The furniture pieces, no two of which are alike, are all in light woods, and altogether it is an exquisitely light and cheerful boudoir.

For a yellow room, the authority already mentioned suggests that the wall be covered with a pale yellow paper, with a deep frieze of sterling, narcissus, etc., on a cream ground. Plain yellow matting, and for winter black fur rugs have an excellent effect with it. The couch in this room will have a cover of cretonne in a pale yellow ground, with large yellow flowers, and pillows for the back of the same. The furniture may be either of willow or of plain white. The shelf over the mantel piece is five feet from the floor, and this is draped with a pale yellow scarf, and bobls an engraving and some pieces of china in yellow. All the china is yellow or white, and the table covers are white, with yellow silk embroidery.

Brass beds are recommended as cleanly, handsome and durable. Many ladies have, however, found fault with them, because they clash with the muslin mattress where the clothes are tucked in over the upper one. This can be remedied by making a valance, which is finished with a ruffle at the top, which can be fluted, and the whole tied on by tapes. Two or three of these will be all that a housekeeper needs if white, or they may be in merino, in colors to match the room.

A Novelty in Pincushions.

This cushion is intended to hold only hatpins, and which is made to resemble a roll of paper or muslin. Make the pincushion itself cylindrical in shape, about 8 inches long and 2½ inches wide. Instead of making the ordinary bran filled case, it is a good plan to use a long strip of flannel, and so roll it up rather tightly until it is of the size required. Hold the end of the flannel in place with a few stitches and cover each end of the roll with silk, satin or any other convenient scraps. The cover may be of paper chosen to look as much like a business document as possible, or may be, on the outside at least, a sheet of music. It should be rolled round the foundation of the cushion several times, so that there are at least six layers of paper, the edge being fastened down with paste or gum. The ends of the roll of course are not covered with the paper, as the bonnet pins are pushed into the pincushion in that place. Round the middle of the cylinder is tied a piece of wide pink tape, a loop being also made by which the pincushion can be hung to the handle of the dressing glass.

Surface Ornamentation of Wood.

Our cut represents a design for a table top, which can be carried out in the now fashionable pyrographic or poker work, or by painting, staining or inlaying. After having been properly enlarged on tracing paper or linen the design has to be transferred to the surface of the wood. If intended for pyrographic work, the outlines of the design are burned in first with the pointed bensine burner, and the parts which appear solid black in the engraving worked with pointed, equal diameter and of the size of a small lentil placed together, while the ground is carried out in tiny dots or line veining.

DESIGN FOR TABLE TOP.

For working the design in painting, the outlines are traced with sepia, the solid black parts filled in with lampblack and the ornaments with a light shade of sienna, the veining being carried out with sepia and burnt sienna on a pale sepia background. Another color combination is dark brown for the solid black parts, olive green for the leaves, bright yellow for the scrolls and rosettes, burnt sienna for the background, and carmine mixed with black for the veining. The same color scheme holds good for staining and imitation inlaying. After the decoration has been finished one of the ways described above the surface has to be waxed. To this end ordinary yellow beeswax is cut into small pieces, placed in a glass vessel and just covered here with turpentine until the mixture forms by stirring, a semi-fluid paste, which is then spread thinly over the surface of the wood, and, when nearly dry, polished with a stiff brush.

Hickory Nut Cookies.

Beat four eggs very light, whites and yolks separately. Into the yolks stir two scant cupfuls of sugar and then the beaten whites. Add a pint of flour, a heaping teaspoonful of cream tartar powder and a pint of nuts cut in small pieces and rolled in flour. Mix quickly and thoroughly, and drop a small spoonful at a time upon greased and floured pans. Bake half an hour on the middle of each cook and bake in a very moderate oven twenty minutes.

A Nice Little Breakfast Dish.

Take some little paper cases and put in each a piece of butter the size of a walnut, with a little finely chopped parsley, and place these cases over a clear fire on a gridiron, and as soon as the butter begins to melt break a fresh egg in each, strew over it salt, pepper and bread crumbs, let it cook over a gentle fire, brown it with a red-hot shovel, and serve.

VENTILATION.

Not Carbonic Acid but Organic Matter Is Baneful in the Air.

In a paper on the subject of the ventilation of public buildings, read before the Royal society of Edinburgh, Dr. J. Hunter Stewart advanced the theory that it is not the carbonic acid but the organic matter in the air which has the baneful effect on public health, and if the organic matter could be got rid of the question of ventilation would be simpler and cheaper.

He said that the origin of this organic matter had been very generally attributed to respiration, but that view had now been definitely set on one side, and experiment had shown that the breath was not to be blamed as the source of the organic matter in badly ventilated buildings. The impression of a German army doctor who had all the soldiers of a particular barrack compulsorily bathed, with the result of a very marked improvement in the state of the ventilation, and he added that if persons could be by law compelled to bathe regularly, and to have their clothes periodically cleaned, the ventilation necessary for the healthy existence of persons would be very much smaller than it is.

Lubrication.

A handsome, clear skinned woman of fifty, who might have passed for twenty years less than her age, when questioned as to her methods of preservation replied promptly, "I lubricate, that's all; just lubricate, as the old Greeks did." To the question, "What do you use?" this modern follower of an ancient custom replied: "Glycerin, olive oil and vaseline. You'll have to experiment and see what suits you, as I did." So the list was tried. Glycerin diluted with rosewater proved excellent for the hands and face, as well as for cleansing the scalp; olive oil was good to rub into the skin after a plunge, and vaseline on the feet after a pilgrimage rendered them as supple as the proudest's.

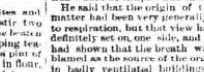
Then came the question for more detailed information, her "movements" and "percussions." "I use cocoanut oil," she said, and it was found to be just the thing—clean, fragrant, easily absorbed, leaving no trace in garments coming in contact with it.

Try it, you who are "on tired that you ache from head to foot." It looks like an exertion, but rest assured that the refreshing oil does half the rubbing, and sinking into dry, fevered skin and stiffened joints revives and strengthens the rubber, so that the finishing off is done with a flourish. If the back of the neck and shoulders are the same from bending over writing, a rub with cocoanut oil makes them as good as new. And there is nothing better for the painful result of sitting in a draft—a stiff neck.

The Nutrition of the Scalp.

Oils and fats should be employed to a greater extent than is now done for toilet purposes. This is particularly true with regard to the growth of hair. The nutrition of the scalp should be increased by the rational application of fats (for example, in the forms of oil, fatty by means of the application at night of a piece soaked in oil upon the scalp) and the greater use of simple pomades. These should be applied to the roots of the hair rather than the shafts.

Substances should be avoided or sparingly used which abstract water from the skin and the roots of the hair, says Dr. Von Thienessen, an authority on skin disease.



CONCERNING WEDDINGS.

Good Form as It Now Prevails for Fashionable Marriages.

In a comprehensive article on wedding etiquette in Harper's Bazar occur the following useful items:

No one hour is more fashionable than another for a wedding. Many large weddings are arranged for the evening this fall.

If a wedding entertainment is to be given, it usually immediately follows the marriage ceremony, which may take place either at church or at home, quite privately or in the presence of numerous friends, who are also invited to the entertainment. Invitations may be sent to either marriage or entertainment separately. Invitations to a church ceremony may be sent to many friends, while a limited number are asked to the ensuing entertainment at home. This church invitation reads, "Request the honor of your presence," or "Request your presence," the name of the church being printed immediately below the date.

Again, the marriage ceremony may be performed in the presence of only a few friends, in church or at home, and the invitation may simply request the presence of your company at the wedding reception of their daughter," the hours "4 to 6" or "6 to 10" being added.

The announcement of a marriage needs to reply. Neither does an invitation to a church ceremony only. Your presence at a wedding or reception is a reply. If you do not attend, your card should be sent at the appointed time. In case of repeated receptions a card sent to the last one is sufficient. Wedding gifts may be sent at any time after cards are received, but are not shown except to intimate friends and privately. Each gift should be acknowledged by note or personal thanks of the bride.

In the case of a church full dress wedding the bride is attended by a maid of honor and bridesmaids, and the groom by a "best man." The ushers—usually four in number—are at the church early to receive and conduct guests to seats. The guests may be in walking or visiting costume, or perhaps in the full dress in which they afterward assist at the reception.

The front seats are reserved for the family and near friends—those of the bride upon one side and those of the groom upon the other. The ushers inquire of each guest upon which side he wishes to be seated. These seats are divided from the rest of the church by a white satin ribbon, which is taken down and put up after each arrival with commendable assiduity.

Fashions in Sealskin.

The long, full, circular cape, or round mantle, is the favorite shape for sealskin. It is light, warm and elegant, and is generally trimmed with sable or mink. Persian lamb or mink, astrakan and sable are all favorite trimmings for sealskin jackets, which are made three-quarter length, the collars roos voluminous than of yore, the sleeves larger, with gauntlet cuffs, and some jackets are made with full sacque back.

Nothing at All to Fear.

It was a terrible risk. Not a man was there in all the vast throng who dared brave the dangers of hissing flames and tottering walls.

Human lives hung in jeopardy, waiting in awful suspense for some intrepid rescuer.

"I will save them."

A thousand faces turned eagerly at the sound.

They saw a woman.

With flashing eyes and heaving bosom she paused a moment. Fragile as she was there was that in her aspect which filled the multitude with awe. Spellbound, the people breathed not.

"Stand aside!"

A burly fireman had barred the way of the heroine.

"Stand aside, thunderbird!" he exclaimed. "Have you no fear, girl?"

She laughed scornfully.

"Look you"——

She darted a withering glance upon the man.

——"for ten years I have worn in public every species of head gear that garment brought out during that time. Do you imagine I am afraid of anything?"

With a bound she was lost to view among the blazing timbers.—Detroit Tribune.

Proclamation by the Governor.

In accordance with the law and established custom in this State, the Executive each year sets apart a day of Thanksgiving and prayer, on which the people may rest from their labor and assemble in their homes and places of worship, to acknowledge and return thanks to Almighty God for his goodness and mercy, and pray that he will continue to bless them with abundance and prosperity.

Therefore, I, Leon Abbett, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby designate THURSDAY, THE TWENTY-FOURTH DAY OF NOVEMBER, instant, as a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, and recommend that the people of this State, on that day abstain from all secular avocations, assemble in their usual places of worship, and give thanks to God for his infinite goodness in the past, and invoke for the future his blessings upon the nation, the State and the homes of our people.

Given under my hand and privy seal, the Executive Chamber, in the city of Trenton, on this fifteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-two.

—The wooden sidewalks of the borough are in a disgraceful condition. When is it that they are not so? Isn't it near time some attention was given to this subject and careless property owners compelled to put down walks that do not put one's life in jeopardy? There are people who think it is high time that something was done to abate this nuisance.

—"Bicycler Burr says: "Two things will strike Plainfield in the next few days, Bieln's comet and the 'Staggers quette' of the Bicycle club." Fortunately, the latter strikes first on Saturday night—and after having enjoyed it we who are lucky enough to be male citizens can view unconcernedly the wreck of manner and the crash of limb that may occur on Sunday. See 3d' in want column."

—Between ten and eleven o'clock last Monday evening, a fire was discovered in the rear of the building occupied by Dr. Mosier's drug store. The doctor made the discovery and managed to extinguish the flames, which were burning the fence leading to the Saengerbund Hall. The matter was placed in the hands of Marshal Pangborn. He and the doctor were satisfied that the fire was the work of an incendiary. They have suspicions of a person that have not yet sufficient evidence to make an arrest.

TO MAKE OTHERS HAPPY

DONATIONS MADE BY THE WARREN UNION MISSION.

To the Children's Home Yesterday—A Table at the Chapel Laden with the Gifts, Consisting of Useful Articles.

As the officers, teachers and scholars of the Warren Union Mission were wending their way to the Sunday-school yesterday, their hands were filled with packages, to be given as a Thanksgiving offering to the Children's Home.

A large table had been placed across the rear of the platform in the chapel, and as the gifts were presented they were placed on it making a large number of packages piled on top of each other, consisting mostly of substantial food mingled with other useful articles.

At the opening of the school a programme suitable to the occasion was carried out, consisting of music, Scripture reading and recitations by Carrie Kister, Bessie Corn and Agnes Morse.

At the close of the school session a collection was also taken for the Home, amounting to $10.75.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hodge of Somerset street had as their guests yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Hodge of Finderne, father and mother of the former.

Erkurius B. Dunham, uncle of Postmaster E. R. Pope, of this city, died of pneumonia at Rahway, Nov. 10th, aged 87 years, 7 months and 16 days.

Miss Laura Benton, daughter of Mr. William S. Benton of Rahway road, died last night, after a lingering illness from consumption. Deceased was twenty-four years old. The funeral services will be held at the residence of her parents, No. 42 Rahway road, Wednesday, Nov. 23, at two o'clock, p. m.

The following young ladies will assist at the Thanksgiving sale, to be held in the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Theresa May returned to her home in this city yesterday from Long Island, where she went to visit her father-in-law about three months ago. Mrs. May met with a painful accident while there, from which she is not recovering. She was getting out of a carriage when she slipped and severely sprained her ankle.

The congregation at the Park Place chapel last evening was favored with a sermon by ex-Mayor L. V. F. Randolph, on the Prophet Elijah. It was styled an "address," but by whatever name it may be known it will be long remembered. It was a remarkably clear and vivid picture, presented in the terse, scholarly manner so characteristic of this gifted gentleman. To hear the story of the prophet as so admirably and impressively told by Mr. Randolph gives a keener appreciation of the oratoria of "Elijah," and helps to a better understanding of the story as told in the Old Testament.

Dr. Howard King Carroll, who has been gathering statistics of religious bodies for the United States Census, has prepared a report on that will make 1,000 quarto pages, and it will soon be issued from the Government Printing Office. It is believed that this will be the most exact accurate collection of such data ever made. His statistics include every religious body, not excepting the Chinese, Buddhist and the Theosophical Society; also all independent congregations. Dr. Carroll is an ordained local preacher and has charge of a new chapel just opened in Plainfield, N. J. Dr. Carroll is also one of the board of visitors of the Woman's College of Baltimore, and thinks it one of the most institutions in the world. Syracuse University conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1886.—Tribune.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ABOUT UNUSED LANDS.

Its Effect on the Prosperity of a Community.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS:—Resuming the argument where my last letter left, we have seen:

(1) That all wealth is derived from the surface of the planet we inhabit by the application to it of man's labor, and

(2) That in the earliest social state the impulse usually is to apply such labor simply—each working for himself.

From this rude method two priceless benefits result — half-maintenance and personal liberty. Such an organization of labor, however, provides for the most urgent physical needs only—food, shelter and clothing—absorbing the entire day, moreover, for the purpose and leaving no leisure for higher ends. Is there in the divine any provision for satisfying these higher needs? Theoretically we must suppose there is, observation quickly confirms the supposition.

One of the things which first arrests the attention in watching a number of men set to do work of the same kind is the varying skill with which they do it. This diversity shows itself always. One man, for instance, is a better woodsman than any of his fellows: another builds better houses, a third excels all others in making shoes; another has a special knack at gardening; and so universally. Here is the instrument provided in the divine scheme for relieving man from the long embruting strain of manual labor, otherwise necessary each day for mere maintenance and affording that leisure which is necessary to satisfy the demands of man's higher nature. One of the first impulses, therefore, of the primitive social state, as it prepares to move up to a higher plane, is to set apart certain individuals for the performance of that particular work for which they show a special aptitude. And to this process everything conspires. Not only are the individuals so differentiated impelled to the doing of such particular work by the greater ease with which they do it, but the community is benefited by the superiority of the product thus obtained and the greater rapidity with which it is produced, while the restriction of effort on the part of these special workers continually leads to the invention of improved processes which still further expedite the general process.

This principle of the division of labor is operative in certain members of the community from miscellaneous work and assigning them to particular work not immediately productive of the necessaries of life is the distinguishing feature of the civilized State. Every individual, however, who thus quits the ranks of primary to enter those of secondary labor, necessarily decreases the supply of the necessaries of life produced by the community, and not only determines some other individual to the cultivation of the soil to support this secondary worker, but causes a demand for a larger area to be put to use to furnish that greater amount of raw material which the increased skill and improved processes of the secondary worker necessitate. There is one condition, therefore, which, in making the change from barbarism to the civilized State, must be observed: access to the surface of the earth must be always unobstructed. He who, for the good of the community, ceases to practice self-maintenance by ceasing to apply his labor directly to the surface of the earth, and consents to apply it in ways which do not minister directly to his physical support, is entirely to the same certainty of support that he completely enjoyed. There is, in other words, a virtual contract between him and the community of which he is a part, they guaranteeing him maintenance, he guaranteeing them, so to speak, civilization. Now, there is only one way in which this guaranty, on the part of the community, can be made good, by jealously preserving in the civilized State that condition which in the primitive State ensured to every member his power of self support—in other words, by keeping the land at all times open to the demands of labor.

Even from this imperfect exposition of the mechanism of industry, therefore, one fact stands clearly out—the vital relation borne by land to human welfare. Land is the raw material upon which industry is exerted, the medium through which the bounty of the Creator is conveyed to man. It depends, therefore, upon the adjustments we make concerning it, whether the benefits which flow from it shall be equitably distributed. Nothing can be clearer than that the use of land is the one thing which should not be subject to individual caprice. Possession of it there must be, and security for all improvements put upon it, but private ownership—the power of the individual to withhold from use—if exercised, checks instantly the process of civilization and throws into disorder the entire industrial system.

It is this aspect of the matter, which, as a practical question, is presented to us. In determining whether village, town or city, a few persons hold land out of use, either literally and formally, or, which is the same thing, by asking for it a prohibitory price. Those few hold, as it were, in the hollow of their hands the prosperity of such community. For by their act a check is applied to the natural process of industry at its very starting point, throwing men out of employment as a consequence, and causing, through the competition among laborers thus produced, the wages of the lowest paid laborers—the majority, in other words—to drop to the point of mere subsistence. This exceptional hardship, moreover, is only possible through the grossest favoritism. For these few enjoy a special exemption in the matter of taxation, their unused land being rated by the assessor at much less than used land of equal value. The community, in other words, through its assessor, specially rewards the very persons who specially injure it. The one question of overshadowing pertinence, therefore, is: Why should the community blindly continue to discriminate in favor of a system which is not only of itself a flagrant injustice, but tends with increasing power to deprive men of employment, force wages down to the starvation point and create paupers?

I propose to show in another letter that the abolition of this system would be of incalculable benefit to every member of the community, these favored ones included.

ANOTHER CASE OF DIPHTHERIA.

But the Board of Health is Again on Hand.

Plainfield's Board of Health is second to none in the State, and this fact is becoming more and more apparent every day.

Saturday afternoon a case of diphtheria was reported to the Board, and the prompt action of Health Inspector Dunham again stopped the disease from spreading.

The case was that of the little four-year-old girl of Rudolph Wechler of South Second street. The house was quarantined Saturday immediately after the case was reported.

Yesterday the child died and was buried soon after. Later in the day the house was thoroughly fumigated to kill all the germs of the disease.

City Court Cases.

A man named Smalley, arrested by Policemen Frederickson and Kiely, was taken before Judge Codington this morning to answer to the charge of drunkenness. He pleaded guilty and was fined two dollars.

Martin Bolmer, arrested for interfering with an officer, was tried this morning before City Judge Coddington, found guilty and was sentenced to pay a fine of fifteen dollars or spend twenty days in the county jail.

Annie Ward, for being intoxicated, was arrested by Policeman Saunders. City Judge Codington fined her three dollars this morning.

Thos. H. Cavalier was fined three dollars this morning, by Judge Codington, for being drunk and disorderly.

The Finest in the State.

Mr. Frank L. C. Martin is having his bicycle emporium, on Park avenue, fitted up with extensive improvements, and when completed he says he will have the finest place of the kind in the State.

He is having a room put in order for the use of bicyclists as a reading and smoking room.

The cellar is to be used for the storage of bicycles of commuters who wish to leave their wheels until they return from New York.

Mr. Martin has just received a "bake oven," which is to be used in enameling bicycles. After the enamel is put on, the wheel is placed in the oven for the enamel to bake.

Jr. O. U. A. M.'s Thanksgiving Sermon.

Yesterday, being the Sunday before Thanksgiving, was set apart by the governing authorities of the Jr. O. U. A. M., as the proper day for the order in general to attend divine service. In pursuance of the regulation, Franklin Council, No. 45, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of this city, proceeded in a body at 7.15 o'clock to Trinity Reformed church on Second street, and listened to a discourse by the pastor, the Rev. Cornelius Schenck. The services throughout were very interesting.

The City Election.

The city election takes place Tuesday December 6, and there will be elected on that day a Mayor, City Judge, City Assessor, City Collector, City Treasurer, three Commissioners of Appeal, and a School Commissioner from the city at large, together with a Common Councilman, justice of the peace and constable from each of the four wards in the city. Primaries will be held by the Republicans to-night and to-morrow night for the purpose of nominating candidates for ward offices.

LATEST NEWS BY WIRE.

Terrible Flood Out West.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 21. (Special.)—Reports received from the districts visited by the recent storms show a far greater loss than was at first anticipated. At Sedro several lives are reported lost, and fatalities are reported in other towns. Many cities are under water four or more feet deep, and the people are removing their effects to higher ground, fearing a still greater rise. The Skagit river is so full of logs and drift that navigation is suspended. Nearly a million feet of logs came down yesterday, tearing out the pier of the Wadon bridge, at Mount Vernon, and snapping the spiles off like frail weeds. The bank of the river are lined with crowds watching the mad torrent.

Christian Science vs. Rattlesnake Bite.

GUTHRIE, O. T., Nov. 21—(Special)—A number of Christian Scientists have been holding meetings near here. A few nights ago one of the leaders told those present that if they had faith they could pick up a rattlesnake and the reptile could not bite them. The next day a recent convert of the name of Southers saw a rattlesnake, and, thinking to test the matter, picked it up. The animal fastened its fangs in his arm but he refused to have medical attention, and has since died, despite the many long prayers of his fellow believers in faith.

Killed for Six Ears of Corn.

ALEXANDRIA, La., Nov. 21, (Special.)—In a quarrel about six ears of corn Elgee Allen was shot and killed by Jesse Price last night. Both were colored.

Alcohol for Diphtheria.

The Medical Times says alcohol is the prince of antiseptics, and in diphtheria the most perfect and reliable medicine known. Diluted with equal parts of water and given small and repeated doses, the malignant symptoms of this most fatal malady soon disappear, and the patient gains a general access to the blood. The Times recommends that people exposed to diphtheria use diluted alcohol as a gargle and swallow a little of it three or four times a day.

For Musical Development.

On Wednesday evening next, November 23d, class work under the leadership of Mr. Charles W. Allen, a young member of the gymnasium of the Bicycle Club. Mr. Allen, although quite young, has had long experience in gymnastic work under the New York Turn Verein system.

The Club desires that all members who desire their muscles well developed join the class.

Dinners for the Poor.

The Relief Association proposes this year, as hitherto, to give out Thanksgiving dinners to its beneficiaries and others as possible. For this purpose, donations of poultry, vegetables, fruit, etc., are asked for, and should be sent to the Relief Rooms, 45 West Second street, on Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning, before ten o'clock.

The Fair will be Continued To-Night.

The fair, held in Thorn's block, by the Ladies' Aid Society of the German church, North Plainfield, last week, will be continued to-night, because of the stormy weather the opening days of last week.

Oddities in Advertising.

What human needs are there so peculiar or unusual that they may not be advertised with fair chances of success? For example:

WANTED—A man to straighten weather vane on church steeple. Address Francis Reilly, Montgomery, N. Y.

Old Rip Van Winkle is quite outdone if we may judge by faith in the following, which is taken from an English periodical:

DRUNK NEARLY ONE HUNDRED YEARS.

This piece of startling information is used as the heading of a cocoa advertisement.

A curiously worded advertisement is taken from a cotemporary. The reader wonders what kind of a freak is expected:

A New York auctioneer advertises:

EDITORIAL NOTES.

You lose much of your success by publishing to all the world your plans, hopes and ambitions. Keep them to yourself.

The distilleries in the whisky making districts of the country have enormously increased their manufacture of liquor this fall, we are told. Perhaps this has no connection with the reported scarcity of water in many parts of the country, but the fact is suggestive; it is indeed.

The precautions against cholera are still to be continued to the extent of discouraging immigration and imposing a quarantine of twenty days on all who have come from infected ports. Rags or other merchandise from cholera countries will be thoroughly disinfected or forbidden to come into the country at all. These precautions are taken in view of a possible outbreak of cholera next spring.

There are living three widowed duchesses of Marlborough, not counting the late duke's divorced wife, who is called Lady Blandford. Mrs. Willamette Marlborough is the widow of the eighth duke. The widows of the sixth and seventh dukes are still living, and their support comes out of the Marlborough estates. Beginning with the latest widow the three might perhaps be called dowager, grand dowager and great grand dowager.

Ideal People.

Years of valuable time are wasted in the lifetime of every individual by the hunt for ideal people. There are none, except the people who are dead. The ideal living persons exist only in the imagination of the enthusiast who looks for them. He may at length give up the search in despair and settle down to the belief that all the world is mean, hard, selfish and monstrous, and he will become a soured, embittered, suspicious old crank, very unpleasant to live with. Or he may give up caring whether there are any ideal people or not and harden into a successful money maker who enjoys nothing more than getting the better of some one less shrewd than himself.

Yet there is a sure way to produce ideal people—those who are perfectly kind, truthful, generous, good natured and just, likewise neat and pleasant mannered. There is a time in the life of everybody, even the toughest old hunks, when to somebody he is the ideal. At that time somebody, whether mother, child, sweetheart or friend, believes him to be the one piece of perfection sought for. If now we snatch at this moment and thereafter be through all the years of our lives exactly what these adoring ones believe us to be before they find us out, then in due time the earth will be populated with genuine ideal people.

Good City Government.

Charles Francis Adams contributes to The Forum an important paper on the improvement of municipal government, using as an illustration some experiments in that direction which have been made in Quincy, Mass. Mr. Adams is certain that in the founding of our municipal system a grave mistake was made. That was in modeling the city government after the national one. A state represents a political policy; municipal administration the mere transacting of business. Paving streets, lighting and sewering them, taxing the town for keeping up schools, securing the safety of the community through policemen, and making the town beautiful through public parks are matters that each citizen cannot attend to on his own responsibility. Therefore he delegates the duties to a committee of his fellow citizens. That is all there is or ought to be in municipal management.

The cumbrous machinery of our city governments, with their top heavy boards of two houses and the figure head of a mayor are the worst machinery that could be devised to transact public business. City government has been copied on with politics. The true model for a city government should be the successful private business corporation, with its simple machinery of president and board of directors. These meet and plan out the measures which will bring most prosperity to the firm or corporation. Exactly so it should be with city governments, the mayor representing the president, a single body of aldermen or councilmen representing the directors.

The ward system, Mr. Adams thinks, should be abolished, and the single-house voted for in a body, as presidential electors are, no one citizen being allowed to vote for more than two-thirds of the whole number, however. He may, though, concentrate his whole number of votes on a few members. This would ally to a certainty of election for any particularly desirable man in any one locality. Finally Mr. Adams would make the best men in a community serve as municipal officers, whether they want to or not. Jury duty is compulsory; why should not municipal service be also?

The puzzle the charter reformer has to work out, if he is going to get down to the root of the matter, is some practical system which shall secure the utmost political free play to the individual citizens, and the representation of minorities in municipal affairs; having done this—having this set individuals free and made other individuals—it will be for those composing the minorities to put their hands, as of old, on the shoulders of the "best men" and put them compulsory municipal service, those civic tears of public duty.

DEFEAT AT HOMESTEAD.

The Amalgamated Association Declares the Strike Off.

OVER TWO THOUSAND OUT OF A JOB.

Not More Than a Third of the Vanquished Workmen Will Be Able to Get Work at the Carnegie Mills—Angry Words at the Meeting.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 21.—The great Homestead strike or lockout was brought to an end Sunday at a meeting held in the Opera House, which was presided over by Richard Hotchkiss, the new chairman of the strikers' advisory board. Secretary Killgallon, Vice President Carney and Treasurer Madden, national officers of the Amalgamated association, were present. The lockout had practically ended on July 6, known in the world over. The vote that opened the Homestead Steel works to Amalgamated men stood 101 to 91. The meeting was a redhot one all the way through, and at one time it looked as if Burgess Hollingshead would have to assert his official authority to prevent a serious conflict. Charges and counter-charges were the order of the day, and it is said that those wishing to declare the mill open barely succeeded in carrying their point.

Many Men Will Remain Idle.

Now that the agony is over these men are not backward about expressing their opinion of the men who have posted as leaders. According to the superintendent of the Homestead works, not more than 800 or 900 of the total number of old employees will be able to secure employment. Before the break of last Thursday there were left in Homestead about 2,800 of the original 3,800 men who were locked out on June 28. Of these 2,800 men 2,200 were Amalgamated laborers and 600 Amalgamated association men. Up to date 1,100 men have applied for work, and it is estimated that not more than 350 men have been supplied with employment.

The question of declaring the mill open began to agitate the minds of certain Amalgamated leaders as soon as it became apparent that the mechanics intended breaking away in a body. Many of the leaders recognized that without the numerical aid of the mechanics and laborers they could not hope to carry the day. The failure to receive promised money of large amounts, followed by the bottom dropping out of the promise of victory for the steel workers in the event of the Democratic party coming into power, together with the unfulfillment of other promises, all combined to break the lockout.

Their Pleading Was in Vain.

The meeting was not a large one, and considerable surprise attended the announced resignation of Chairman Crawford. When that resignation had been accepted a striker arose and moved that the lockout be declared at an end, and that the men be allowed to seek employment in the Homestead mill.

Those opposed to bringing the fight to an end struggled hard to prevent a ballot, pleading, arguing and predicting the disintegration of the Amalgamated association in event of such action. These determined steel workers who repeatedly have stated that they would prefer nakedness and starvation rather than acknowledge defeat were in the majority, and they knew it. Yet they pleaded with their brethren to stand firm, if for no other reason than to show the world that they had not forgotten the men who were lying in prison cells awaiting trial. It was of no avail. The question was put, the vote was a standing one. When Vice President Carney announced the result there was no joyous outburst. For a few minutes the men sat and stared at each other. Then followed angry denunciations. The men slowly left the hall in twos and threes. They seemed loath to leave the building, the very rafters of which have quivered with the declarations made a thousand times that victory was theirs if they could only be patient.

Two Thousand Face Idleness.

The men stand about in groups discussing the plight they find themselves in. With winter upon them they see nothing in store now but a repetition of misery, which may assume the proportions of a famine. The oft repeated declarations of the Carnegie officials that the nonunion men will soon be displaced to give employment to the strikers renders absolutely no hope in Homestead for 2,000 of the defeated steel workers.

Assistant Superintendent Wood says: "The company held out no inducement whatever for the men to return. At no time have more than 3,000 men at the mill works since the start was made in July. Counting every man employed since the strike, the total will not exceed 3,500. In prosperous times we have employed 3,800 men. The nominal number is 3,300. All contracts made by the company within a month prior to the strike were made with the provision that no time might be trouble. We have lost nothing in contracts which were made prior to the strike, but we failed to obtain orders which we otherwise could have secured."

What the Big Strike Cost.

The pecuniary loss to the state, Allegheny county, Carnegie Steel company and the workingmen is estimated at between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

The lockout went into effect June 30, owing to the inability of the officials of the Carnegie company and the officials of the Amalgamated association to arrive at an amicable basis for the new scale of wages due to go into effect on July 31.

The building of fences, laying of steam pipes about the Homestead front and the stringing of electric bath wires about the plant so enraged the men that when, on July 6, the two barges loaded with Pinkerton detectives attempted to make a landing the serious trouble began, in which the loss of a score or more lives, the maiming of as many more men, the burning of the barges and the calling out of the entire national guard of Pennsylvania are now matters of history.

The costs put upon Allegheny county by the strike is fixed at $250,000. The loss to the Carnegie Steel company is variously estimated at from $1,000,000 to $2,500,000. The loss to the old employees has averaged $250,000 per month, making the total for five months $625,000.

At least thirty five deaths were directly or indirectly caused by the strike. Besides those killed in the battle July 6 many soldiers contracted fever which resulted fatally, one soldier was shot accidentally, another was killed by the cars, one striker committed suicide, several nonunion men died from fever, several were killed in the mill and one was murdered by another nonunionist. The attempted assassination of Chairman Frick, of the Carnegie company, is also indirectly credited to the strike.

CLEVELAND'S NEW YORK SPEECH.

Forty Rewards for Party Action No Longer the Political Mainspring.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—In the course of his speech at the reception tendered him by the Manhattan club President-elect Cleveland said:

"The American people have become politically more thoughtful and more watchful than ten years ago. They are considering now vastly greater questions than then. Party policy has become the important thing in contradistinction to party spoils.

"The distribution of party rewards for party action is no longer the mainspring of a political campaign. The situation must be gravely and intelligently met by those in charge of our political organizations.

"No party, I care not whether Democratic or Republican, can get the support of the mass of the voters by merely promising party rewards for party supremacy. The people will be satisfied with nothing less than the redemption of the sacred pledges made to them collectively—the administration of wise policies and the carrying on of an honest government. [Great cheering.]

"I would not have this otherwise. I am willing that the Democratic party should see that they may only hope successfully to retain the confidence of the people in meeting the situation by being absolutely and patriotically true to itself and its professions. This is the assured condition of success. I know no other. [Cheers.]

Degree and the Reconstruction Scheme.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—The World has interviewed Chauncey M. Depew on the proposed reconstruction scheme of the Republican party.

"The Republican party," said Mr. Depew, "will not be reconstructed. Since its birth in 1856 it has been the only progressive party in the United States. It will continue to be the party of progress. It may be temporarily defeated, but reverses will simply stimulate its energies.

"It is the only national party in the country. It ran its electoral ticket in every state in the union. The Democratic party abandoned its electoral ticket in eleven states and merged its existence into the Populist party, with an acceptance of the vagaries and absurdities of the People's party programme.

"There is no demand within the party for either reconstruction upon other principles than it has heretofore professed, or other leaders than it at present acknowledges.

"The first plank in the Republican platform for 1856 will be a protective tariff. It will not be the McKinley bill. The real policy of the Republican party is that its protective policy is elastic and progressive so that the measure of protection shall diminish in any department or for any industry as the necessity for it decreases.

"The Republican party will oppose state bank currency, the free coinage of silver and any measure which degrades the currency. It will favor bimetallism, but only on such conditions as make the currency of the country on a parity with gold.

"The policy of the Republican party will be to reduce additional restrictions on immigration.

"It will also favor all laws which tend to secure the free and unintimidated expression by the voter of his choice, and the restrictions about the ballot box which secure an unquestioned count of the vote when cast. By this I do not mean the Lodge elections bill."

Edmunds Praises Cleveland.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—Ex Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, says: "Whatever may be done in regard to a special session or tariff legislation, I firmly believe the Democrats will do what they believe to be for the best interests of the country. The Democratic party, taken as a whole, is as patriotic as the Republican, and I do not believe that disaster will follow. I esteem Mr Cleveland as an able man. He has sufficient foresight to hold in check any radical movement that might originate in the house."

Doster's Railroad Policy.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 21.—Judge Frank Doster, the leading Populist candidate for United States senator, in speaking of the purchase of railroads said: "I would consider it the height of folly to sell our public domain, pay a fair price for them and make the roads pay for themselves. It can be done very easily, and I should not be surprised if within the next ten years the railroad companies would be trying to sell their roads to the government."

Mr. Cleveland to Take a Rest.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—It is Mr Cleveland's intention to leave town either Thursday or Wednesday for a short holiday. Should he carry out his present programme, it is his desire that neither newspaper correspondents nor political friends break in on his vacation. He has been pestered lately by reporters.

Commander Booth says that at the public meetings the questions of the day, in so far as they relate to the Salvation Army work, will be discussed. One of these questions is how to relieve the distress and misery among those in overcrowded tenement houses. The slum lassies, whose work is entirely among this class of people, will tell some of their experiences and call for volunteers to help them. THE COMET GOING AWAY

Professor Boss Says the Sky Tramp Isn't Coming.

IT IS ALSO AN UNKNOWN FLYER.

The Learned Astronomer at Dudley Observatory Says the Comet Is Not the One Discovered by Biela and That It Seems to Be Getting Fainter.

ALBANY, Nov. 21.—Professor Lewis Boss, of the Dudley observatory, who has been watching the comet whose alleged near approach to the earth has stirred the apprehensions of the nervous and timid, says that he is satisfied that the celestial wanderer with the nebulous caudal appendage is not only not the Biela comet, but is not even traveling in the track of the Biela comet, as was at first supposed by some astronomers.

Professor Boss says that while he has not been able as yet to fix the orbit of the comet, he is satisfied that instead of approaching the earth at the rate of 700 miles a second, the comet is actually receding from the earth, and is now 250,000,000 miles away. As far as he can ascertain at present the comet is a new one and unknown to the astronomers.

No Definite Knowledge Yet.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Great vagueness prevails in the Columbia college observatory on the subject of the celestial visitor. Professor Jacoby would not say whether this was Biela's comet, but referred the reporter to Professor Boss, of Albany. "There is no definite knowledge on that point," Mr. Jacoby continued, "and we cannot get any idea of its orbit until we have had more opportunities for observation. Professor Boss has been endeavoring to get such an orbit, but it should take at least several days more before any definite results are obtained.

"I see Professor Young, of Princeton, said that the comet was somewhat fainter than it had been. We thought we noticed a slight paling of its radiance, too, although we were not sure of that. As to the matter of the direction in which it is going, we can only guess of course, but the probabilities are that the comet, as we sawit, was turned earthward.

"There should be no difficulty in seeing the comet directly overhead with a good opera glass. It would appear only as a little ball of hazy light. I cannot see it myself with the naked eye, but I should think it could be done by a person with remarkably strong eyes. The best time to look for it with an opera glass would be about 9 o'clock, when it is directly overhead."

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Joe Corbett, the champion heavyweight pugilist, in speaking of his future plans, said he would give Sullivan the preference over Mitchell and Jackson if the Boston boy decided to re-enter the ring. If Mitchell would come here and make a good sized deposit with some reputable newspaper his money would be covered so quickly that it would make his head swim.

He Kills Two People and Wounds His Wife and a Chicago Policeman.

CHICAGO, Nov. 21.—Herman Siegler, a German, lived with his wife and three children at the residence of his wife's parents, Henry and Caroline Siles, 728 North Paulina street. Early in the morning Siegler began making preparations for a hunting trip. Nothing unusual was noticed about his actions, when, shotgun in hand, he entered the parlor where his wife and children were and shot dead Mrs. Siles, his mother-in-law. Mrs. Siegler in the meantime had carried the children to the home of a neighbor, and on returning encountered her husband, who fired at her, several of the shot taking effect in her neck and breast. The noise aroused Mr. Siles and he descended into the hallway.

Siegler met him and fired, Mr. Siles receiving the full charge at close range. It is believed that Siegler then discharged the other barrel of his gun into his father-in-law's face, killing him. By this time a crowd had gathered outside, and as Officer Simonson came up Siegler appeared in the doorway. The officer drew his revolver and ordered Siegler to surrender. The latter's reply was a shot from his gun, but he shot high. Simonson returned the fire and Siegler staggered back with a shot in his side. He succeeded in firing another shot, which slightly wounded the officer, before he was overpowered. As Siegler was being taken to the patrol wagon he narrowly escaped lynching. Siegler is undoubtedly insane.

MRS. AUGUST BELMONT DEAD.

She Was the Noted Turfman's Widow and Commodore Perry's Niece.

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.—Mrs. August Belmont, widow of the financier and turfman, died Sunday at her home, 109 Fifth avenue. At her bedside when she died were her children—ex-Congressman Belmont, August Belmont, Jr., Oliver H. P. Belmont and Mrs. S. S. Howland. The funeral services will be held at the Church of the Ascension Tuesday at 3:30 p. m. Interment will be at Newport, R. I., on Wednesday. Mrs. Belmont had not been in good health since the tragic death of her youngest son, Raymond, on Jan. 31, 1887.

Mrs. Belmont was the daughter of Commodore Matthew Calbraith Perry and a member of one of the old historical families of America. Her grandfather was Christopher Raymond Perry, who served in the navy during the revolutionary war. Christopher Perry married in 1784, and the male members of his family have served in the navy with distinction.

The two most notable were Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry, the hero of Lake Erie, who was Mrs. Belmont's uncle, and Commodore Matthew Perry, her father.

When August Belmont met Miss Perry her father was commandant at the Brooklyn navy yard. Mr. Belmont was thirty-five years old and Miss Perry but eighteen. Miss Perry had many admirers, but she gave her hand to August Belmont, who was then but little known. She was a good conversationist, a patron of art and a fine musician. These qualities, together with the wealth of her husband, decided her leader in the world of fashion.

Benjamin E. Mallory Dead.

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 21.—Benjamin E. Mallory, well known in steamship circles, died Saturday night in this city from heart failure at the house of Hon. E. S. Bassett. Mr. Mallory had just won a large suit against his brother, the manager of the Mallory Steamship line. He was fifty-nine and a widower.

Millionaire Mason Dead.

KANSAS CITY, Nov. 21.—A. L. Mason, the millionaire capitalist and pioneer citizen of Kansas City, died from the effects of a stroke of apoplexy. Mr. Mason's fortune approximates $5,000,000. He was president of the Kansas City and Missouri River Transportation company.

Actor Charley Reed Dead.

BOSTON, Nov. 21.—Charley Reed, the actor, of "Hoss and Hoss" fame, died of heart disease at the United States hotel in this city.

Preferred Death to a Bath.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 21.—William Eldridge, a tramp, was found insensible here. An ambulance removed him to the Emergency hospital where he was told to take a bath. He refused, saying: "I'd die first. Me take a bath? Never!" Rather than bathe he slept on a pine board in the tramp quarters, although he was very sick.

A New People's Party Move.

MEMPHIS, Nov. 21.—The Industrial Legion of the United States" has been formed here by prominent leaders of the People's party to carry out politically the measures embodied in the declaration of principles of the Omaha platform of the People's party. Paul Vandervoort was chosen commander in chief.

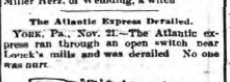
YORK, Pa., Nov. 21.—The Atlantic express ran through an open switch near Lorck's mills and was derailed No one was hurt.



Stylish Hats.

Judging from the style of hat now to be seen, there is a great increase in their size. The famous Duchess of Devonshire's head-dress was a prototype of many modern prototypes. One of the prettiest is made ingoince velvet, a mixture of red and black. It was intended to be poised slightly on the side, where were several black ostrich plumes, and beneath the brim there was a twisted velvet rouleau. Another almost as large was composed of black velvet, with large guipure quills in the front secured by the inevitable buckle. Some of the new hats are lined with contrasting colors. Peach pink is worn with red in the most surprising way, that it remains in favor, and a hat of this shade had one of the small stiff crowns, which was bordered with a band of green velvet studded with green buckles. It was intended to be worn high up at the back of the head, and displayed some large wings.

French women adopt toques with enthusiasm, English women but reluctantly. The newest Parisian models have bows of piece velvet placed erect on the front of the brim, supported by feathers.

A most useful little hat for bridesmaids is only moderately large, made in felt and trimmed with velvet and wings. Whole birds have yielded to wings and quills. A stylish hat is made in felt of any color, with a broad brim, quills and velvet trimmings.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP

LEGENDS OF STARLAND.

The Stars Are Angels' Eyes, and One Must Not Point at Them.

The dark November nights, with their display of shooting stars, fail to mind the many fancies which have clustered round the heavens. As M. Flammarion observes in his "History of the Heavens," the even ing sky "presents us with a singular mengerie, rich in curious monsters placed in inconceivable positions." Indeed all kinds of similes have been applied to the starry firmament, one of the most poetic designating them "flowers of heaven." Shakespeare speaks, in "King Lear" of the "sanctified star in the firmament," and elsewhere refers to them metaphorically as possessing an intelligent personality and as influencing the affairs of men.

So, too, with the legendary tales told of the stars, many of which attribute to them a distinct personality. Thus, according to a pretty piece of German folklore, the stars are angels' eyes, which may be a survival of the old Aryan tradition that tells how the first man and his offspring live in the heavens and distribute light unto men below, showing themselves as stars. Hence, too, the English nursager impresses on the youthful mind that it is wicked to point at the stars, though why he cannot tell. Legend also can tell how Odin took Thiassi's eyes and threw them against the sky, where they formed two stars. "These," writes Grimm, "are most likely two stars that stand near each other of equal size and brightness, perhaps the Twins."

Among uncultured races we find animate life ascribed to the stars. The North American Indians call the Pleiades the Dancers, and the morning star the Day Bringer. The Eskimos nickname the stars of Orion's belt the Last Ones, and tell a tale of their being real hunters who missed their way home, while the Kaska, of Bengal, declare that the stars were once men; they climbed to the top of a tree—the great heaven tree of mythology—but some mischievous persons below cut the trunk and left them up there in the branches, where they have remained ever since.

Etruscan folk tales and customs still perpetuate the same mythical fancies. German tradition says that one of the constellations of the Great Bear was once a wagoner, who, having given Christ a lift, was offered the kingdom of heaven for his reward. But he replied that he would sooner be driving from east to west to all eternity. His desire was immediately granted, and to this day he may be seen.

A Celebrated Antique.

The Portland vase, which is one of the most valuable articles in the British museum, was made 3d it believed, to hold the ashes of the Roman emperor Alexander Severus, and was discovered during the eighteenth century in a rich sarcophagus near Monte del Grano, where it had been for about 1,500 years. It is an urn two feet six inches high, of such elegance and grace of form as to excite the admiration of connoisseurs. The ground-work is of blue glass, enamled with white glass cut in cameos, to represent the groups of Thetis and Peleus. The union between the two substances is so perfect that the vase has the appearance of being cut out of one substance, like a cameo. It was supposed to be some species of stone.

THE FAMOUS PORTLAND VASE.

The vase was placed in the museum by the Duke of Portland in 1810, and in 1845 was maliciously broken by a man named Lloyd. The pieces, however, were collected and cemented together, but the vase has not been on exhibition since that date. It was at one time known as the Barberini vase, and was owned by Sir William Hamilton, who found it in the Barberini palace, and purchased it in 1770. In time it passed into the possession of the Duchess of Portland, and was disposed of as related.

Writers of Famous Hymns.

It seems a singular fact that apparently nothing in a literary way will relegate a writer to oblivion so surely as to be the author of a world famous hymn. As instances of this the Boston Globe gives the following:

Nearly every one has heard or sung the lines of "Shall We Gather at the River?" and yet how many know even the name of the author, much less the fact that he is living?

The writer is the Rev. Robert Lowry, D. D., a resident of Plainfield, N. J.

In Richmond, Ills., lives Dr. S. Fillmore Bennett. To how many is that name familiar, yet to whom is his familiar church song, "The Sweet By and By," not known?

In the interior of New York state lives Mrs. Annie Sherwood Hawks, who wrote those famed lines of "I Need Thee Every Hour."

Hardly known and never recognized on the streets of New York as she walks out is Fannie Crosby, the author of countless hymns, among them the famous one, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

It is odd that the veil of obscurity should seem to be the inevitable reward of those whose pens have given us the hymns which have brought consolation and joy to so many thousands.

The Waters of the Dead Sea.

The waters of the Dead sea have been popularly supposed to be absolutely devoid of living organisms of any description whatsoever. Recent investigations by a French scientist, however, appear to prove the fallacy of this belief. M. Lortet claims to have found in these waters innumerable species of micro-organisms of a very malevolent character. Animals inoculated die in a few days from the blood poisoning brought on through the agency of these minute bodies. The River Jordan, which is so popular with pilgrims for bathing, is said to be full of these micro-organisms to such an extent as to be absolutely unfit for bathing, and for drinking water almost perilous.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THE HIPPOPOTAMUS.

At Home on Land and in Water—How It Is Hunted by Natives and White Men.

Traveling menageries and zoological gardens have made the hippopotamus known to most young people, though its home is in Africa. Its legs are shorter than those of the elephant, so that the lower part of the body almost touches the ground, but the bulk of its body is little inferior to that of an elephant. With its thick, hairless hide, short neck, small ears and eyes, large muzzle, great nostrils and lips, it presents a singular appearance.

A BATHING PLACE OF THE HIPPOPOTAMUS.

The food of this enormous animal is entirely vegetable, such as the plants which grow about the margin of lakes and rivers, the roots and stems of which it tears up with its great tusks, cutting them through as cleanly as though done with a scythe. Unfortunately it does not confine itself to these, but leaving the water under cover of night a whole herd of these amphibians will invade cultivated fields, devouring and trampling the crops in a terrible manner. The natives of Africa in some parts eat portions of the flesh of the hippopotamus. Its tusks are valuable for ivory. The hippotamus is gen-rally inoffensive unless attacked, but can be roused to fits of rage very dangerous to those who pursue it.

There are several methods of destroying this animal. The natives dig pits in the usual track leading to the water, or they shoot it with poisoned arrows. Europeans shoot the game with rifles while it is in the water. If attacked from the land—as shown in the cut—the hippopotamus may become enraged and make a rush for the enemy, and then it will be found that it can run with speed, crashing its way through the African forest more rapidly than a man can do. Hunting the hippopotamus in boats on the river is dangerous work, for the animal is active and long-lived in the water, swimming with ease, some times diving under a boat and heaving it upward broken into pieces. The mother hippopotamus is very careful of her young one and may sometimes be seen swimming with the ungainly little creature nested on her back.

Samaritans Among Birds.

Once upon a time a pair of robins built their nest on a fence, and a pair of catbirds (American thrushes that are so called because their cry is like the mewing of a cat) in a bush close by. Baby birds appeared in each nest about the same time, and all went well for a few days, when one morning the parent catbirds were both missing, probably slain. Their young would have starved but for the robins. Whenever the robins lit on the rail with a worm or other food the catbirds set up a hungry squeak, and so the kind birds of the redbreast determined to feed the stranger fledglings as well as their own. Both families were successfully reared, the catbirds being so strong and lively that they looked as if they had been brought up by their own parents.

The Secret.

I've a secret to tell you,
But don't think it queer;
I'll whisper it softly,
Or others might hear.

—Golden Days

Be Thorough, Boys!

Whatever you do to-day,
Do it, boys, with all your might;
Never be a little true,
Or a little in the right.
Trifles even
Lead to heaven;
Trifles make the life of man.
So in all things,
Great or small things,
Be as thorough as you can!

Help the weak if you are strong!
Love is cold if you are young;
Own a fault if you are wrong;
If you're angry mind your tongue.
In each duty,
Lies a beauty,
If your eyes you do not shut,
Just as surely
And as truly
As a kernel in a nut!

A Letter to Pussy.

I wrote a letter to our cat,
As there upon the rug she sat,
Her green eyes gaily blinking;
Her tail veiled with its graceful fire,
She yawned as if to let us know
That she was deeply thinking.

I wrote a letter to our cat,
Our precious cat, who was black and fat;
I put, "To Mistress Kitty,
The finest mouser in the town,
The property of Mrs. Brown,"
Who lives in Chester city."

I wrote a letter—just a shootIt was not, well—precisely neat,
For she can't write, as you know plenty;
I thought she'd guess what I meant,
And lots and lots of love I sent,
With kisses five and twenty.

I wrote a letter to our cat,
And laid it by her on the mat.
She sat there without stirring.
I read it to her—only think—
She simply gave one festive wink,
And went on calmly purring.

I said to her, "You naughty thing!
It's rude, Miss Cat, to sit and sing
When some one reads a letter."
At this she rose and left the room,
And all that I had time to say
Was that I hoped some future day
Her manners would be better!

a rule makes a daily pilgrimage to the docks, where they are imported in large numbers from Egypt, to purchase a couple of dozen at a time, if business be brisk he reckons upon getting rid of them by the end of the day, retailing them at a price ranging from nine-pence to two shillings each, according to size, and just how much that is in American money clever young folks familiar with their arithmetics can easily calculate.

These tortoises cost little or nothing to keep, feeding mostly on lettuce leaves and other vegetable matter, and render useful service by keeping a kitchen or garden free from beetles and other vermin. Some of them live to a great age; there is an instance on record of one that lived at Peterboro and attained the venerable age of 250 years.

Tortoises are as a rule quiet and inoffensive in their habits, but occasionally fall out among themselves and one an-

An Elephant's Memory.

During a voyage across the Atlantic a gentleman made the acquaintance of an elephant named Nellie. Every day he used to pay her a visit, stuffing his pockets before he went with the scraps and dainties left from dinner. The elephant of course received him with joy and used to pick his pockets with her trunk. As the steamer neared New York, however, he had to attend to his own affairs and thought no more of Nellie. Several years afterward some elephants were quartered in New York for the winter, and the gentleman one day took his children to see them. As soon as he entered the building one of the elephants got very restless, flapping her big ears and tossing her trunk about. The keeper was then in front up to Nellie, who was very glad to see him. She remembered the old tricks, too, for she emptied his pockets of all the apples, just as she used to do on the steamer.

A Short Fable.

A grasshopper, half starved with cold and hunger, came to a well stored beehive at the approach of winter and humbly begged the bees to relieve his wants with a few drops of honey.

One of the bees asked him how he had spent his time all the summer, and why he had not laid up a store of food like them.

"Truly," said he, "I spent my time very merrily in drinking, and dancing and singing, and never once thought about the winter."

"Our plan is very different," said the bee. "We work hard in the summer to lay by a store of food against the season when we forsee that we shall need it, but those who do nothing but drink and dance and sing in the summer must expect to starve in the winter."

Who does not see that this most admirable fable applies not only to the summer and winter of the year, but also to the summer and winter of life?

Song of the Seconds.

Sing a song of Seconds—
Tireless little elves,
Who, how many selves busy,
Don't have time themselves!
They must work forever—
Then they're never done—
Work in rain and sorrow,
Work in joy and sun—
Talking to the Minutes—
This their work by day—
Grains of good or evil
Folks lose by the way.
Minutes build foundations,
Feebly built or strong—
As the Seconds fetch them
Deeds of right or wrong.
Hours set the rafters,
Which, as years pass by,
Make for us our lovely
Home beyond the sky.
So when Seconds watch us
Through the livelong day—
Taking every action,
Every word away—
Let our deeds be noble,
Let our words be just,
Let the fact of living
Fill with simple trust
Hearts that now are troubled.
Saddened and oppressed;
Know whatever happens
Always must be best!
When we're rid of sorrow,
When we welcome mirth,
When we make our moments
Blessed upon earth,
Then the fine Seconds
In their hands will hold
What will make our manstons
Rare and bright as gold!

Can't Fool Detroit Women.

He tried the front door and couldn't get in; then he tried the side door with the same success, and finally he proceeded around to the kitchen. There he knocked timidly and the lady of the house met him.

"What do you want?" she asked inhospitably.

"Nothing, madam," he replied with a gallant smile.

"Well, you're come to the right place to get it," she asserted.

He looked around about him for half a minute and at last replied:

"You will excuse me, madam, I am sure," he said politely, "if I am apparently rude, but before I came in here I looked at this handsome house for at least ten minutes, and noted carefully its air of comfort, its genial homelikeness, its hospitable look, its thrifty and well fed appearance, and if I should differ from you on that last statement of yours, believe me I do so honestly, and as a compliment, not as a contradiction."

The woman was dazed.

"I may be mistaken," he went on glibly, "for it is human to err, but if I am, may my judgment henceforth be as sounding brass and my opinion a tinkling cymbal."

The woman slammed the door in his face and he turned sadly away.

"That's the first time," he murmured, "in the whole course of my professional career that that gag failed to work, and Detroit, I fear, will prove a wilderness to me unless I strike a different key."—Detroit Free Press.

BITS OF LOCAL HISTORY.

COVERING A PERIOD OF TWO HUNDRED YEARS.

The Old Stage Routes.—Where Some of the Old Buildings are Gone, Including Old Churches and Schools.

—Our Modern Public Schools.

Plainfield is about two hundred years old. Its growth was very slow during the first century of its history. In this period only two or three thoroughfares traversed the place. The principal one is what is now called Front street, and was the old stage route between New York and Philadelphia. Another road was that which led to Rahway though what is now Peace street and Broadway. A third was the road to New Brunswick and is now known as Plainfield avenue.

At the opening of the nineteenth century, Plainfield was still a thinly settled neighborhood, with about two hundred inhabitants.

It was not until 1802, when a hat shop was built, that business began here.

For many years thereafter hat manufacturing was a comparatively large and flourishing industry.

In the year 1808 the United States Government established a post office here, and the old stage line, just referred to, left its occasional passenger and meagre mail.

A two-story academy was the first school building of any pretensions, and was built in 1812. It served the double purpose of a day school and public hall, till the upper part was destroyed by fire a short time afterward. It stood on the site now occupied by Leah's school. The building was removed to the other side of the street where it still remains, at 96 West Front street.

In 1833 Plainfield Seminary, a frame building, forty by thirty-six feet in size, was built on a lot adjoining that on which the First Presbyterian church now stands on East Front street. The building still occupies the old site, and for many years has been the residence of Mrs. Cornelius Bonce. A rival institution was organized in 1834. A large building, sixty by thirty-five feet in size, was put on a lot opposite the First Baptist church. The building is still standing, having been converted into two private dwellings. The one on the corner of West Front street and Central avenue is owned by L. L. Mannion, and the other, adjoining, is owned and occupied by ex-Councilman Joseph S. Cutter. The name of this last institution was the Plainfield Classical Institute. There were select schools in their day.

These schools were followed by private educational enterprises, among which, one of the most noted was that conducted by J. O. Maurice. He kept a boarding and day school for ten years in buildings that stood where the clothing factory of C Schepflin & Co. now stands on West Front street. A part of the old structure still remains on the same lot, and is said to be the oldest house in the place.

In 1867 the public school was opened through the persistent efforts made in the years immediately preceding, by Charles H. Stillman, M. D., after whom Stillman Music Hall is named. There was no suitable building in which to hold the school, and the best that could be done was to secure two structures, one, an unused hatter shop, that was located on a lot opposite that on which Leal's school building now stands, on West Front street, and the other a cabinetmaker's shop which is now the grocery store of J. F. Mac Donald, East Front street. This was the beginning of the public school system in New Jersey. In 1846 a law was passed, through Dr. Stillman's efforts, to enable the town of Plainfield to raise money to build a school house, and a frame structure was put up in another year on Fourth street, on the site of the present building. This was the only public school building for many years. No place of its size has better public or private schools than Plainfield has today. The average value of its school property is nearly double that of any other place in the State.

The first place of religious worship in Plainfield was the Friends' meeting house on Peace street, which was built in 1788.

The First Baptist church was the next religious organization to build a church. This was done in 1818, the modest structure being reared on the plot of land where the present house is located, corner of West Front and Grove streets. That ancient building with its subsequent additions, is now a tenement house on New street, near West Front street.

The First Presbyterian church building came next, and was erected in 1825, on the lot where the present handsome house now stands. The original building was cut in two and made into two dwelling houses which are located near the gas works.

The First Methodist Episcopal church was built in 1832 on the lot still used by the church. When it was outgrown, it was sold, and was for many years, as Laing's Hall, the eastern wing of Laing's Hotel, recently demolished to make room for modern buildings. The hall, however, is reserved. It has been removed into Madison avenue, and will probably again be used as a house of worship, this time by the Plymouth Brethren who are negotiating for it.

In 1835 the First Seventh-Day Baptist church was erected on Central avenue, adjoining the railroad. This house was converted into two dwellings which stand on West Third street, near the place where the old structure was erected as a place of worship.

These were the earliest religious bodies to get a foothold in Plainfield. The other flourishing churches of the city were founded some years later. There are now twenty-two places of worship, including three mission stations, namely: three Baptist churches, two Presbyterian, three Methodist Episcopal, one Seventh-day Baptist, two Friends, four Protestant Episcopal, two Reformed, one Congregational, two Roman Catholics, one Unitarian.

In 1835 the first newspaper was established, and was called the Plainfield Herald, three of its sides being printed in New York City. It had only a short life.

In 1837 the second attempt to found a newspaper was made, a number of citizens clubbing together to furnish the necessary capital. It was called the Plainfield Union, and has continued to make its weekly appearance ever since, but of late years has been known as the Central New Jersey Times.

In 1870 the Constitutionalist, a weekly, was started by capital furnished by a number of Plainfield Democrats, in the interest of the Democratic party. Messrs. W. L. and A. L. Force, being chosen as publishers, and eventually obtaining control and the ownership, and making it a very successful weekly.

In 1884 THE PLAINFIELD EVENING NEWS was started by Mr. T. W. Morrison of New York, and was the first successful daily newspaper in Plainfield. With its advent the day of weekly newspapers for Plainfield passed away as of any consequence.

In 1886, the Daily Press was started by the Messrs. Force, with Mr. A. L. Dunn as editor, and became Plainfield's second successful newspaper. It is a daily edition of the weekly Constitutionalist.

In 1891 the Daily Courier was started by Mr. Frank W. Runyon, the owner of the weekly Times above referred to, and with the aid of political office he has managed to keep it go.

Plainfield was incorporated in 1869, and has all the necessary municipal machinery for a city of its population, including the town of North Plainfield, the place has a population of about 20,000. Such a population in such a town stands for much in the way of industrial, commercial and philanthropic enterprises. The beauties of the town and its numerous attractions as a place of residence have made it fa-famed, in fact have developed Plainfield into one of the best known suburbs of the metropolis.—Ex.

A Successful Fair.

The fair for the benefit of the German Reformed church, which ended with an auction sale last night, has been very successful. The net proceeds will amount to not less than $330. This, with another sum they have already on hand from a previous fair, will help to reduce the debt a good deal.

BY THE ARCHBISHOP

MISS HARBERGER IS UNITED IN WEDLOCK TO MR. BACHEM.

The Ceremony Performed Yesterday at the Beautiful Harberger Homestead on West Front Street.—A Quiet Family Affair.

Conrad H. Bachem of New York was married yesterday morning at the Harberger Homestead, on West Front street, the residence of the bride's mother, to Mary Madeline, second daughter of the late J. S. Harberger.

The wedding was a very quiet one, the families of the contracting parties alone being present and a few of their most intimate friends. All the rooms of the historical old house were tastefully decorated, but the large music room, where the ceremony took place, fairly blazed with candles and was profusely adorned with plants from the conservatory.

At half-past eleven the bridal cortege entered the room by separate doors, the groom, a little in advance, stood waiting under a beautiful arch, from which was suspended a marriage bell, while the bride, leaning on the arm of her brother, Mr. J. Louis Harberger of Boston, preceded by her two bridesmaids and page, followed by her mother on the arm of Mr. J. Leiham Anderson, advanced to join him.

The wedding was solemnized by Archbishop Corrigan of New York, assisted by his secretary, the Rev. Father Connelly.

Before commencing the ceremony the archbishop alluded in the most affecting manner to his previous visits to the Homestead and to his loving memory of the father of the bride. He also spoke in the most affectionate terms of the bridegroom, whom he had known from his boyhood.

Among those present were Mrs. Bachem, Mrs. Edwin Garsia, and Mrs. Edwin Garsia, Jr., Miss Garsia, Mrs. Alfred Garsia, the Misses Garsia, Miss Reynaud, Mrs. J. S. Harberger, Mr. J. Louis Harberger, Miss Van Zandt, Mrs. Leiham, Mr. and Mrs. J. Letham Anderson, Mr. J. R. Morewood, Rev. G. Septier, Dr. Davis and Mr. E. B. Lansing.

The bride wore a dress of heavy corded white silk heavily trimmed with white lace. The dress was draped with the old family point lace, and she wore a veil of the same rich material.

The bridesmaids, Miss Marion and Miss Joan Anderson, wore white China silk, and the bride's page, Master John Kenneth Anderson, looked charming in his suit of brown velvet.

The bride's mother wore black velvet and diamond ornaments, Mrs. Edwin Garsia a handsome reception dress of black silk trimmed with jet, Mrs. J. Letham Anderson a white satin and embroidered crape with diamond ornaments.

After an elaborate breakfast and a little dancing, Mr and Mrs. Bachem departed amid a perfect hail of rice and old shoes, two of the latter remaining on the top of the departing coach triumphantly as the happy pair drove to the depot.

WON FOR THE FIRST TIME.

The Union County Club Out Bowls the Park Club.

The Union County Country Club bowling team bowled a game with a team from the Park Club last evening on the former club's alleys.

The game was won by 35 pins, and it was the first game they have succeeded in winning from the Park club.

On account of five of the Union County Country Club's team attending the Republican primary, the game started off with only two teams, and the visiting team were left behind 67 pins. This proved too much of a handicap for the remaining five men of the Park club to overcome, and they were forced to bow to the inevitable.

After the game refreshments were served and a good time generally enjoyed. The score:

"Shakespeare and the Avon."

The second of Prof. H. H. Ragan's series of illustrated lectures was given in Music Hall last evening. It was an entirely new lecture entitled "Shakespeare and the Avon" and contained an extra large number of colored views.

Prof. Ragan did not tell of Shakespeare works or life, as these are already told in hundreds of books. The library of the British Museum alone contains so many books about Shakespeare that it takes twelve finely printed pages of the catalogue to record simply the names of the books.

Prof. Ragan pictured a trip from New York on a most modern steamer, showing many views of life on the ship. Continuing he showed the haunts of Shakespeare as they appear to-day, including in his views the house of Shakespeare's father and mother, the room in which the great writer was born, the home of George Washington's ancestors, the school house and church which Shakespeare attended, the home of Ann Hathaway, his wife, Kenilworth and other castles, and views for miles about the neighborhood of Shakespeare's home, ending with a view of Shakespeare's tomb. The pictures were remarkably clear and artistic, and the lecture contained many interesting items not to be found in books on the subject. The hall was uncomfortably cold.

CAMERA CLUB EXHIBIT.

THE FINEST EVER SHOWN IN PLAINFIELD.

Many Excellent Photographs, a Large Number of which are of Picturesque Plainfield — Several Prizes Awarded Yesterday by the Judges.

The sixth annual exhibition of the Plainfield Camera Club opened last night, at their rooms, on East Front street, and will continue every afternoon and evening this week.

The photographs shown are excellent, and, although they couldn't all take prizes, it would be hard to judge which excelled, for they are, without any exceptions, a credit to the Camera Club members and also to the city of Plainfield.

The exhibit of Mr. Edward Rushmore included, with one or two exceptions, prints of Plainfield buildings and local scenery. No. 1 was an excellent picture of the Crescent avenue church; No. 2, the old Quaker church on Peace street; No. 3, the Holy Cross church of North Plainfield; No. 4, the Park club house on Washington avenue, North Plainfield; No. 5, Washington avenue; No. 6, 33 Park avenue; No. 8, Leal's Cadets, No. 9, Class of '93; No. 17, Leal's school boys; No. 18, Grace church, on Seventh street. Mr. Mr. Rushmore's collection was the largest of home views.

The following were awarded prizes:

Mr. J. E. Stewart, first award, for landscape.

Mr. J. Hervey Doane, first award, for life in action.

Mr. Harold Serrell, first award, for instantaneous farm life and grouping.

Mr. G. Harry Squires, second award, for landscape. First award for artistic photography.

Mr. A. J. Gavett, first award, for portraiture, flashlight and architecture.

Mr. T. E. Hazell, first award, for marine.

There were many beautiful photographs exhibited by Mr. George H Babcock, but they were not entered in the competition. There was also a fine array of photographs by Davis and Sanford which showed that they were masters of the art.

Mr. George H. Babcock's collection included a picture of the old Laing's Hotel, which has recently been torn down. It is a splendid picture and shows the hotel, with a horse and wagon hitched in front, as natural as life. It is rightly titled "Days of Yore."

Mrs. A. W. Band had several photographs on exhibition, which included among the number the "Job Male Library and Art Gallery," and the "Union County Country Club House."

The collection as a whole is the finest ever exhibited in Plainfield, and the exhibit promises to be very interesting and successful.

The judges were Messrs. F. S. Smith, G. W. Moufort and G. F. C. Smillie.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Malcom Sutton of this city is visiting Mr. James Hardy of New street, New Brunswick.

Mr. Joseph Sillery of Stone street, North Plainfield, has moved to Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Mrs. J. A. Baeursacha, wife of Mail Carrier Baeursacha, is ill at her home in North Plainfield.

The little daughter of Mr. D. F. Clawson of Brook avenue, North Plainfield, is ill with the croup.

City Judge William R. Codington, whose term expires this year, should be re-elected to that office, as he has filled the position as City Judge admirably. He has meted out justice impartially and to the satisfaction of all.

Mr. Charles W. Beebe of West Seventh street has leased a property in Brooklyn, to which he will remove with his family in a short time. The family have many friends in this city who will regret their departure. Messrs. George and Howard Beebe are both prominent in many clubs here, which will by their removal doubtless be bereft of two active and popular members.

PLAINFIELD REPUBLICANS ENTHUSIASTIC.

They are Confident of a Sweeping Victory in December.

"In addition to its healthfulness there is one thing to be said in favor of the pretty little Colorado of the East, Plainfield," says the Elizabeth Journal, "that is the majority of its voting population are staunch Republicans. It gave a Republican majority of between 400 and 500 votes in the recent Presidential election. They are reasonably confident therefore, that in the approaching municipal election they will be able to place in office every one of the candidates they may nominate. The full city vote was brought out on Nov. 8, and the Democrats were much dismayed at the strength shown by their opponents.

The Journal also says editorially:

"Just think of it. Plainfield expects to win a Republican victory at the municipal election on December 8th. And this after the unparalleled landslide on Nov. 8th. Hurrah for Plainfield.

Beer Brewing in New Jersey.

In the State of New Jersey the brewers in the past year have paid the State $1,654,758 for beer stamps used in their traffic, and they have plastered the stamps to 1,708,998 barrels of brewings. The number of barrels at 97 per barrel, represented 942,322,196 worth of product. But the big profit is made at the bar. In the 1,868,928 barrels are 1,401,152,400 glasses, nearly a thousand and five hundred millions of drinks. These at an average of four cents per glass, would yield $57,255,696.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Vulgar Wealth.

The crazy and cruel Roman Emperor Caligula made a golden stable for his horse and fed him gilded oats. It is the climax of vulgar and wicked extravagance to the modern mind. That happened in the days of the decay and corruption of the Roman empire.

It is doubtful, however, whether the unprejudiced future reader of history will consider the Roman emperor any more insanely extravagant than some Republican citizens of the United States in the last quarter of the Nineteenth century. Paupers have increased manifold and millionaires a thousandfold since 1860, we are told. The wealth that is heaping up like a snowball rolling down hill has in many cases stuck to persons with not brains enough to spend it wisely. Having a limited understanding, they can only show that they are somebody by a display of wealth. It is the lowest possible way of being somebody, but it is all the little brained rich know, so they must be forgiven.

A golden stable for the emperor's horse in old Rome is not a whit more foolish than gold mounted railway cars for American citizens to travel in in 1892. The only thing gold mounted cars can do is to make a vulgar display of wealth which the owner has not sense enough to put to a wiser use. Perhaps we shall have golden cuspidors and golden bins next, likewise golden cuspidors and wash basins.

It was the saturnine Dean Swift who said that the Almighty showed his estimate of wealth by the people he gave it to. The barbaric degradation of the beautiful and precious metal gold by those who do not know how to use it is enough to convince one that Dean Swift spoke the truth. The person who has great wealth is bound by that very fact to use all above his personal expenses for the good of those less fortunate. Public parks, libraries, beautiful landscapes, scientific investigation, model homes for poor people, the conquering and reclaiming of waste lands, providing homes for millions, the building of homes for working people in the country and furnishing them rapid transit to their city factories—there are magnificent openings for the investment of wealth, and the new rich man goes and spends his money on the golden cuspidor and golden coal-scuttle plan. He could show it off in a less vulgar way if he would simply have it melted into a large lump, and have a man hired to carry it along behind him wherever he went.

When plump, pretty Widow Hamersley, of New York, married the reprobate Duke of Marlborough she poured out old Hamersley's Australian gold like water in the work of beautifying the duke's ancestral seat, Blenheim house. It was as dilapidated as the buildings of an abandoned New England farm, glass out, hinges off, locks broken and door stones fallen in. At an enormous expense Widow Hamersley that was fixed up the old place and made it splendid as the resources of an American can of foreign parts. Then she rightly thought she had earned her title of duchess. But now the dissipated duke up and dies, and the duchess becomes only dowager duchess, and, according to English law has to give up all her splendor and go off and live in a little "dower house" on the corner of the Marlborough estates somewhere. A smiling young gentleman, by name Charles Richard Jenny Spencer by title Marquis of Blandford, son of the Duke of Marlborough's first wife, who got a divorce from him because he was so bad, steps serenely into all the magnificence paid for by the Hamersley dollars, with no more thought for the plump little woman who paid the dollars than if she were a milkmaid on one of the Marlborough farms. What a fine thing it is for an American woman to marry a European title and have the privilege of shelling out her Yankee dollars to mend the holes made in entailed estates by the dissipations and debauchery of the man who wears the title! How noble European nobility is!

It may be that the increasing scarcity of gold will be stopped for a time at least. The output from the South African mines is growing larger. This year they will yield nearly a million and a quarter ounces. That is only a little less than the gold mines of the United States produce annually. It may be that the output of the South African mines will yield more gold than ours. In 1887 the output was not quite 25,000 ounces. In 1891 it had increased to 729,213. Three years ago it was predicted that these mines would prove extraordinarily profitable, and it may be that their full developments is not even yet reached. If they had been in the United States instead of in Africa there would have been a tremendous boom, new cities growing up into fortnight and a great population formed in two months.

During the past year $363,000,000 worth of stamps, money and bonds was issued from the United States bureau of engraving and printing without the loss of a dollar. This shows one of two things—either that all the employees of the bureau of engraving and printing are entirely honest, or that the check system in use there has been brought down so fine that they could not steal if they wanted to.

THREE DUELS TO COME

French Deputies Wild Over the Panama Canal Scandal.

TO INVESTIGATE THE CHARGES

After a Very Stormy Session the Chamber Agrees That a Parliamentary Inquiry Shall Be Made Into the Tangled Affairs of the Canal Company.

PARIS, Nov. 22.—The chamber of deputies agreed by a unanimous vote that a parliamentary inquiry should be made into the affairs of the Panama Canal company. Jules Delahaye, the Boulangist deputy from Chinon, denounced the government in the severest language, stating that the authorities had permitted the most colossal crimes to go unpunished. He demanded that the men of influence and wealth, accumulated by gigantic frauds, be brought to exposure and punishment.

There was a clamorous scene while Delahaye was speaking, others denouncing his utterances. Angry recriminations followed and deputies charged each other in expressions with a desire to protect the guilty.

One speaker said that he could point out men in the chamber who had shared in the spoils. A dozen deputies rose in an excited manner to ask whom he meant.

The answer was lost in the clamor and confusion. Members shook their fists in each other's faces, and several tried to climb the tribunal at once. The president in vain rapped for order and nobody heeded him.

The melee was more general and disgraceful than any witnessed in the chamber during the present republic. Deputies called each other thieves, and followed the insulting words with a challenge to the death.

Three Duels Are to Follow.

No less than three challenges were given for duels. M. Alexander Delaunay, Moderate Republican, the deputy for Beauvais, challenged Antoine Germain, member of the Left Center. Rodoy D'Anglais, mem ber from Arbeche, challenged M. Delahaye and Paul Deroulede, the noted Boulangist, challenged M. Hubbard, of Seine-et-Pise, anti-Boulangist.

It was a bitter struggle—the first really signal demonstration of the Boulangists since the downfall of their party. It was useless for the government to oppose the onset, and so the ministry yielded by consenting to the appointment of a parliamentary commission to inquire into the charges of corruption in connection with the Panama canal, and especially the charges affecting public officials, members of the chamber and others connected with the public service.

The commission will begin the inquiry forthwith. It is rumored that gigantic scandals will be unearthed, and that other suicides may be looked for, besides that of Baron de Reinach, who was one of the men deeply involved in the alleged scandals.

The baron left an immense fortune of about 300,000,000 francs, much of it accumulated in connection with the Panama enterprises.

There is great excitement in Paris, and the scene in the chamber of deputies and the Panama inquiry are the leading subjects of discussion everywhere. The police are said to be keeping a strict surveillance over several wealthy men mentioned in connection with the Panama frauds, and who are suspected of preparing to leave France in order to escape prosecution.

THE SALVATION ARMY CONGRESS

Commander Booth Says the Army Will Capture the Country Some Day.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Five thousand Salvation Army soldiers from every state in the Union are attending the continental congress at Carnegie hall. Commander Booth made a long address, dealing with the growth of the army in the United States. A tabulated statement of gospel work by twenty-one officers doing slum work in different cities gave New York 174, Boston, 16; Philadelphia, 6; Chicago, none. Here are some of the things Commander Booth said:

"I don't see why the citizens of the United States should look down upon Salvation Army people. We are as good citizens as any and as handsome as any who walk. And, seriously, there are no people who do a more intelligent, more beneficial work than those who wear the poke bonnet and the red shirt. The day is coming when the United States will recognize the Salvation Army as one of the most potent forces for moral debris in boundaries.

"Why should the Salvation Army be assisted by the American public? Because we maintain the principles of the pilgrim fathers, who consecrated America to God when they knelt on Plymouth rock. We will make the country give an unconditional, entire surrender to our Lord and Savior some day."

Special Hjorkaeten, the famous tenor, who traveled with Christine Nilsson, sang "Step by Step We Answer to the Call." Commander Booth then introduced his wife. She was enthusiastically received, and made a charming speech. Commander Booth read letters of congratulation and appreciation from President Harrison, Professor C. Briggs, Dr. Lyman Abbott and General William Booth. The meeting was closed by the international group, representing every country in the world, standing together on the front of the stage and singing "Home, Sweet Home."

TO SPLIT KANSAS IN TWAIN.

It Is Said Prominent Republicans Want the State Divided.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 22.—A great surprise was sprung on the people of Kansas by the announcement that leading Republican politicians of western Kansas have organized, for the purpose of dividing the state. The plans are well laid, and the matter will be urged on the legislature the coming session. It is believed that body will be favorable to the scheme. The organization includes a strong committee of Democrats and Republicans, who will go to Washington early in the session and lobby the matter through, to the end that favorable action may be taken there as soon as the Kansas legislature acts and prescribes the metes and bounds of the new state.

Editor Morris, of the Garden City Herald, and one of the new state advocates, said:

"The recent election taught the people of western Kansas that they are dominated in all things by the eastern and more populous counties. Western Kansas repudiated the calamity howlers and republicans. It is bored hard to maintain and will maintain its credit and honor, but what has western Kansas accomplished when nearly every county in the eastern end of the state gave the calamity party majorities which will destroy the value of every foot of property in the western part of the state, and has forced upon us a government and state policy that are obnoxious to the people of the west?

"It was the eastern part of the Seventh district that saddled Jerry Simpson on us, and we want the new state line to cut these counties out."

The plan is to divide the state on the west line of Jewell, Mitchell, Lincoln, Ellsworth, Rice, Reno, Kingman and Harper counties, making west Kansas 200 miles square.

Cleveland Against Murphy.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—The World says: Mr. Cleveland has told Edward Murphy, Jr., friends that he does not favor Murphy's candidacy for United States senator from New York state. The World says: "Mr. Cleveland is opposed to Mr. Murphy as senator and doesn't care who knows it. After the senatorial fight he will not fight Mr. Murphy, but thinks Mr. Whitney should have the place. Mr. Whitney says he is no candidate and will not be a candidate. Friends of Mr. Murphy say that in reality Mr. Whitney favors Mr. Murphy and will, at least, do nothing against him. Governor Flower, Richard Croker and William F. Sheehan are for Mr. Murphy and say he will be elected."

Knights of Labor Re-elect Their Old Master Workman.

STRIKER CRITCHLOW'S DEFENSE.

He Attempts to Prove That He Was Not Present When the Pinkertons Were Fired Upon—President Frick Composed with King Herod by Critchlow's Attorney.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 22.—At the session of the Knights of Labor convention officers were chosen as follows: General master workman, T. V. Powderly; secretary and treasurer, J. W. Hayes; general worthy foreman, Hugh Cavanagh. The executive board chosen consists of T. V. Powderly, John Davis, T. B. McGuire and A. W. Wright.

Just previous to adjournment the convention adopted a resolution on the Homestead strike, swelling that it was the sense of the Knights of Labor that the outcome of the recent struggle was deplorable, but that it has been of far reaching results in settling temporarily at least great economic questions. The resolution ordered that the general executive board be instructed to issue an appeal for aid for needy strikers.

The question of establishing a home for aged and disabled knights is much discussed by the delegates. The matter will not come up at this session of the convention, but it will probably be a leading issue at the next annual meeting.

The Trial of Critchlow.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 22.—At the trial of Striker Critchlow, George W. Argo, of Sioux City, opened for the defense. Mr. Argo told the story of the peaceful life of Dakotans to Homestead, and continuing said: "We say this was an invasion by a foreign armed force, an assault on the county, an assault on the commonwealth.

"When they reached Homestead they made an attack on the people of this county and this state. So far as has been shown they were not there to protect property. No evidence has been offered to show what they were doing there. They were met by the good citizens of Homestead, and when they attempted to land they were met with resistance.

"We say all persons on the banks of the river when this armed body attempted to land had a right there; that each had a right to defend himself and all others present; that all had a right to use deadly weapons when attacked by such weapons as those people on shore were attacked with."

The attorney said that he would prove that Critchlow was not present during the fight.

Mr. Erwin then addressed the jury. He said in part: "The theory of the prosecution is that there was a riot. If there was a riot Critchlow on the one side is guilty and those on the other side equally guilty.

Frick Composed with Herod.

"Never since the days of Herod has there been such a hard hearted, cold blooded man as this man Frick. It is the most disgraceful thing in the world that a skilled worker is here on trial for murder, this man Frick, who caused all the trouble, is hobnobbing with the heads of our government.

"This man Frick, this brutal tyrant, dared to commit treason by bringing into the borders of this state an armed body of men for his own private purposes."

Charles Mansfield, of Homestead, testified that the first shot fired seemed to come from the barge on which the Pinkertons were. He did not see Critchlow at the time of the shooting. He had seen, he said, and spoken of the presence of another person named Critchlow, but he was not sure it was the defendant.

The defense devoted the entire afternoon and night session to proving that Critchlow was not at the mill on the day of the riot.

It is the opinion of attorneys who have heard the evidence that Critchlow has proved a good alibi and that conviction is not probable.

The Pinkerton Investigation.

CHICAGO, Nov. 22.—The Chicago end of the Pinkerton investigation by Senators Peffer and Gallinger is finished. Frank Burnham, a Pinkerton, who went to Homestead, testified that he was sworn in, but could not say where. The committee adjourned to meet in the Duquesne hotel, Pittsburg, Thursday, to continue the investigation.

It is not improbable that the senatorial investigation into the question of the Homestead riots may have some effect on the charges of murder and conspiracy prepared against a number of the strikers. Senator Peffer said:

"I think the committee will make some recommendation with regard to bringing about a termination of the struggle. To continue these prosecutions will only imbitter feeling all around, and Senator Gallinger and myself are so thoroughly in accord on the subject that I think we shall report somewhat on the lines I have indicated."

The Rush at Homestead.

HOMESTEAD, Pa., Nov. 22.—There was a grand rush at Homestead by the strikers to get back to work. A large number were turned away, some with good prospects of securing their old position in the near future, while many were informed that they would be given no work under any consideration. It is now generally evident that the black list is quite long and those whose names appear on this list will be forced to seek work elsewhere.

AWFUL EXPLOSION OF POWDER.

Three Men Were Killed and Several Others Will Die.

COLLIERS, W. Va., Nov. 22.—A fearful powder explosion occurred shortly after noon at the Blanch coal mine, located at the west end of Colliers. Twenty-five kegs of powder exploded, causing the instant death of three miners and the serious wounding of six others, three of whom will probably die. The names of those who were killed are as follows: John Hicky, Wesley Anderson (colored) and Michael Gardner.

William Anderson (colored) was just entering the mine when the explosion occurred. He was blown a distance of fifty yards, over a trestle and will die. Edward Cook (colored) was badly burned about the head and back and will die. John Gillespie, of Akron, O., was burned inwardly and it is thought he cannot recover. A dozen others were severely hurt.

The explosion occurred as the men were returning from dinner, which was providential, for had it occurred ten minutes later the destruction of life would in all probability have been something awful. The force of the explosion is shown by the distance some of the dead were blown. Wesley Anderson's body was thrown through the air a distance of over 100 yards.

It is supposed that the explosion was caused by a piece of fuse, which became lighted in some manner, and coming in contact with the boxes in which the powder cans were kept.

The mine belongs to H. C. Smith, of New Cumberland, W. Va., and William Smith and John McNutt, of Wellsville. About fifty men are employed in the mine, which has been in operation since May, 1891.

These resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the Amateur Athletic union's annual championship and World's fair committee be instructed to make arrangements to hold in Chicago a handicap meeting open to the world and a world's championship athletic competition.

Resolved, That the committee be instructed to correspond with foreign athletic associations in relation to the world's championship meeting and have full authority to conduct the said meeting.

Such resolutions, the mayor says, passed by the council, signed by the mayor of the city, attested by the city clerk and approved by the other officers of the municipality, would express the official sense of the city on the subject.

The Comet Not Biela's.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22.—Father Searle, of the Catholic university, has made some observations of the comet and decides it is not Biela's. It was nearest the sun on Oct. 11; is receding from the sun and earth and is getting fainter. It is now about 150,000,000 miles from the earth. It has an elliptic orbit, moving around the sun in about six years. The theory of its approaching the earth, says Father Searle, arose from a mistake of ten minutes of time in the original telegram.

"This talk about the expense of a European trip is absurd," said the returned tourist to a reporter. "If a man knows how to travel comfortably without being extravagant he can make a short tour of Europe for less money than it would cost him to go to the seashore. Now before I started I figured the matter out, and found that I could be gone five or six weeks for something like $250."

"Any man can do that."

"You can prove it by the guidebooks, can't you?"

"Of course. How much did your trip cost you?"

"My trip?"

"Yes, your trip."

"Oh, well, I didn't exactly stick to the programme, you know. I suppose it cost me $600 to $1,000. But I can show you how—"

"Of course, of course. Any one can do that."—Chicago Journal.

Little Foo Has Tho Boy.

The lot of Alexander, the boy king of Servia, is even more irksome than that of King Charles and Prince Ferdinand. Three regents aid the young king during his minority. He is allowed to see his mother, whom he fondly loves, but once a week, and then not alone. His time is spent between his studies and in amusements, in which he has no companions. His studies include French, general history, geography, German language, literature and military science, and he is said by his instructors to be an apt pupil. A morning horseback ride and an occasional game of lawn tennis are his only diversions. King Alexander is now a well grown lad of fifteen. His face shows intelligence, but his forehead is low, and his mouth and nose are weak. What kind of a man the boy will prove remains for the future to disclose.

A Little Girl's Verse.

The visitors of a well known suburban Sunday school were treated to an entertainment not down in the programme, and a certain dern are young lady of that place is now hiding her diminished head in consequence.

On the occasion in question the school was receiving a call from two or three distinguished people, and the several classes were being put through their paces, so to speak. On reaching the infant class each scholar was requested to recite a verse of Scripture which had been previously committed to memory.

Among the children was a little girl of five years, who had come into the class on that day for the first time, and supposing that she was unprepared to speak Miss Anne, the teacher, was about to pass her by, when up went a tiny hand. "I know a verse my Aunt Belle taught me," was the announcement made in a slightly re-pronchity tone. On being told that she might repeat it, she stood up and gave utterance to the following reprehensible sentiments:

Every dirl that dots a bos,
And cows and tells her mowver,
Ought to flie to be a maid maid,
And never dot married.

Poor Aunt Belle! It will be long ere she is allowed to forget the results of her early effort to instill a love of poetry into the heart of her little niece.—Yankee Blade.

All She Did Was to smile.

"You look very much pleased about something," said a gentleman on a suburban train to the conductor, who was ordinarily a somewhat grim and stern faced personage.

"I presume so," replied the conductor. "I've just seen a little girl who takes this train to go in to school every morning, and she always smiles at me when I punch her ticket. I declare, it makes me good natured for the rest of the trip!"

Yet all she did was to smile.—Youth's Companion.

Getting Rid of a Boy.

A head master of Harrow had a way essentially his own of getting rid of little boys whom he invited to breakfast. You know, little boys have a peculiar habit of becoming inconveniently gifted to a certain. The hospitable "head" would quietly go up to the youngster—who was perhaps in the middle of an herculean—and say very gently, and with paternal kindness, "And must you really go?" The little boy in variably went.—Strand Magazine.

A Little Girl in Bermuda.

A lady who recently visited Bermuda says she met a little colored girl who said her name was "Eleanor Beatrice Virginia Blanche Smith," but that her mother called her "Minnie" for short. The same little girl sang a hymn ending with the remarkable refrain, "And we'll all smell the harmony." The hymn afterward learned that the true version was, "And we'll all swell the harmony."—New York Tribune.

Boys Who Grow Very Tall.

The Norwegian boy has for his next door neighbors the Lapplanders. When the Norwegian boy grows up he becomes one of the tallest men in the world, for there is no other race of men as big as the Norsemen. The Lapland boy, on the contrary, never grows very tall, although he is right next door, geographically, to the Norwegians.—New York Recorder.

Playing House.

Madge (supposed to be in search of board)—Can I get room here, Mrs. Fleming?
Jenny (fanidasy)—Is that child yours?
Madge—Yes'm.
Jenny—I'm sorry, but we don't take children here.—Brooklyn Life.

How Japanese Children Walk.

Japanese children are taught to sit on the soles of their feet instead of resting as other children do. A Japanese baby, instead of being taught to creep upon its knees, is made to begin walking by traveling upon its hands and the soles of its feet. —Exchange.

Gentlemanly Women.

Women have been Billingsgate fishwomen, and plowed with a cow as a yoke-fellow, and there was no talk about their "usurping the place of men." They were the life of the Billingsgate inn and the donkey that the world was not stirred to save them from being unsexed. If the "modern maiden," with an inheritance of refinement and education, and with possibilities far beyond those which the female maiden of a hundred years ago, trained to stand side by side by being strapped to "backboards," and to converse sweetly by practicing "prime" and "prism," and to make rose conserves and fine lace, could by the widest stretch of imagination conceive itself, I say, this young woman is going to become a swaggering fop, or a bluff boor, she is throwing away her birthright for a mess of garbage.

Girls, I beg of you; mothers implore you, to keep sacred every gentle grace of womanhood. It is your right. Do not let a false social standard or a discouraged heart wrest it from you. If you have leisure, and live in a city, beware how you sink below the manners of a gentlewoman while you array yourself in the garb of one. The country girl is quite as much in danger. She may be "loud" in her fashions and her manners, and I know of no place where there is a more painful exhibition of unwomanliness on the part of young girls than on village streets. A girl who from babyhood is nurtured in the spirit of a noble graciousness, though she live in the humblest cottage, will be a lady always.—Mrs. Lyman Abbott in Ladies' Home Journal.

A Woman Who Loved Poe.

The name of Sarah Helen Whitman will be forever associated with the name of Edgar A. Poe as that of the woman he most passionately loved during life, and who most jealously guarded and defended his memory when he was dead.

Their names will be linked together like the names of Sidney and the fair Geraldine, Byron and Mary Chaworth, Burns and Highland Mary. It is well known that after the death of his child wife, Virginia Clemm, Poe was seeking "surcease of sorrow" for his lost Lenore," became engaged to Mrs. Whitman.

But it was not to be. The engagement, for some mysterious reason that has never been clearly explained, was broken off. The poet was blameless in the matter, as proved by Mrs. Whitman's affection for his memory and defense of his character. Scarcely was the dead poet in his long neglected grave when slander and obloquy were heaped upon his memory.

Mrs. Whitman was one of the first to come to the defense, and as has been beautifully said, "she walked backward and threw over his memory the shining mantle of her love." She appeared as his champion when he was attacked—whether it was by some penny-a-liner seeking to puff himself into brief notice by abusing Poe, or some silly woman trying to ship into fame on Poe's name.—Eugene L. Didier in Chautauquan.

Easy Enough to Please a Man.

A man may perhaps look bored if he is talking to a woman who is bent on conversing about things in which he has no interest. For instance, if he is a man of literary tastes, an embryo savant with rather dull and prosy ideas, she will never be able to get a word out of him if she rattles on until doomsday about the latest society gossip, the fashionable walk or the new opera, but let her touch ever so lightly on the question of books, even though her knowledge be very, very slight, and she will be awakens to new activity. He will then do all the talking, and if she is only clever enough to be a good listener and not yawn in his face, even though at times he gets beyond her depth, she will never have occasion to complain of her inability to get such a one to talk.

It is the same with men in every walk in life. Every single one has some especial hobby which, if you are fortunate enough to touch, will be the keynote of an interesting conversation that is bound to teach you something well worth knowing. The humblest artisan may not of course be possessed of society lore, but he can talk intelligently and well concerning the trade that he understands, from A to Z. Any woman can please a man if she has tact enough to draw him out on those topics that he himself knows he's able to talk about.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Something About Edna Lyall.

Of the personality of Edna Lyall, whose "Donovan" achieved such marked success, but little is known outside her family, for her life is more free from the busy streets of London in the quiet of Eastbourne, or in traveling about in search of health and rest. Besides the authoress is a home loving woman, with a horror of publicity and little care for society—literary or otherwise. The nom de plume Edna Lyall is only a transposition of the letters of the real name, Ada Ellen Bayly, and not until an imposter claiming to be the true Edna Lyall annoyed her exceedingly did any but her most intimate acquaintances know that writer and she daughter of the London barrister, Mr. Bayly, were the same.

Miss Lyall's first story was finished before she was eighteen, but although favorably received did not produce the marked impression of "Donovan," which followed. Miss Bayly is a delicate girl, frequently obliged to give up her work entirely, and never able to devote a definite portion of time to writing. Her works are all written with a purpose, frequently thought out on horseback, and then put into a typewriter, on which she has learned to compose as readily as with a pen. The profits of "Donovan" have been invested in trust through an entire college course of four years with four new gowns, and she was well dressed all the time. The expenses of fitting up one's quarters are not so much for a woman as for a man, supposing it to be done at all in the latter case. The "knowing how," which is characteristic of a woman's fingers, is better than a great many dollars in a man's purse.

The daintiest study parlors the writer has ever seen were two furnished with the most trifling articles of bric-a-brac by the college and decorated at an additional expense of twenty-six dollars for the two by the girls who had taken them for the year. There is no point of economy in which the woman student has not the advantage of the man student. No matter how little he can live on, she can live on less. When he economizes in dead earnest he goes into a cooking club and eats abominable food because it is cheap. She rigs upa kerosene stove in her own room and does her own cooking, and lives well on a dollar less a week than he does.—Exchange.

WOMEN OF FRANCE.

THEY DIRECT THE MEN IN POLITICS AND BUSINESS.

How the Wife of a Frenchman Differs from the Better Half of an Englishman—They Are a Light Hearted Class of Beings Who Enjoy Pleasure.

You have asked me to write a short paper on the French woman and her leading characteristics. The most salient appear to me to be purpose, capacity for straightforward action, and, what may seem discrepant with it, adaptability and diplomatic tact. The Frenchwoman is at once willful and flexible. She readily stoops to conquer, and is prone to make the best of adverse circumstances from which there is no escaping but through patient effort. All this induces a cheery, practical philosophy, which is common in France to both sexes. The willfulness I speak of is combined with and kept constantly in check by natural tact. If her sympathies are quick her head is cool. It is a pity that they are not wider, they being in general wholly spent on members of the limited ate family circle.

It seems to me that the English woman has a larger and a kinder heart, for outsiders than her French sister, while bodily cares for any one beyond the family circle. All her energies are spent on personal and family objects, but on these she labors. Her ideal of love is not a sentimental one, but it is healthy, and spurns well with the circumstances that mainly govern the French people. The wealthy lady is not fossilized as an idol, and to have incense burned before her, on the condition that she was not to step down from her niche to take the rough and smooth as they could in life. Her instinct urges her to be the helpmate, companion and indeed the comrade of the man with whose lot hers is linked.

Mme. Bonticault was a bright example of what, in France, feminine activity can accomplish when not cast into a wrong matrimonial partnership. That great and good woman was associated neither more nor less with her husband in his commercial affairs than thousands of other women are with theirs. He followed the custom of his country in fostering her genius for business and in cooperating with her in every way she wanted, whether so busy, to sell, to make ventures, and he was better than most men in not checking her beneficent impulses. In respect of having such impulses and letting them influence her conduct, she was a splendid exception. Those husband and wife partnerships, so frequent in France, are delightful for those engaged in them, and a cause of wealth and weal to the nation. They are a source of much honest and highly hearted companionship between the two sexes, and promote serious activity in both.

There is no more attractive aspect of married life than that presented on Sundays and holidays in front of cafes and restaurants in fine weather by French couples. One sees that the wife has entered thoroughly into the life of her husband. Their chit chat is mutually stimulating. He enjoys her clever bubble. Hard conditions of life (for the rich seldom make holiday in this manner) have brought home to them the advantages of being united. In their struggle to a livelihood they meant they have consented to be to each other for support and sympathy, but the man more to the woman than the woman to the man.

Englishmen in business do not let their wives know what trade risks they are running or what dangers are ahead. Nothing of this kind is kept from the Frenchwoman by her matrimonial partner. She is in many cases the chief business person of the firm. Thus the wife of the artist takes upon herself the whole commercial work of the association, drawing buyers to the studio, calling on journalists who may help him to climb to fame, making out bills, and to the best of her ability freeing her partner from the prose of life to allow him to devote himself entirely to his art. Her diplomatic cleverness is taxed in hunting after the cross of the Legion of Honor for him. Sir Joshua Reynolds regarded a promising painter who got married as lost to art, or, at any rate, certain never to be famous. The converse view is taken in Paris. *The wife looks better than the hus*band could for investments for his earnings. Mme. Coquelin invests all the money made by the famous actor, who calls her his chancellor of the exchequer.

The French woman can finesse, and understands that every truth is not to be blurted out. Still there is a splendid frankness in the way in which she goes forward on whatever path she is following. That sort of snobbishness that Thackeray tried to write down has no hold on her. No attempt is made by her to pass herself off for having a larger income than she really enjoys. I have often admired the freedom from snobbish pretension of the wife of many a young professional man, and have known some such who were qualified by good looks, education and fair social position to shine in ornamental parts in life. But they preferred to throw in their lots with those of struggling men of ability, who, if rich in well founded hopes of succeeding in their respective walks of life, were far too poor to keep up a genteel establishment.

What do you think of the highly accomplished wife of a rising young barrister who may any day come forward as a candidate for parliament preparing and serving a dinner to friends and playing the part of hostess with a good grace? There was no bungling in either the cooking or the service, nor any crossness. Mr. Burry. The husband, I may add, helped in many ways before the guests arrived. I was asked for a particular reason to come early, and I found him laying the cloth. He arranged prettily the butter and radishes and ran out on errands. Some of the most famous persons in Europe were expected. One was the illustrious German chemist, Hoffman, and the other an able Italian statesman.—Paris Cor. St. Louis Republic.

The Cookbook Pest.

Allied closely to the ladies of the jersey and seven cent shirt nuisance is the inexpensive "cookbook" writing pest, who tells you how to manage an excellent dinner for twenty-five cents, and then proceeds to enumerate five dollars' worth of material to do it with. "Take the roast duck left from yesterday's dinner," begins one of these inexpensive formulæ. As if yesterday's duck did not involve an expenditure at the start, and as if today's liver, for instance, would not be cheaper! "Make your butcher give you all the scraps belonging to you when you buy a joint." That is another senseless direction. It takes time to stand over butchers and make them do things, and housekeepers who get up twenty-five cent dinners have to be at home washing up their kitchens and paring potatoes and such.—Chicago Post.

Quite Appropriate.

A book peddler, who was wearing a small circular piece of plaster on his face, removed it while shaving a few mornings since, and replaced it when his toilet was complete.

Contrary to his usual experience, as he went about his business during the rest of the day he was every where received with smiles which grew broader and broader, until at last somebody lanched in his face. Led by this to look in the glass, he was somewhat taken aback to discover that, instead of the court plaster, he had affixed to his face a little rouind printed label which had fallen from the back of a new mantel clock purchased the day before, and which bore the appropriate inscription, "Warranted solid brass."—Yankee Blade.

He Corrected Himself.

He was a good fellow, but the grammarity of his language pained his educated wife severely, and she was constantly correcting him. A few days ago she told him of the departure of a friend.

She looked up at him, so he thought he had slipped again.

"Excuse me," he apologized hurriedly, "I knowed he was going, but I didn't know he had went."

Then it was she broke down and wept.—Detroit Free Press.

CORRESPONDENCE.

W. R. S. T.'s Reply to "Nassau" and His Henry George The ries.

To the Editor of The News:—Political economy is a science nearly every expounder of which disagrees with all the rest as to some principle, and about terms and definitions. "Nassau" Jr., would take me to task for not using the word wealth in the same perverted and arbitrary way as the theorists from whom he borrows his opinions—viz. Adam Smith, and Mill, Ricado and Nassau Senior. Yet Prof. A. L. Perry says of this strained application of the term, it is the bane of political economy, the bog from which most of the mists have arisen which have beclouded the whole subject. Nassau will find the only true definitions of wealth in Webster's dictionary, and I imagine he will have hard work to convince any poor man that he has wealth, through to quote his own words, "his portion is only large enough to satisfy the needs of a mere animal existence." No, the only common sense definition of this word is the one commonly received.

But some of the most gifted intellects take leave of common sense the moment they begin to discuss subjects. Hence John Stuart Mill adopts the a priori mode exclusively, and says of it "not only is it the legitimate method of investigation in the moral sciences, but it is the only one." He adds, "It is in vain to hope that truth can be arrived at, either in political economy of any other social science, while we look at facts in the concrete, clothed in all the complexity with which nature has surrounded them, etc., etc.

Now in this Mill is the representative of all the writers whose opinions "Nassau" considers so infallable. Yet, was not even he compelled by W. L. Thornton, to recant his "wage fund theory," and acknowledge that it had been shown to be false?

The truth is the a posteriori method must be equally used by every investigator who would rather remain somewhat uncertain, and open to conviction from experience and observation, than adopted a method that may satisfy him he is right, though he may be all wrong.

Finding facts surrounded by the complexity of nature, difficult of simplification and solution, these closet philosophers retire to a dark place and spin a web, which is a very cunning and beautiful structure in itself, but which is sure to prove the first lesson of practical trial, as readily as the spider is by the house-maids broom.

Has "Nassau" ever read how Alexander I of Russia became the convert of one of these theorists and attempted to put his ideas on trade into full practice? Carey says, "but the result proved most disastrous. British goods flowed in a constant stream, and Russian gold flowed out, and the government was paralized while the manufacturers were ruined. Finally the Czar was compelled to call in Count Nesselrode, who changed the system, saying in his circular, that the products of the empire no longer found markets abroad and that agriculture and commerce as well as manufacturing industry were ruined, and that the country was brought to the verge of ruin. By the way, does "Nassau" ever read the works of American economists? I can assure him the two Careys are much thought of on the continent of Europe. Or does he confine himself, like some of our college professors, to the English school and its method of reasoning.

That awe of so famous a writer as Mill has induced many scholars to follow him should not deceive any one capable of thinking for himself. If, as he says, "reasoning should proceed from assumptions, not from facts," upon a great subject, there can be no reason why it should not upon a lesser except that its false conclusions would be more immediately apparent. Suppose that a young professor marries a sweet girl graduate, both are disciples of Mill's and they consult over the first pudding.

He—"Dearest duckey, flour is nutritious you must use flour."

She—"But my precious goosey, flour will make a pudding. I mean to put in—well—lots of sugar because that is sweet; and plenty of eggs, for they are more nutritious than flour.

He—"And, you darling little humming birdy wordy; some lemon juice must be proper for it is nice in lemonade; and cloves, for cloves—well they 'add a certain fragrance to the breath. And—and some chocolate, for that is more nutritious than flour, too; and some sliced raw potatoes, for they are starch in another form and will give variety."

She—"Oh, how clever of you, you dear, intellectual donkey! You don't mind my calling you donkey, do you? (Yum, Yum.) I should never have thought of the reason for using raw potatoes if you had not mentioned it." (Yum, Yum, Yum!)

And so they go on adding ingredients, because, from their known good qualities, they reason that they must be good for the pudding. But the reader will wager that they never eat it, and that the next one is made by some one who reasons quite as much from experience as from theory.

Using Mill's method only, why cannot a skilful arguer, like Henry George, prove that white is black? "Here are two pieces of cloth," he says, "You claim that one is white, the other black." I assume that both are black, and if you will come into my study, will prove it. You follow him in and find that is as dark as Erebus. But he explains that he had it so prepared because it is in vain to look at facts, clothed in all the complexity of nature. You allow that there are few things more complex than light with its seven colored rays. few facts harder than that white is white, and though you have to acknowledge that it appears black in the dark, you diffidently suggest that it will be white again when under the pure light of heaven. "A remedy will be found for that further on," answers Mr. George. The attentive reader of his works will recognize this last as one of his favorite phrases whenever he comes to an insurmountable objection, for instance, that of greatly increased interest for money under his system, but that anything like a reasonable remedy is never forthcoming.

After all, has political economy any just claims to be called a science? The great De Quincy said, substantially, "Of all nothing has been proved. All is anarchy, even as to first principles;" and the same may be repeated to-day. After reading several celebrated, but clashing authors, a friend of mine gave it up, exclaiming, "I would rather not know so much than to know so many things that are not so!" In actual practice facts are always surrounded by complex conditions, and if these are not all foreseen no one can tell how they will work. Even on points about which the theoretical geometrician agrees, they are quite as likely to be mistaken. Malthus' cruel theories were once considered indisputable, and were held by Mill, Ricado, and Senior, but where are they now? The truth is, nearly all statesmen put these self satisfied planners aside, and cautiously test every step as they proceed.

Nassau objects to my assertion that assessors do not favor unoccupied land unless they do go from some improper motive, and then says that they do so "in violation of the constitution of New Jersey." But this last is exactly what I claimed in other words, and then asked, "What is there in the George scheme that would make public officers less likely to show favoritism and disregard the law?" Then he has to misquote me, so as to make it appear that land is the only, or even the chief source of wealth. Did he not see that I added "the legitimate arts, or only known credulity?" Does he know of no one who has become rich by working the latter? And how much has land to do with a great picture or a statue worth a thousand dollars? Very little with these, or any thing on which labor has been bestowed." Labor omnia vincit" Allowing that land be the original source of iron, how worthless is the iron in most of the mountains of New Jersey; yet, if labor were not too valuable, it could be taken out and turned into costly razor blades, or into watch hair springs worth more than their weight in gold. If the view that labor is the main source of wealth is the same as maintaining that "the dipping of water out of a spring is the source of the water rather than the spring itself," it is all right, and "Nassau" does not go back far enough. If, like his favorite authorities—with once Rev. Pentecost added starting with an "assumption" has enabled him to reason God out of the universe, he should still acknowledge that it is the labor of nature that distilled that water from the bitter sea, carried it in clouds, and deposited it at the fountain's head. I have lived on an island where, during one half of the year, all the drinking water had to be distilled from the sea by artificial means.

But by his mere cavilling on words and phrases, and the unnecessary use of so many W. R. S. T.'s and his endeavor to be "sarcastical" "Nassau" will make this discussion tedious if not interminable. So, for the sake of your readers, I will allow him to reply to this and leave the last word; trusting to their good sense to perceive the truth from what has already been said. It would be insulting their intelligence to assume that they cannot see how tax could be as readily collected on personal property as on real estate if proper laws were passed, but, as a reason for his scheme, Henry George has always insisted that they could not; and "Nassau" having that theory on the brain, it may be difficult to make the truth as simple and plain that he can understand it.

But I will endeavor. Those who watched the discussions he spoken of, saw that the majority of the legislators were bent on finding "a way not to do it," yet preserve their credit with their constituents. Many honorable gentlemen are honest, but it is believed not all are so. At best they prefer stocks and bonds to real estate, because more convertable, and, like many others, do not want to pay taxes on what they own. So I know "Nassau" would grow excited, and think he had caught a whale when he had read my statement, but like Jonah he must now come inside. For there are few of my readers who own property and what can be simpler than the following: Suppose a number of gentlemen own a great building, they do not care where they carry or hide their deeds or certificates of stock, we tax the building and they have to pay and deduct it from their dividends, do they not? Why not do the same with railroads, steamboats and all corporate property. Let the list of stock or bondholders perjure themselves about other things, this will not tempt them, for they can recover the money in lessened dividends. In the case of bonds with guaranteed rate of interest, let the State where they are taxed allow the interest to be deducted first.

But the Jon Sugar riers and objects. "When a railroad passes through several States, or a steamboat lands in many, or in case of foreign steamers, this cannot be done." The reply is, "But it can if you tax the road pro rata of its full value for all lines in the State, the steamboat pro rata at each landing, the foreign line the same.

"But," says the Hon. B., "how about stocks on property entirely out of the State?" Well, we do not deal in on property that is out of the State, did we? But if a man lives in California and owns any property in the State, according to its laws, he should pay taxes on that, and vice versa. And, Honorable Sir, I would assess your future, pictures and jewelry—over a very limited amount—for all I thought them worth; and just where to draw the line is out of the question, and not where you choose to claim residence.

But, Sir, Sir, all this would hamper business, and it would be very disagreeable! Yes, it is, and it is open for that objection; yet justice requires that they be fairly apportioned upon all who are able to bear them. But, Sir, Honorable Sir, that your will oppose any law upon this subject unless it contains such sections as are equally as easily evadable as the present ones.

In closing, let me remind "Nassau" that, before attempting to influence public opinion upon a subject which effects the happiness of millions it is well to do more than read three or four books, and all on one side. Some years of "profound study" are the result of experience, experience, especially of great industrial and financial crises in this and other countries, will do him no harm. W. R. S. T.

THE GAME LAWS.

Something that Sportsmen will do well to Paste in their Hats.

The Home News reproduces a synopsis of the game laws showing when the seasons open for all game and fish for which the season is now open. Ruffed grouse, quail, woodcock, upland plover, English snipe, reed birds, rail birds, gray squirrel, black squirrel, rabbit, all close on December 15; for squirrel, January 1; black bass, Cayuga bass, December 1; pickerel and pike, March 1. The penalty for the infringement of the law in all the first named cases, except reed birds and rail birds is $20 fine; for the birds mentioned and fox squirrels $5 fine, and for bass $25.

The law prohibits set lines, nets, fikes, the shooting of game fish, or the use of any device whatever except hook and line, or any device whatever that will intercept or deter said fish from ascending the stream in any river or stream above tide water inhabited by bass, trout or other game fish, under a penalty of $25 or imprisonment.

The penalty for placing medicated bait, drug, or any substance that will kill or destroy fish in any of the rivers of this State is imprisonment for two years and $3,000 fine.

Bass less than seven and trout less than six inches in length must not be destroyed, taken by hook or line or in any way whatever. Penalty $25 or imprisonment. If found in the possession of any one that alone is sufficient evidence of guilt.

The penalty for killing any song or insectivorous birds is $50 fine for each offense.

The penalty for trapping or snaring any game bird at any time or place, either on one's own property or that of another, is $15 for each and every offence.

Hunting or fishing on Sunday in any manner is prohibited.

Non-residents not complying with the by-laws of the Game Protective Societies of the State are prohibited from shooting within its limits under a penalty of $25 or imprisonment until the fine is paid.

Heat Without Fire.

French chemists, says the Aluminum Age, have demonstrated that it is possible to produce heat without fire, and the discovery is to be utilized on the railways and street-cars of the country.

The device consists simply of a block of acetate of soda, which is plunged into hot water. As it solidifies after the immersion it gives forth as much heat as a coal fire for the space of five or six hours. There is no danger of fire from the use of the substance, and as the same fuel can be used a score of times, its cheapness will be a great recommendation with managers of corporations.

EDITORIAL NOTES

We shall not starve. There is still 31.5 per cent. of the wheat crop of 1891 remaining unsold, waiting for higher prices.

Women have talked dress reform for a dozen years past, but the first ones to really apply it are the Ann Arbor college girls. On a stormy day not long since they came out in force wearing the Jennie Miller rainy day dress. The skirt reached down half way between the knee and ankle. Long gaiters covered the shoe tops and extended to the knee. The girls declared they really enjoyed walking in the mud and rain with this rig on.

A thrilling experience that was which the men on board Professor Baker's new submarine boat encountered in their voyage under water from Detroit to Chicago. The submarine boat was towed by a tug across the lakes at the time of the late terrific storm. To keep the boat from being lost it was lowered below the action of the storm tossed waves, ten feet under water. There the men staid till the wind subsided. They would have died from suffocation, however, if they had remained constantly tenfeet down, so every two hours, even when the waves were highest, it was necessary to raise them to the surface to get a whiff of fresh air. It was a thorough test not only of the endurance of the submarine boat, but also of the men.

Common Schools in the South.

George W. Cables has his say in The Cosmopolitan about the education of the poor whites and blacks in the south. He tells us first that the idea of the south throughout is that that country should be governed by gentlemen. "A citizenship of such a government by gentlemen only is the perfect formula of social order and fortune" to the southerner. This is a beautiful ideal indeed, if only a country does the utmost in its power to make all its citizens gentlemen.

The first preparation for this ideal state is the education of the common people, and in this respect Mr. Cables believes the southern states to be lacking. He finds that in the south generally there is ample state provision for the education of white young men whose fathers are able to pay for their sons' schooling. There are costly select schools, colleges and universities everywhere for the few, while the children of the many are growing to manhood in blank ignorance.

The state outlay for the University of South Carolina is $184 per student. The state outlay per pupil for the children in the public schools is $1.86. The total value of all the public school buildings in South Carolina is less than one-quarter the value of the property of the university and military institute—the two higher schools maintained by the state.

A like condition prevails in the other states. Mr. Cables quotes the statement of the commissioner of immigration for Alabama that the lack of public schools is what prevents people from settling in Alabama.

The Universal Language.

The author of the language Volapuk, Herr Schleyer, a German, is still endeavoring to bring it into general use for commercial purposes. A conference has also been proposed to fix on some tongue which can be commended to the nations for general adoption.

It is a chimerical dream. There is no need of Volapuk, no need of a conference to adopt some composite language that could come into common use without hurting the susceptibilities of French, Germans, Russians, Italians or the natives of Boorihoola Gha. Simply let one living language alone, and it will take the world. It is English, the language of Shakespeare, the Magna Charta and the Declaration of Independence. In the time of Shakespeare 5,000,000 spoke it. Today 100,000,000 speak it. Only one tongue is used by more people, and that is the Chinese, the speech of 330,000,000. But Chinese can never be the language of the world. It is to be English, and English only.

Zincke, a statistician, declares that in a century more there will be 1,000,000,000 English speaking persons. Matthew Arnold wrote concerning the proposition to fix arbitrarily on some language for a universal tongue, "Such a language will only be established by one language acquiring a stupendous preponderance of some kind." That preponderance English is acquiring as fast as commerce and the world's material development can advance. Java of the gold mines of South Africa, at the Nicaragua canal works on our American isthmus, in Japan, in India and the South Sea islands, it is all over the earth, English being spoken by traders and workers.

In America this language, which is the best mankind have found for practical, everyday use, is corrupted somewhat by the overflow of the languages of Europe upon us. This must be checked. The first duty of lawmaking authorities in all the states is to compel the English language to be taught in the schools—taught, too, by those who know how to use it. This is not a country of mongrels. It is a country in which the strong, rich, manly English language shall be the common tongue of the people forever, a country from which this same English shall spread in all directions.

FOR THE AMERICA'S CUP

A Big International Yacht Race Now Seems Probable.

AN AGREEMENT ALMOST REACHED.

Lord Dunraven's Next Communication May Be a Challenge—American Yachtsmen Confident That the Famous Trophy Won in 1851 Will Still Remain Here.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—The prospects for an international yacht race are very good. It rests with Lord Dunraven whether there will be a race for the America's cup next year or not. The American cup committee held a special meeting at the New York Yacht club house. General Charles J. Paine, the chairman; A. Cass Canfield, the secretary, and Commodore James D. Smith were the only members of the committee of five present. In his last letter, which was read, Lord Dunraven said:

What Dunraven Says.

On the general terms of the races we seem to be one. With regard to your remark that "as to the details of sailing the match alluded to in your letter, we think they can be easily arranged after a challenge has been made in proper form by a qualified yacht club," I take it that the details would be arranged within the propositions made in former letters. With regard to your proviso that "no yacht of the specified rig, either now existing or under construction, can be known to be available for the use of this club in defending the cup, shall be barred or penalized," I am quite agreeable to sail any such yacht without any penalty beyond taking or giving the ordinary time allowance according to the New York Yacht club rules. * * *

I am quite willing to substitute for my former stipulations the following:

"It is to be understood and agreed that should I win the cup the club obtaining the custody of it shall hold it subject to a challenge on precisely similar terms to those under which I challenged, provided always that the club shall not refuse a challenge in accordance with the conditions laid down in the deed of 1887, and is at liberty to make any arrangement mutually agreed upon, as provided for in the deeds of 1857, 1882 and 1887.

I trust that no difference now exists between us, and on your cabling me that a challenge on the terms of my former letter as herein modified will be accepted, I shall at once endeavor to arrange for a formal challenge being sent through a qualified yacht club.

LORD DUNRAVEN.

The Committee's Reply.

It was finally decided to cable the following reply to Lord Dunraven:

Dunraven, Dunraven Castle, Glamorgan:

If all reference to former and obsolete deeds are omitted the proposition in your letter of Nov. 7 is satisfactory, and we will recommend the New York yacht club to accept.

PAINE.

The members of the committee are unwilling to have any conditions as to how Lord Dunraven shall hold the cup in the event of his winning it. This is the only stumbling block in the way of a challenge being made at once. The average American yachtsman is of the opinion that the Dunraven forfeiture craft winning the coveted America's Cup are so remote that it was only a waste of time to consider that part of Lord Dunraven's letter.

Commodore James D. Smith is more anxious for a race than any other American yachtsman. If he had been allowed to follow the dictates of his own heart he would have waived all deeds of gift and had a race at all hazards.

A formal challenge may be Lord Dunraven's next move. It is not expected that he will reply by cable unless he declines to challenge without reference to former and obsolete deeds is permitted. In that event there will be race.

The America's cup, otherwise known as the Queen's cup, was won by the yacht America in British waters in 1851 and has remained on this side ever since.

THE AMERICA'S CUP.

MAKING SMOKELESS POWDER.

What Uncle Sam Is Doing in This Line. Commodore Folger's Report.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 23. — Commodore Folger, chief of the bureau of ordnance of the navy department, in his annual report says that an appropriation of $2,450,324 will be required by his bureau for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

Of the 381 guns of calibers from 4 to 13 inches for vessels, 237 have been completed and 116 are already afloat. Marked progress has been made in the development of smokeless powder. During the past year 1,500 pounds of it have been made at the Newport torpedo station, and its test in various ways gave most gratifying results.

As regards powder for small arms, progress has not been as great as has been anticipated. The difficulties of securing ignition and perfect combustion of a form of powder admitting machine loading of the cartridges have not yet been overcome. The same difficulties are reported from every quarter abroad.

The commodore says that the very successful experiments in the militarization of a high explosive as a bursting charge for shell propelled by gunpowder with high velocities settle the long discussion with regard to the relative merits of firing high explosives from air guns or powder guns. A decided revolution in the character of the armament of vessels of war is imminent. The batteries of naval vessels will be composed of two classes of guns—the first, as at present, of great length and power, using armor piercing projectiles, and the second, shorter guns of very large bore and firing projectiles containing charges of powerful high explosives.

Tests of armor piercing projectiles show that the Carpenter projectiles, made by the Carpenter Steel company, of Reading, Pa., have shown features equal to if not superior to the best of the Holtzer manufacture.

OVERCOME BY AFTERDAMP.

Fourteen Men in Serious Condition at the Holden Colliery.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 23.—Fierce flames are raging in the workings of the Holden colliery at Taylor, five miles from this city. Fourteen workmen who endeavored to reach and extinguish the blazing subterranean furnace were overcome by after damp.

Superintendent Davis, Thomas Hughes, John Fern, Brian O'Hara, John Jeffers, John McAdrew, Fred Tinney, William Dolan, David Evans, Michael Carroll, Henry Lanhart, William Goodman and Aside Foreman Evans and Daniel Williams were carried out so much overcome that the physicians had to work more than an hour before they could bring them to consciousness. Davis, Carroll, Fern, O'Hara and Jeffers are in a miserable condition and their recovery is doubtful.

This is the first instance of suffocation in the mines of this section from this cause since 1883, when twelve men were killed at Moosanaqua, near Sidebsburg.

President Sturges Co-respondent

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Edward J. Woolsey has obtained an order requiring Painter S. Woolsey to show cause why the judgment for divorce which she obtained against him should not be set aside. Woolsey alleges that his wife has been intimate with Frank A. Sturges, president of the New York stock exchange, and Edward Porterfield.

Extensive Fire at Olean.

OLEAN, N. Y., Nov. 24.—Fire destroyed the Blaise Opera house block, a four story brick and two two story blocks adjoining on Union street in the heart of the business section of the city. The first floors were occupied by Andrews & Conkling's furniture store, Blake & Wilkinson's hard ware store and a bakery. Loss, $80,000.

Edmunds on the Coal Deal.

CHICAGO, Nov. 23.—Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, who is in this city, believes that the Reading coal combine is amenable to the Sherman antitrust law and its product liable to seizure by the government, while the principals are liable to arrest and imprisonment.

First Defeat for Rev. Smith.

THE MONEY CONFERENCE

England, Germany and Austria to Oppose America's Plans.

THEIR DOG-IN-THE-MANGER STAND.

These Three Countries Will Probably Stand in the Way of Propositions Favoring Silver—Chairman Mantegazza Levi Outspoken Against the Goldbugs.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 23.—The international monetary conference was opened at 2 p. m. by the Belgian premier, M. Beernaert, in the marble hall of the Palais des Academies. M. Beernaert gave an elaborate resume of the history of the precious metals during the present century, clearly indicating that he stood firmly upon the platform of bimetallism. He spoke of the significance of the Latin union, and the vain efforts of the states composing it to steady the relations of gold and silver. The principle of the Latin union he regarded as invulnerable, but inasmuch as practice had been disturbalanced by lack of support from the majority of the great commercial nations.

He hoped that the delegates would reach an understanding as to the best means for the rehabilitation of silver, and make the Latin union the foundation of a vast international agreement as to the coinage of gold and silver.

England, Germany and Austria Cold.

M. Beernaert was warmly received by the American and French delegates, but evoked fewer signs of approval from the delegates of Austria, Germany and England. At the close of his address Senator Montefiore Levi was elected chairman of the conference and Edwin H. Terrell, United States minister to Belgium, was elected vice-chairman. Senator Levi made no pretense of sympathy with the goldbugs, and described the present condition of the world's money as peculiar for its unprecedented instability.

The daily disturbances of commerce and fluctuations of the so called standards of value he ascribed to the unsteadiness of the silver market. The situation had become so fraught with trouble and danger to the financial world that the time had come for delegates to such a conference as the present one to sink purely individual or national interests and to do their work for the benefit of the whole commercial world.

Several delegates requested the American representatives to give the details of their plan, as the wording of the invitation to the conference had been too vague to convey any clear idea of its concrete object. This the Americans declined to do, but they promised to submit their proposals one hour before the next session. After arranging the details of the procedure the conference adjourned until Friday. The conference will sit three days in each week.

A Dog-in-the-Manger Policy.

There is no doubt that the English, German and Austrian delegates will follow a dog-in-the-manger policy. So far as can be ascertained none of them has come with the idea of making a serious proposal for the rehabilitation of silver, and they will assume a purely negative attitude toward any such proposal coming from the United States or Latin states. In both Austria and Germany the allusions of the press to the conference are almost without exception to the effect that it represents the efforts of the silver producing states in America to enhance their product at the expense of the rest of the world.

It is very apparent that the Austrian, German and English delegates will be the leaders of every effort to render futile any work attempted by the United States or members of the Latin union.

The List of Delegates.

The countries which have accepted the invitation of the United States government to send delegates to the conference are Austria, Hungary, Belgium, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, The Netherlands, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Servia, Spain, Sweden and Norway and Switzerland.

The list of delegates includes, among others, the following:

CLEVELAND AND OFFICE SEEKERS.

He Warns Them to Give Him a Wide Berth at Present.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—Mr. Cleveland has departed from this city. Since election day the president-elect has been absolutely overwhelmed by visitors. Before he left for the country he issued this pronunciamento:

"Many of the callers whom I have been obliged to receive would not, I think, have encouraged upon my time if they had given the matter a second reflection. Those who have called upon me to talk about offices, it seems to me, have been a little inconsiderate and certainly unnecessarily premature. I desire to give as much publicity as possible to the statement that I do not propose to consider applications for office after, to my inauguration, and I shall avoid all interviews on that subject.

"Those who submit any personal claim an opportunity to present their applications orally, and those who burden me at this time with written applications cannot possibly do anything which would so interfere with their chances of success. Written applications will be so little regarded that I doubt if they ever see the files in Washington, for there is no reason or decency in my being overwhelmed with such matters at this time."

President-elect Cleveland's destination is Exmore, Va., a hamlet equally distant from Chesapeake bay and the Atlantic ocean. His sole companion when leaving this city was Charles Jefferson, son of Mr. Cleveland's neighbor and fishing companion, Bernard Biggs. Mrs. Cleveland and Baby Ruth remain at Lakewood, N. J.

Mr. Cleveland left this city unobserved, and great secrecy was thrown about his future movements and destination.

Mrs. Lease Ready to Fight.

TOPEKA, Kan., Nov. 23.—Mrs. M. E. Lease said to a reporter that she would accept a United States senatorship if it were offered to her, but she would not engage in the scramble for the place. "The office should seek the woman as well as the man," she said. "I have received hundreds of letters of encouragement from men since the announcement of my candidacy, but not one from a woman. I am the only woman who has ever been mentioned in connection with a place with the big men, and I gratefully accept some encouragement from my sex. I had a suffrage plank incorporated in the Populists' platform and I coerced the Republican party to do the same thing. If the politicians see fit to attack me because of my sex I shall fight this thing to a finish as a matter of principle."

MRS. M. E. LEASE.

LIKE THE ROSS AFFAIR.

Kidnaped Bertie Kearney Is Found After Seven Years.

AN ACTOR BROTHER'S STRANGE TALE

The Thespian Says That He Found the Missing Boy Selling Papers in New York City and Identified Him by a Scar on One Knee.

NEW YORK, Nov. 23.—The mystery of the disappearance of Charley Ross from his parents' home in Germantown, Pa., in 1874, has its parallel in a case that has just culminated in New York.

Alexander Kearney, one of the principal actors in the "Sundun" company, and a bright but ragged looking newsboy are the leading personages in this story.

For more than seven years Mr. Kearney has searched in nearly every important city in the United States, and in many smaller ones as well, for a little cousin, or brother as he terms him through affection, who was kidnaped when five years old, and who had never been seen or heard of by his friends or relatives until Mr. Kearney, by the most curious chance, found him selling newspapers at the foot of the stairs at the West Twenty-third street down town station of the Sixth Avenue Elevated railroad.

Actor Kearney's Story.

Mr. Kearney says:

"My people reside in St. George street, Montreal. When my mother's sister ill, about nine years ago her only child, a boy, was an orphan. My mother adopted her sister's child, and he became known as Herbert Kearney, my brother. I was very fond of him, and when at the age of five he was kidnaped I found I loved him so dearly as though he were my own brother.

"Detectives were put at work on the case, and all Canada was gone over in a vain endeavor to find little Bertie. I finally gave him up as dead, and became convinced he had met with some accident in Montreal or had been drowned in some mysterious manner.

The Long Lost Brother Found.

"The other night I bought a newspaper from a boy who sat on the steps of the Sixth avenue elevated down town station at Twenty-third street. Something about the lad's face made me think of my little brother, and I called him by the name of Bertie. He told me quickly that he used to be called by that name, but it was a very long time ago.

"Then Bertie was nearly five years old he was thrown from his sled while sliding down a hill, and was severely gashed in his left knee, the wound being three inches long in shape. The mark, I knew, would always remain.

"I discovered that I was right when I suspected that the little newsboy was my brother. The mark was there on the left knee.

"He told me that he could not remember who took him away from home. He says he heard a man and a woman one night after a long ride. He traveled around with a man with a bear. His skin was dyed, I suppose, to make him resemble an Indian boy. He was whipped when he couldn't get pennies for his master, and at last he was brought to New York. He ran away from the man who forced him to beg and sell papers, and he has been a waif without a home all summer. He slept about the city in hallways and he feed enough to buy papers. My mother will be overjoyed to see him once more. The hard life he was forced to lead made him look about eighteen, and he is only twelve."

Mr. Kearney sent Bertie to Montreal, after having given him a necessary bath and bought him new clothes throughout.

An Infant Salvation Army Soldier.

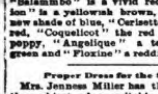
CINCINNATI, Nov. 23.—The colored people of this city have decided to raise $50,000, to be invested in stores, groceries, shops, etc., in which all the help employed will be colored.



Little Points on some of the Caprices

Amazon cloth with black silk flowers on it and ottomans with a broche design in old gold are novelties.

Prizes cloth in blue, crimson and dark brown, with a broken line of dim gold and flat, black curls all over the stuff will make quaint autumn gowns.

Fur promises to be even more popular as a trimming for evening gowns than it was last season, and white satin a favorite material for the fur to adorn.

The Russian blouse, it is said, will continue to be worn through the winter. This is probably true inasmuch as belted waists are the order of the day.

Some of the new colors have very poetic names. "Paradise" is a brilliant yellow, "Salammbo" is a vivid red, "Pygmalion" is a yellowish brown, "Iolande" a new shade of blue, "Carlsenie" a cherry red, "Coquelicot" the red of the wild poppy, "Angelique" a tender apple green and "Floxine" a reddish lilac.

Proper Dress for the Street.

Mrs. Jenness Miller has this to say on the subject of a suitable dress for the street: "The idea of a thoroughly practical street dress for busy women is one that shall conform to the demand for freedom of movement and yet preserve artistic harmony in proportion. The reason why a dress coming to the boot tops or a little below is rejected by the eye is because this length does not show enough of the leg to suggest proportion, and the foot shows overlarge in consequence. Grace demands that all gowns shall touch the ground, and first, where the skirt falls just below the knee, and is met by a perfect fitting gaiter of the same material; next, that which merely clears the ground, and last, the well hung train, which is suitable for house, carriage and evening dress only. Each of these three lengths is adapted for certain occasions, and neither should be worn out of place or season."

A Man, a Man!

"He is coming!" shouted the lady principal.

"He is coming!" shouted all the young ladies ecstatically.

"O-o-o, o-o-o, o-o-o!" exclaimed the more emotional members of the gathering.

"Young ladies, you will retire to your rooms until the ovicel is over," observed the lady principal, with a look of desperate courage on her face.

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A Lilliputian Naval Battle.

The amusing experiment of a Lilliputian naval battle can be made with chalk, white chalk and the ordinary table vinegar. Model, say, a dozen chunks of chalk to the resemblance of ships, planing the bottoms evenly, and using matches for masts, smokestacks and turrets. The rival forces you can distinguish by coloring the enemy's ships with black ink, leaving your own white.

Having placed them in a span or plate close to an imaginary dividing line, pour a good quantity of vinegar between the chalk sticks. Instantly you will hear an audible seething, like the hissing of shells in actual warfare, while ships, as if pulling up steam, will begin to move forward in slow revolutions, leaving behind them streaks of foam such as are observed in the wake of moving vessels. When meeting at the dividing line they will have attained quite a respectable speed, bumping and cuffing together in the endeavor to push one another farthest from the dividing line. The engagement often proves an exciting one. Of course the old iron vessel which has the larger number of ships nearest the center after the affray.

The chemical solution of this seeming mystery is quite simple. Chalk being largely carbon combines with the acid of the vinegar in carbonic acid—the same gases that cause the effervescence of many mineral waters. The gases rise to the surface of the vinegar in small bubbles of sufficient strength to cause the current which turns the chalk.

Since the patriotic youth will want to see the American boats win, it will be well for him to remember that the quality of chalk contains the largest proportion of carbon. It will also prove of advantage to plane the chalk carefully, so as to permit it to glide easily.—Harper's Young People.

A Word to Youthful Writers.

The young readers of a publication that regularly absorbs and delights them with its stories or articles little know the talent, labor, ingenuity and experience required for the production of each one of these works.

It is a very frequent experience for the editor to receive from some youth an ill spelled, ungrammatical and awkwardly expressed letter, offering stories unlimited for their perusal. Such he says, he devours every week with the keenest interest, and which, he further asserts, is the best publication in the whole world.

This literary aspirant evidently has not the dimmest glimmering of an idea as to what are the ingredients, seasonings, the method of cooking and the form of serving the agreeable dishes that tickle his mental palate. His manuscript if printed would appear in the columns of a publication as illiterate nonsense, unless, again sometimes the case in comic journals, a short extract should be published merely to provoke mirth.

this is to be said: Education now is absolutely necessary to literary achievement—not the education of grammar schools and text books only, but the education of time and observation and thought, then there are needed a thorough study and appreciation of the art of saying a certain thing in the most effective way, which is quite as intricate as the art of designing and building a spar.

Besides there is the talent! If talent be latent it will develop itself; if not, it is not advisable to cherish any false hopes of seeing one's name in print.—New York Argosy.

The Light from the Firefly.

A young reader wants to know what causes the light emitted by the firefly. We believe it has never been definitely settled to what the light is due, but the general opinion is that it has a phosphorescent origin. There are a great many animals and fishes that have the power of giving off light, and naturalists all agree, we believe, that nature has provided it as a means of securing food.

The little fireflies that we have here are almost insignificant compared with those that are found in Central and South America and the West Indies. The lightning spring beetle which inhabits those countries is more than an inch long, and its light is so bright that ladies use it as an ornament. The beetles are caught by holding up burning candle on the end of a stick. This attracts the insects.

The ladies that buy them put them in little wire or paper cages and keep them until they desire to decorate their dresses with them. Water has to be poured on them quite often to keep them alive, and they are regularly fed on bits of sugar cane.

The natives of those countries use the beetles, as we use candles and gas, to light their houses. Two or three of them together will emit enough light to read by very comfortably.—Philadelphia Times.

Johnny's Tricycle.

Little Johnny Carmichael received a tricycle The Fourth of July from his aunts,
To whom he's eloquent, for he caused a great dust,
And kept her at mending his pants.
He upset the cradle and ran over Mabel,
Who blew with her doll on the mat;
He scratched the new table and raised such a babel
It frightened Miss Matty, the cat.

What Puzzled Mabel.

"Well," said Mabel, looking up from her history lesson, "what I don't understand about discovering America is how Columbus knew it was America when he never saw it before!"—Exchange.

Hints and Suggestions Which Will Prove Useful—An Embroidered Sideboard Cloth—Home Made Curtains—Baked Ham Omelet.

Worn-out corset.

Don't use a cook's own a pet canary bird, and consequently doesn't have a gilt cage swinging among the soft draperies which screen her boudoir window, then she may be pleased to hear of a new way to make a hanging flower-basket. The worn-out summer hat comes into play; in fact, turned upside down, with some ribbons attached, it forms the basket. The high crown, which was its pride during the summer days, is first lined with tin-foil and then filled with wet earth and moss. In this such small plants as forget-me-nots, pansies and mignonettes are put. As a substitute for the flowers ferns or ivy look pretty. The hat which is used is most adaptable if made of coarse straw.

Embroidered Sideboard Cloth.

The illustration shows a pretty pattern for a sideboard cloth embroidered in flax and stem-stitch. The ground is of coarse linen embroidered after a trellis with double red ingrain cotton. The stalks, slender tendrils and some of the contours are worked in stem-stitch, the needle being put in through the cotton in some parts so that the effect of chain stitch is made. On the flat stitch in which the leaves and flowers are made the threads come only on the outside, and very little material is used in that way. This being done by stretching a stitch, and bringing it back again to the front close beside thread.

The long-stretched threads are crossed by stem and back-stitches to give them a firmer hold. The stitches which surround the flowers and the heart have an excellent effect. The latter is filled up with stretched threads fastened with overcast stitches, these crossed like stars forming also the small blossoms. The single tree shapes are ¾ or 1¾ inches apart. The cloth can either be trimmed with a plaited fringe, as shown, or with coarse thread lace.

HOME MADE CURTAINS.

How to Make Some Very Pretty Ones Out of Unbleached Cloth.

Very pretty and impressive curtains can be made of cheese cloth, with or without a border. Should the border not be used, turn a hem three inches wide down the front and across the bottom of the curtain. This should be caught down in herring-bone stitch in gold-colored silk. The curtain is then embroidered all over with double rings executed in chain stitch with embroidered silk.

In each set of rings there should be one of gold silk and the other of some contrasting shade, such as pale blue, pink, red, green or brown. The last two colors always contrast prettily with gold. Crewels may be used in place of silk, though the embroidery will then present a heavier appearance. The border may be darned work. Sprays of leaves make a good design, each spray being outlined-ared with different colored silks, cardinal, gold, brown and green. Draw the stitches from point to stem of the leaf, and then draw back and forth through the silk stitches only from side to side of each leaf, as in darning a stocking, but do not let the stitches come through the material.

Then outline each leaf round the edge with the same color on the white ground. A straight line of herring-bone stitch on the inside of the border, dividing it from the ground work, gives a pretty finish to the curtain.

Blanket Portiere.

A happy suggestion for work for those who do not wish for expensive materials is to utilize a blanket for a portiere. This does not sound pretty, but it really is most effective. Take, for instance, a red blanket. Turn over the top about seven inches and cut the turned over piece into stripes so as to make a fringe as a heading. The design can be worked on in two ways. A good bold design sketched on and executed in thick outline in the centre, and a border to match, running along the edge or fort. Worked all in a good shade of gray, lawn or black, the result is very good. The other way is to trace a good design on linen or cloth, and applique it on. A very large, bold design is the best on so heavy a background, and branches, large vine leaves and bunches of grapes or big pomegranates do well. Applique in white, stitched down and outlined in red to match the background is pretty, or blue outlined in a darker shade.

Baked Ham Omelet.

Whip six eggs, the white and yolks separately, very light; then lay them together, add a cupful of finely chopped ham or beating. Add a scant cupful of milk, in which an even teaspoonful of cornstarch has been smoothly blended. Then stir in one cupful of cold boiled ham that has been very finely minced. Pour into a buttered pudding dish and bake in a hot oven for a quarter of an hour. Cover, if it browns too quickly, and serve in the same dish the minute it is taken from the oven or it may fall.

The New Oil Cloth.

In putting a fresh oil cloth on a passage way or kitchen, or any much used space, it is a good plan to lay it run the old one. Raise the edges a little and wipe out the accumulated dust with a damp cloth, then let it lail again in pieces, and put the new one under it. The latter will wear half again as long, as the first cloth protects it from all roughness in the floor beneath.

Hominy Pudding.

Take half a pint of water and half a pint of milk, mix together and stir in one pint of wheat flour, beat two whole eggs and beater. Have the yelks from four, butter them and stir each one into two-thirds full. Bake in quick oven twenty minutes or until a fine red and brown. Do not use any salt or baking powder. Spiced Crab-Apple Jam.

Wash six pounds of good crab-apples and put them in the preserving kettle with just enough hot water to cover them. Cook until the fruit is so tender that a broom-straw will pierce it; then rub through a coarse strainer, having both the fruit and liquid pass through. Return the strained mixture to the preserving kettle and add three pounds and a half of brown sugar, one tablespoonful of ground cloves, one tablespoonful of salt and one of pepper. Cook gently for one hour and a half, stirring often. Put into little jars or tumblers. This is too be eaten with cold meats.—Maria Parloe, in Good Housekeeping.

Bookcase and Reading Stand.

A reading stand and bookcase, such as is shown in the illustration, would be a very useful as well as ornamental piece of furniture in any house. Placed, as here in its proper place in the library, but not every house boasts a library, and this handy little stand would be equally serviceable in almost any other apartment.

Home Hints.

Window panes should not be dried, after washing, with the customary cloth that leaves behind it lint, and shreds, causing the window wiped in this way to resemble a diminutive cotton plantation, but they should be brushed with a soft piece of chamois skin that is most effectual in giving a clear, bright look to glass.

Those who are annoyed by salt caking in the crusts in damp weather, so that they—the crusts—require as much pounding as a geographical pen, will be glad of *a certain remedy. A teaspoonful of corn*starch, or even of finely sifted flour mixed with a teaspoonful of salt to five pounds, lumps can be kept in the china closet, from which to fill up the cruet, which will be found to work beautifully, thus treated.

Another Use for the Onion.

A very convenient mucilage can be made of onion juice by any one who wishes to use it. A good-sized Spanish onion, after being boiled in three times, will yield on being pressed quite a large quantity of very adhesive fluid. This is used quite extensively in various trades for pasting paper onto the backs of mirrors or glass, and the tenacity with which it holds would surprise any one on making the first attempt. It is the cheapest and best mucilage for such purposes, and answers just as well as many of the more costly and patent cements. Some of the cements sold by stores taking at ten cents a bottle consists of nothing but onion juice and water, and the bottle and cork cost a good deal more than the contents.

Family Financiering.

"They tell me you work for a dollar a day. How is it you clothe your six boys on such small pay?

"I know you will think it conceited and queer, But I do it because I'm a good financier.

"There's Pete, John, Jim and Joe, and Will—Sam and Ned—

A ball dozen boys to be clothed up and fed—

"And I buy for them good, plain victuals to eat;

But clothing—I only buy clothing for Pete.

"When Pete's clothes are too small for him to wear on

My wife makes 'em over and gives 'em to John.

"When for John, who is ten, they have grown out of date,

She just makes 'em over for Jim, who is eight.

"When for Jim they become too ragged to be worn She just makes 'em over for Joe, who is six.

"And when little Joseph can wear 'em no more

She just makes 'em over for Bill, who is four.

"And when for young Bill they no longer will do

She just makes 'em over for Ned, who is two.

"So you see, if I get enough clothing for Pete, The family is furnished with clothing complete."

"But when Ned has got through with the clothing and eating,
He has thrown it aside, what do you do with it then?"

"Why, once more we go round the circle complete
And begin to use it for patches for Pete."

THANKSGIVING DAY.

UNION SERVICES HELD IN THE CHURCHES YESTERDAY.

Large Congregations in the Crescent Avenue Church and First Presbyterian Church to Listen to Interesting Sermons by the Rev. J. W. Richardson and Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut.

He took for his text: "Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent Reigneth". Rev. 19: 6.

After an exposition of the text, and a resume of history, which the speaker said showed plainly a divine purpose, which constantly marches on, ever when humane purposes are defeated, he referred to some of the conditions that should cause gratitude in an American's heart.

"As a community, we have cause for thanksgiving in our freedom from pestilence. He, who breathed upon the hosts of Sennacherib and they melted away as the fronts of the sun's lookings, has seen enough in our midst to tempt Him to raise the scourge of justice. But mercy stood before the throne, stretched forth her hands—and, the descending stroke was stayed. Not the scrupulous observance of sanitary laws, turned back from our door the dread cholera—God did it.

"The peace which dwells in all our borders, is an indication of heavenly care. The North and South are once more, brothers. No cannon shot echoes around our borders. True, there have been causes that might have sounded the tocsin of war, but God placed his hand on the hearts of men, and they held their peace. God has made peace the guardian angel of American civilization—the war-spirit belongs to Europe.

"Our civil and religious liberty, is the result of God's planning. The Hebrew Republic was the first effort on the part of Jehovah to lift men up, and make them realize the grand possibilities of individual freedom. But the Hebrews thought they knew more than God; they demanded a king. They received a king, and he place a yoke upon their necks. Step by step successive generations went deeper, and deeper into bondage to royalty, until Roman absolutism is the culmination of the awful blunder those men made when they asked for a king. God has repeated that sublime effort. His own right arm has made America among the nations what the Hebrew republic was among the Egyptians and Assyrians. Under our institutions, any man of courage may proclaim his sentiments. Any citizen may criticise the power that he gives from the president of 65,000,000 of people down to the town constable, and yet there is no Siberia for him. That which is treason in Russia, and transportation in Germany, is simply politics in America. Why! We are the government—we are partners in the concern—we vote.

"Then, too, we ought to be profoundly grateful that we live in a land where Church and State are separate. We are not taxed to support a State religion we repudiate. We have no unregenerate clergy who fatten at public expense, because protected by the government. In our land, every man may worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience. Woe to that sect, whether Protestant or Catholic, which resorts to any inquisition to restrain him from his God-given right.

"Our commercial and agricultural prosperity is due to God's oversight. "He who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," certainly can over-rule the shifting elements that produce bankruptcy or prosperity. The land given Americans can sustain a population of one billion. Encircle our coasts with hostile fleets, and yet we should be independent of the resources of all the world. We have 70,000 square miles of coal; 100,000 square miles of iron; 517,000,000 bushels of wheat per year—we may snap our fingers at the Old World. Then, again, our energies are not sapped to support a useless nobility. The Czar extorts from his people a salary of $8,000,000 a year; the Emperor of Austria receives $4,000,000; Queen Victoria $2,500,000, with liberal subsidies for all her children; but here, we are magnificently served by a Chief Magistrate who receives $50,000 a year—and, we have yet to learn of any individual refusing to be made President on account of the smallness of the salary."

In closing, the speaker said, "With some of us, this anniversary is not appealed as one year ago. Then the robe was all white, and the heart sang. To-day black is intertwined and tears are here in the heart. The home circle has been broken—a bird has gone to try its wings in bluer heavens. Henceforth, while we continue to sing, we will "Whisper" ing" be a mockery? No. Despite the wound that bleeds, we may sit at the banquet table and thank God for one who found a brighter, purer west. Let us thank God for the gift of the Christ. The has so wonderfully opened the portals of the better land, that the rays of His countenance morning and noon, with their prophecy of a happy reunion, in the brightness of an eternal undimmed day."

Dr. Hurlbut at the First Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Jesse L. Hurlbut preached the Thanksgiving sermon in the First Presbyterian church yesterday morning. The Rev. Drs. A. R. Lewis, of the Seventh-day Baptist church; and D. J. Yerkes, of the First Baptist; Rev. Cornelius Schenck of the Trinity Reformed, and Rev. Charles E. Herring, of the First Presbyterian church, also occupied the pulpit, and assisted in the services.

Dr. Hurlbut's sermon was of great interest and partly historic. He told of the people of this broad, fertile and grand United States pre-historic and modern. He explained why he thought the cosmopolitan and mixed nation of people known as Americans would in time be the people of the world, through their wonderful energy and progress.

His sermon was interspersed with bright illustrations, and ended with an exhortation to those present to be mindful of their privileges, and give thanks to him through whose mercy they were permitted to enjoy them.

The choir sang the familiar national anthem "America" and then Dr. Lewis dismissed the congregation with the benediction.

At the Holy Cross Church.

The Thanksgiving Day services at the Church of the Holy Cross were of a very imposing nature. The church, in and around the chancel, was decorated with sheaves of wheat and other blessings of the year. The baptismal font was also decorated in like manner. The music was well rendered. The rector, Rev. T. Logan Murphy, preached from the text: "O give thanks unto the Lord, for He is good, for His mercy endureth forever."

Following is the order of music rendered by the full vested choir:

CAUSED BY A DEFECTIVE FLUE.

Fire Burns Out the Attic of Mr. Boice's Place.

The attic, used as a storage room, in the boarding house of Mr. and Mrs. E. Boice, corner of Central avenue and Third street, caught fire, about eleven o'clock yesterday morning, from a defective chimney.

The fire had a good start before it was discovered, and in consequence everything stored in the attic was totally destroyed.

An alarm was sounded from box 51, and both engine companies Zephyr Hook and Ladder company and Alert Hose company responded. The engines were not used, however, as the hose was attached to the fire hydrants, and three streams of water thrown on.

The flames were confined to the attic where they originated, and nothing was burned elsewhere in the house, because of the prompt action of the firemen in extinguishing it. The furniture in the lower rooms was considerably damaged by the water.

Mr. and Mrs. Boice have been very unfortunate in having fires destroy their property. About twenty-five years ago they were burned out when they resided on Front street, and everything was a total loss as they had no insurance, and a year later their buildings were again burned.

This time Mr. Boice had his furniture and goods insured for $600. The loss on the building will be about $500.

Mr. Boice wishes, through The News, to thank the firemen for their prompt action in extinguishing the fire yesterday. He wishes also to extend his gratitude to his friends for their kindness to him and his wife.

ENGINEER DUNHAM'S MISFORTUNE.

Suddenly Stricken with Temporary Aberration.

Mr. Jeremiah Dunham of Dunellen, an old and reliable engineer, who runs the Dunellen express to New York, leaving Dunellen at 8.16 a. m., on his return trip Tuesday night left his engine at the "round house" and started for home to all appearance all right, but became suddenly stricken with temporary aberration, and wandered away.

His friends searched for him all night without meeting with any success. After repeated telegrams were sent out word was received Wednesday that the missing man was at South Plainfield. A carriage was sent for and conveyed him to his home.

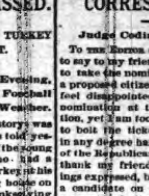
Dr. Brakely is in attendance, and with good care hopes are entertained for his recovery.

Mr. Dunham is well known among Plainfield commuters.

HOW THE DAY PASSED.

THE OLD FASHIONED TURKEY DINNER PROMINENT.

Entertainments in the Evening, Walking Parties, Dances, Football Games, Sold but Enjoyable Weather.



HE old story was doubtless told yesterday of the young man who had a tough turkey at his boarding house on last Thanksgiving and for days and days afterthing had turkey, turkey, turkey, nothing but turkey, until it got so strong it walked off and was lost.

But a sorrowful like that did not weaken the appetites of any who sat down to turkey dinners yesterday.

Many things of interest transpired on Thanksgiving. The wind was at work before daylight and gave a artistic dash of vermillion to each nose it came in contact with all day.

They were football games in the morning and afternoon between very young men teams. The older boys, of course, were down at the Yale—Princeton game, spoiling their voices yelling and trying to get a Winter supply of colds.

There were many dances in the evening.

Two "walking parties" of young men and ladies spent the afternoon developing an appetite for turkey and the early evening appeasing it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Judge Codington Won't Bolt.

To the Editor of The News:—I desire to say to my friends who are urging me to take the nomination as City Judge on a proposed citizen's ticket, that while I feel disappointed at not receiving a renomination at the Republican Convention, yet I am too staunch a Republican to take the ticket at this time and thus in any degree hazard the election of any of the Republican nominees. I sincerely thank my friends for their kindly feelings expressed, but must decline to be a candidate on any ticket and urge the support of the regular Republican nominees. W. R. Codington.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A Cause of Bad Memory.

Among the causes of failure of memory has been enumerated too much education. This may seem strange at first thought, yet it is true. We have crowded over the printed page from childhood. We have learned our lessons by rote for the purpose of reciting them. When the recitation and following examination were over our task was done, and the lessons were allowed to drop into forgetfulness. Little Latin and less Greek, still less of the history of Rameses the Great, does the average business man remember three years after he has left school.

The book memorizing has got the world into a bad way of depending on books without trying to carry things in the head. Before printing was invented the singers and historians remembered whole volumes of poetry and prose, and traveled from place to place reciting them and stirring the blood of the people to heroic deeds and patriotism. Those were the true days of the lecture platform. Now all is changed. We have things muddled and jumbled in our brains, and the man who is most learned in books is almost the most forgetful of common sense matters. It will be found that, so far as its limited field of knowledge extends, the ignoramus who never learned to read has a better memory than the sage. Not having print to trust to he has cultivated the powers nature gave him and recalls nearly all the events that ever passed under his ken with extraordinary clearness. In a statement of fact he would be worth a dozen college professors of dead languages.

It is curious to note the different methods persons have of remembering things. The modern scholar recalls words and letters by their looks and place on the printed page. He remembers by his eye. Jacques Inmuli, the young mathematical prodigy, did not learn to read till he was nearly grown. He says when he wishes to recall a word or figure he hears it in his mind. Consequently Inmuli remembers by his ear.

The pernicious practice of keeping memorandum books has done more to destroy the average memory than press book stuffing. The idea that the human intellect was made so weak it cannot hold in its grasp half a dozen different items at once is a libel on the Creator. Throw away your contemptible and weakening memorandums. Force your memory under your control and make it do its work. You may forget at first, but by and by you will remember, and with far less trouble. It is easier to carry your head than a memorandum book.

Warship Chimneys.

An American calls the long pipe or chimney through which the smoke escapes from a steamship's furnace a smokestack. The Englishman sneers at the American's greenness and calls it a funnel. The smoke-stack or funnel of the new American naval cruiser Brooklyn is to present a departure in naval architecture that is worth noting. The forced draft system for obtaining coal consumption in the furnaces of warships is objectionable. In the cruiser Brooklyn Chief Engineer George W. McVrille will endeavor to do away with the forced draft by lengthening the chimneys, smokestacks or funnels, as you like it.

The Brooklyn therefore will have her smokestack or funnel 136 feet long. If she ten should be shot to pieces there will be plenty left to provide draft sufficient to produce steam. In the shot chimney at present in use it has been found that the gunners in the fighting tops have frequently been driven from their turrets up in the masts by the dense volumes of smoke. The long funnel will carry this smoke entirely above them. Another risk attending the high funnel has been that it was in danger of going overboard in storms. But the greatest precautions have been taken to secure the Brooklyn's funnel by stays and guys so that it will be almost impossible for them to get out of place in any weather.

Co-operative farming colonies have proved a success in New Zealand. In the northern island of the group the British colonial government sold large blocks of land to three groups of settlers about six years ago. The pioneers worked the land on the co-operative plan, while the ultimate intention was that each family should in time purchase its own separate home. Orchards have been planted and grain and other crops raised. The settlers are rapidly paying for their homes.

A Frenchman has devised an electric helmet which will put the insomniac to sleep. There is a small battery inside the helmet which produces a "gentle buzzing sound," like the droning of a bumblebee. Dr. Billes, the inventor, claims that the most wakeful patients cannot withstand the influence of this droning sound more than seven or eight minutes. Many cases of chronic insomnia have often been found beneficial in painful nervous disorders.

On the same day lately, in different parts of the country, two people, a man and a woman, fell back dead in their chairs immediately after eating a "hearty dinner." Be warned in time.

YALE DOWNS PRINCETON

Dark Blue Again Triumphs Over Orange and Black.

KING'S TIGERS FAIL TO SCORE

"Old Nassau's" Plucky Players Make a Most Valiant Fight for Victory, but Yale's Brawny Sons Again Prove Their Masters at the Championship Game.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Thirty thousand people braved the cold wind of Thanksgiving day to see Yale's football team defeat Princeton at Manhattan field. Once more the Tigers failed to score, and again the blue flag waves triumphant over the football field. Probably never before in the history of football has such a game been witnessed. For brilliancy of play, unbroken line work and individual work the class of '92 will stand pre-eminent. Nothing more heroic than the work of Laurie Bliss and of Captain King, of Princeton, has been seen on the football field in years. Bliss' neck was wrenched twice and his lame knee injured on four different occasions, but with Spartan courage he continued in the game and only gave up in the latter part of the second half, when he had to be literally dragged from the field. Graves took his place.

Plucky Captain King.

Plucky little King was injured six times, but stuck to his work throughout, amid the applause and admiration of friend and foe alike. Princeton worked bravely and scientifically, and would certainly have scored had it not been for the poor play of Hall. On two occasions he spoiled Princeton's chances—once by a foul interference and again through a fumble when the Tigers had the ball within ten yards of Yale's goal.

Princeton won the toss and took the favorable side of the field and played with the wind. Betting was 3 to 1 in favor of Yale before the teams appeared, but after the toss the odds fell to 3 to 1. At two minutes past o'clock Referee Brooks, of Harvard, called the game, the men lining up as follows:

Yale.	Position.	Princeton.
Winter	Left tackle	Lea
McCrea	Left guard	Wheeler
Stillman	Center	Balliet
Hickok	Right guard	Hall
Wallis	Right tackle	Harsh
Greenway	Right end	Trenchard
McCormick	Quarter back	King
L. Bliss	Left half back	Poe
C. D. Bliss	Right half back	Morse
Butterworth	Full back	Homans

Yale Kicks a Goal.

Before the spectators had finished greeting the teams the ball was put in play. Suddenly a shout from the thousands on and around the field was heard. Something had happened. But what? Only one minute and fifty-seven seconds had elapsed, and surely nothing startling could have taken place. But it had. Yale had scored a touchdown and Butterworth was preparing to kick a goal. It was an event that astounded the crowd, but when it had learned what had happened—that Yale, by trick, had started off in the face of the wind with a score—its applause was deafening.

Two trials had been made and the ball advanced thirteen yards into Princeton's territory. McCormick motioned to Laurie Bliss, and in another moment Yale's captain had snapped the ball to Laurie, who started at a breakneck speed for CLEVELAND ENJOYING HIMSELF.

He Passes a Quiet Thanksgiving Day on Broadwater Island.

EXMORE, Va., Nov. 25.—President-elect Cleveland is enjoying himself on Broadwater island, the beautiful but isolated resort which is owned by the Broadwater club. The island is nine miles long and three miles wide, and contains a population of twenty-one families. At the late election thirty-one votes were polled and they were all for Cleveland.

The president-elect and his friends, Charles S. Jefferson and J. [illegible] Bissell, president of the club, at his cottage, which is a short distance from the village.

Although the village of Exmore but thirteen houses, nearly 500 people welcomed the distinguished guest and gave him a cordial reception. Mr. Cleveland shook hands with the gathering.

Although the object of Mr. Cleveland's visit is to secure absolute quiet and much needed rest, he expects to spend some time in duck shooting. Mr. Cleveland is an excellent health.

A reporter of the United Press went to the island and requested his card to the president-elect. He was received courteously, but Mr. Cleveland begged to be excused from submitting to an interview. However expressed himself as being delighted with his surroundings, and said it was his intention to remain on the island for five or six days.

It does not seem possible that a more isolated spot could have been selected where Mr. Cleveland might be free from the various annoyances to which he was subjected in New York. He ate his Thanksgiving dinner at 5 p. m., the only persons present being his companions, Messrs. Davis and Jefferson, and the host, Mr. Ferrell.

Mrs. Cleveland in Peril.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Nov. 25.—Mrs. Cleveland had a narrow escape from being dashed down an embankment while out riding. The horses attached to the carriage in which sat Mrs. Cleveland, Mrs. P. Freeman, jr., and the Misses Freeman, became frightened and dashed away at a breakneck speed. Mr. Freeman, sr., guided the enraged animals for a narrow mile, and by the deep chasm here, and finally succeeded in pulling them up without hurting any of the inmates. The party were then driven home, and immediately returned to the Freeman cottage, where Mrs. Cleveland is stopping.

Turkeys for the Clevelands.

PROVIDENCE, Nov. 25.—Twenty-one leading Democrats of this state sent big Thanksgiving turkeys to the New York residence of Mr. Cleveland. General John M. Brennan sent a twenty-seven pounder.

COLLEGE DUELISTS FOILED.

They Wanted to Fight, but a New York Policeman Interfered.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The numerous college boys here to attend the Yale-Princeton game gave the city its usual cost of revel Thanksgiving day. The police made elaborate preparations to see that the college lads did not put on the paint too thickly. Captain Connor, of the Tenderloin precinct, was also on hand with all the tall policemen in the lobbies of the Hoffman House and the Fifth Avenue hotel to keep order. Their instructions were to keep the boys moving and not to arrest any unless they insulted people. Along Broadway an officer was stationed on every block and the boys were kept on the run all night.

All went well until the fun was passed between a Yale and Princeton man. Then the Princetonian said:

"I challenge you to fight a duel now, at once, in Madison Square park—pistols, swords or wout you like."

The wearer of the blue was nothing loath. Sympathizers of both belligerents crowded around and seconds were quickly chosen. The party was about to repair to the park when a police sergeant appeared on the scene. Catching one duelist by the back of the neck he sent him scooting up Broadway. He then turned his attention to the other young man of a sanguinary disposition. Catching him by the seat of the trousers he gave him a momentum down Broadway. That ended the duels.

The theaters were crowded with college representatives. Over a thousand went to the Casino, and they were ordinarily orderly, only manifesting their joy or sorrow between the acts by college yells and inquiries as to what was the matter with Yale. They waved flags and generally made themselves known.

Against Ex-Mayor Baldwin.

WATERBURY, Conn., Nov. 25.—The much litigated case of W. J. Kelly versus Charles H. Baldwin, ex-mayor of Waterbury, resulted in a verdict for $3,000 against Baldwin. Kelly claimed that Baldwin induced him to put $2,500 of his wife's money into the Nonguntaug Granite company on a promise that he should have a position with the company. The company collapsed shortly afterward.

Bertha Laws' Bogus Checks.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—Mrs. Bertha Laws, who was arrested, together with Domingo Ruiz, the consul general of Ecuador, on charges of negotiating a forged note for $1,000, was rearrested for passing bogus checks since her release on bail.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 25.—Theo Seititzen of North Bend, enraged at the brutal conduct of R. E. Pickerel, who abused his wife, forced Pickerel to the river, where they made him take a swimming exercise at the end of a long rope.

Damages Asked for Breach of Promise.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 25.—Mrs. Timothy Rensy, a widow, has brought a sensational breach of promise suit against Hatis D. K. Hadenfeldt, a wealthy brewer, claiming $50,000 damages.

An Emetic for Suicide Lillis.

CORNING, N. Y., Nov. 25.—Michael Lillis, a dissipated young man living in Addison, attempted suicide by taking poison. An emetic was given him, which will probably save his life.

All Baltimore May Be Vaccinated.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 25.—Health Commissioner McLane says the conditions which now exist are favorable to the spread of smallpox. He advises general vaccination.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

PANAMA'S GREAT CANAL PROBLEM

Bills of Lading to Be Refused American Representatives of the Company by the French Liquidator—The Interests of the United States Are in Peril.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The Herald says the judicial liquidator of the Panama Canal company has issued an order menacing United States rights in Panama. The Herald believes that the crisis has been reached in Isthmian affairs, but that our country has yet time to step in and rescue the most important strategic and commercial strip of land from the hands of foreign despoilers and schemers.

"How else are we to benefit by our vaunted treaties of reciprocity with the South American, Central American and Mexican republics?" the Herald asks.

"Is the trade to be monopolized by the heavily subsidized ships of foreign powers, sapping the life and profit from American industry and levying as they will upon the needs of American merchants and American steamship lines?

No Bills of Lading for Americans.

"Is it generally known that Wednesday the Panama Railroad company, now in the hands of an official of the French government, served a notice upon shippers that on and after Feb. 1, 1893, no through bills of lading from the Atlantic to the Pacific will be accepted from the American representatives of the company, and that all traffic arrangements between the railroad company and connecting lines so far as they now affect American business are then to be terminated.

"This remarkable order has been issued, too, in the face of the fact that one of our own companies, the Pacific Mail Steamship company, controls the bulk of a large sum the good will of the trade to Central America and Mexico, together with all the rights appurtenant to the trade, among which the most important was the basis of through bills of lading."

DID WE HIT THE COMET?

Meteor Showers Seem to Indicate That Such an Event Occurred.

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—To account for a meteoric display such as has been seen in various parts of the United States many theories are advanced. Some of the authorities say that the earth has crossed into the comet which for the past two weeks has been visible in the constellation Andromeda. Others believe the comet has been enrolled in with some of the planetary bodies and partly disintegrated.

Still others maintain that the display was simply the beginning, the forerunner, of a greater one, which is due by mathematical calculation later in the week. Some astronomers believe the meteors came from Biela's disputed comet, while others declare that this could not be, for the reason that the big comet in sight is not Biela's.

Princess Marie Will Not Accept It.

BERLIN, Nov. 25.—The Roumanian committee on a wedding present for the Princess Marie of Edinburgh, who is to marry the Roumanian crown prince, is reported to have been squelched by a communication from the young woman herself, who will not accept the diadem valued at 200,000 marks because the committee have collected contributions with the strictness and pittlessness of government tax collectors.

Girls Hazing in Iowa.

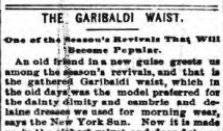
MOUNT VERNON, Nov. 25.—Cornell college, at this place, is a school attended by both boys and girls. The sophomore girls have been hazing the freshmen. The girls caught the spirit of the occasion and began pulling each others' hair. The faculty were unable to stop them. The girls, all in tears, finally fled from the classroom and are now calling names.

A Horse Thief's Awful Fate.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 25.—Peasants at Zastanzykki, Lithuania, surrounded the hut of a horse thief named Ivanski with the intention of lynching him. Ivanski and his family defended themselves with guns and wounded several of the lynching party. They then set fire to the house and Ivanski, his wife and five children were burned to death.

Clever Thieves in Omaha.

OMAHA, Nov. 25.—The store of Boren Jonnson & Co., jewelers, was robbed of diamonds and watches valued at $40,000 by two thieves, one of whom rifled the tray's while the other attracted the attention of the only salesman in the store.



THE GARIBALDI WAIST.

One of the Season's Revivals That Will Become Popular.

An old friend in a new guise greets us among the season's revivals, and that is the gathered Garibaldi waist, which in the old days was the model preferred for the dainty dimity and cambric and delaine dresses we used for morning wear, says the New York Sun. Now it is made up in the richest velvet and does duty on state occasions, such as small "at homes" and theatre parties. The prettiest one yet shown is of the most silky deep prune or, mauve-colored velvet. The waist is, of course, slightly gathered into a belt at the back and front, this belt is made of Persian galon, a pale pink ground embroidered with gold and jewels. The galon edges both sides of the front of the waist, which does not fasten at all, but spreads apart to show a narrow line of the full soft vest beneath, which is a peculiar shade of green crinkled crepe. The sleeves of the regular Garibaldi style are gathered at the wrist to a narrow cuff of the galon. Simple in its fashioning is the little waist, made in the old pattern; still the woman who in the sixties stitched by hand her calico Garibaldi waist would never recognize it now in its new glory.

THE CURIOUS TOY SHOP

THE DICTIONARY.

Eminent Opinions—Emerson Thought It "Not a Bad Book to Read."

Mr. Andrew Lang remarks somewhere that he believes he has not a single dictionary in his house. There must be many precedents for this strange omission from a literary man's library, says a writer on the subject of "Eminent Men and the Dictionary," or if many of our "standard authors" had a dictionary they never used it, or used it to poor purpose. Pope, and indeed nearly all the poets (Scott included, we may add), could not spell, nor could Sheridan, Dickens, Douglas Jerrold and Charles Lamb, and even Thackeray sometimes forgot the rule:

Put I before e
Except after c.

As eminent Shakespearean scholar, too, once showed that he had never made the acquaintance of Johnson's Dictionary. Browning, on the other hand, when it was definitely decided that he was to adopt literature as his profession, "qualified himself for it," as Mrs. Sutherland Orr tells us, "by reading and digesting the whole of Johnson's Dictionary." This fact explains the mastery of all the intricacies of the English language. By the way, a legal luminary has so high an opinion of that unpreached work that he refuses to accept definitions from other sources. Kenyson was said frequently to consult that odd old tome, a rhyming dictionary, and Words-worth, like Byron, constantly made use of vocabularies. "I never compose" he once said to a visitor, "without having a dictionary at hand, ready to turn to when I want a word." In that case a dictionary must have been his inseparable companion, and a 'is not a bad one either, even for the appetized "desert island."

Lord Chatham told one of his friends that he had twice read from beginning to end Ruther's Dictionary. He would wander for his trouble. Fox said of his great antagonist that he always used the word, and that each word had its own place and was regulated, not by chance, but by law. In latter life Chatham used to have the dictionary read aloud to him once a year. He said that many noble and useful words fell out of use, which is true. Emerson also thought the dictionary "not a bad book to read," though for another reason: "There is no cant in it, no creed or explanation, and it is full of suggestion—the raw material of possible poems and histories. Nothing is wanting but a little shuffling, sorting, ligatures and cartilage." We have a singular illustration of this proposition in the practice of one of our most eminent men of letters. This gentleman affirms that there is no book like a dictionary when anybody is in search of new ideas. If he is stumped when preparing a speech, he turns a few pages of any dictionary, and there finds ample material for the longest oration.

Macaulay's Memory.

Lord Macaulay was proud of his memory, and had little sympathy with people who affected to have a bad one. He was always willing to accept a friendly challenge to a feat of memory.

"One day," writes Sir George Trevelyan, "in the board room of the British museum Sir David Dundas saw him hand Lord writing, arranged in three columns down each of the four pages. This document, of which the ink was still wet, proved to be a full list of the senior wranglers at Cambridge, with their dates and colleges, for the 100 years during which the names of the senior wranglers had been recorded in the university calendar, which Macaulay had written down from memory."

On another occasion Sir David asked, "Macaulay, do you know your popes?"

"No," was the answer, "I always get wrong among the Innocents."

"But can you say your archbishops of Canterbury?"

"Any one," replied Macaulay, "could say the archbishops of Canterbury backward," and off he went repeating them, drawing from only once a remark on the oddity of there having been both an Archbishop Sancroft and an Archbishop Isancroft, and Sir David stopped him at Cranmer. He could recite not only the whole of the "Paradise Lost," but Richardson's great romance, "Sir Charles Grandison," a work of prodigious length. Insisted it has been said that "his mind, like a dredging net at the bottom of the sea, took up all that it encountered, both bad and good, nor even seemed to feel the burden."

The Man the Printer Loves.

There is a man the printer loves, and he is wonderful wise; whenever he writes the printer man he dotteth all his I's. And when he's dotted all of them with careful issss and issss, he punctuates each paragraph and crosses all his t's. Upon one side alone he writes, and never rolls his leaves, and from the man of ink a smile and many "inest reasons. And when a question doth ask—taught wis-ly he hath been—he doth the goodly stamp for postage back pas-ted. He gives the place from which he writes—the address the printer needs—and plainly writes his honored name, so he that runneth reads. He writes, re-ises, reads, corrects and rewrites all again, and keeps one copy safe and sends one to the printer man. And thus by taking little pains, at trifling care and cost, he assures himself his manuscript will not be burned or lost. So let all those who long to write take pattern by this man, with jet black ink and paper white do just the best they can, and then the printer man shall know and bless them as his friends all through life's journey as they go until that journey ends.

Origin of a Social Custom.

The custom of lifting the hat is explained as having had its origin during the ages of chivalry, when it was customary for knights never to appear in public except in full armor. It became a custom, however, for a knight upon entering an assembly of friends to remove his helmet, signifying, "I am safe in the presence of friends." The age of chivalry passed away with the Fifteenth century, but among the many acts of courtesy which can be traced back to its influence none is more direct in its origin than that of lifting the hat to acknowledge the presence of a friend.

Throwing a Slipper After a Bride.

The practice of throwing an old shoe after a bride is a custom misapplied when it is done by some of her companions for luck. According to the spirit of the ceremony, which is of very ancient lineage, it should be done by the parent or guardian of the bride, as indicating a renouncing of all authority over her. Chieftains in feudal times took off their shoes and handed them to their conquerors in token of accepted defeat, from which practice the slipper throwing custom is said to have descended.

SOME ADDITIONS.

A Few Codicils That Arose to Meet All the Emergencies.

A negro came before a justice of the peace and signed a pledge, promising to give up the use of all intoxicating liquors. Ten days afterward the judge met him and, greeting his acquaintance, found him a good deal under the influence of liquor.

"Why, Erasmus," cried the judge, "God bless me! how is this, and after your solemn affidavit too? You have broken your oath, Erasmus."

"Not at all, judge—not at all, sir!" cried Erasmus with alacrity. "De affidavy stands as when fust sworn and subscribe to; but bein', as you know, judge, a man o Webstertan education, I have added a few triffing codicils to dem original dockerments."

"Codicils, Erasmus—what do you mean by codicils?"

"Well, judge, I'll explain; I'll give them codicils to you in the regular order. I've got the dockerment right here, and I've never let it go out of my hands since I got it," and Erasmus drew from over his heart the precious paper. With a grand flourish he read: "Codicil de Fust—Dis codicil is to certify dat the meanin and intent of the above instrument is hereby so modified as to allow the affiant de fendin indulgence of one cocktail befo' he go to breakfas'."

"Well, judge," said Erasmus, lifting his eyes from the paper, "that codicil appears ekal to the requirement of de subscriber for short fo' days; den he had," reading his eyes upon the paper, "'Codicil de Second —De above affidavy an codicil is hereby affirm as am to remain in full force an ef fec', 'cept in sich sections, clause an parts of clawses as would conflic' wid de allowance to de affiant of a appetizer before each meal, bein t'ree drinks per diem, be de same more or less.'"

Here Erasmus again lifted his eyes from the document, and explained as follows:

"Dis dis las' codicil de subscriber existed in tol'able comfort about fo' no' days, when it not bein found to rise to de hight of all demands I felt obleged, judge, to add, 'Codicil de Third—All de above original dockerment and codicils are hereby proclaimed to be of full fo'es an effec', pervided dat no part of dare contents be so construed as to interfere wid de inherin right of de undersigned affiant and codicilist to partake of some sich suitable stimentient as shall, in his judgment, be deemed necessary to de decent an proper arousin of de dorman' energies of his physical an mental constitushin.'"

"And is this the last of the codicils, Erasmus?"

"It's de finis, judge. It appears to fill all de 'quirements, an is ekal to all de 'mergencies dat has yet arose."—Green Bag.

Better Than Orthography.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and after graduating he took him into his store. The young fellow was overnice about a great many things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter with it?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a K."

"Yes, does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man gently; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."—Detroit Free Press.

To Ask Her Name.

He muted gracefully upon one toe and twirled his eyeglasses nonchalantly. The elderly gentleman at the desk contemplated him inquiringly.

"How'd do?"

The elderly gentleman was very well.

"Delicate matter I'd like to mention to you."

"Ah."

He offered the elderly gentleman a cigarette, which was declined with dignity.

"I'm in love with your daughter."

"Eh?"

"Love with your daughter."

The elderly gentleman snorted.

"I suppose you've come to ask my consent to marry her."

He blew a lot of smoke through his nose.

"No," he drawled, "we're already married. I just dropped in to ask you her first name."

Before anything could drop he had flitted away like a wraith.—Detroit Tribune.

No Great Harm Done.

"What are you storming about, Josiah?" squirrel Mrs. Chugwater.

To His "Dearest Love."

There was one young person possessed of a pretty face, a kind heart and an all absorbing desire to do something to assist her fellow beings. After some eloquent pedigree she obtained the consent of her family to enter a hospital to study for the work of a trained nurse.

Among the pretty enthusiast's first patients was a young man with a broken arm and one of an attractive appearance. The demure, white capped nurse began to take an unusual interest in him, and asked him one day if there was nothing she could do for him—no book she could read, no letter she could write. The patient gratefully accepted the offer, and the nurse prepared to write from his dictation.

He began with a tender address to his "dearest love," and the little nurse felt slightly embarrassed. But she continued through the most ardent declarations of all absorbing affection to the end, where he wished to be subscribed an adoring loves for life time. Then she folded the letter and slipped it into its envelope.

"To whom shall I direct it?" she asked.

The wicked young man said amiably and ever tenderly:

"What is your name, please?"

They have been married a little more than a year now.—St. Louis Star Savings.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY

BY THE NORTH PLAINFIELD BOARD OF HEALTH.

The Supposed Cause of Much of the Sickness on Rockview Avenue for the Past Several Months. — A Nuisance Abated at Last.

There have been several cases of sickness on Rockview avenue, the causes of which was a puzzle to the physicians.

The Borough Board of Health have been quietly making an investigation for some time and, though they were satisfied that the sickness was caused by some one in the vicinity violating the Health ordinance, they were unable until recently to find the offender.

A few days ago the Board had the earth around a cath basion for waste water, dug up and discovered a sewer pipe which had no business there. The pipe which had no business there. next thing was to find out which house it came from.

They visited several residences in the vicinity, as by law they had a right to do, but blowing into the waste water and at last located the sewer. It was found connected with the residence of D. N. Greenglyke, 91 Mercer avenue.

Notice was promptly served on him ordering the sewer disconnected. The Board conferred with their counsel today to take further proceedings against him, for thus violating the Health ordinances and endangering the health of the people of the neighborhood.

The basin was in a most filthy condition.

It is due to the people on both sides of the brook that the Boards of Health make the most careful examinations to preserve the established reputation of this locality for healthfulness.

The city Board of Health should make a thorough inspection to see that there are no sewer pipes emptying into the brook.

All agree that cholera is likely to visit this country next year, and we should spare no pains to be prepared for it.

We have ample opportunity!

The offense referred to to-day have been a fruitful source of cholera next year had it not been discovered.

Rockview avenue is about the last place hereabouts that one would look for such a thing.

It is high ground and the people have fine homes supposed to have all the most modern sanitary arrangements.

All through the Summer Inspector Whitely has been trying to find out the cause of so much sickness in the neighborhood. He has made a house to house inspection, visiting them from cellar to garret, and has no doubt seen the cause of all the trouble, but supposed it emptied into a properly constructed cesspool.

Only the continued cases of sickness, including diphtheria, in one neighborhood, made the Board determined to resort to heroic measure which have finally resulted in the discovery referred to.

CAPTURED A BURGLAR.

THREE MEN START TO ROB A HOUSE IN THE PARK.

But They Were not Prepared to Find a Special Marshal in the Cellar, who was Attending to the Furnace and Managed to Shoot One of Them.

Some time ago there was several robberies in this vicinity, consisting mostly of eatables in the cellars and such other things as the marauders might lay their hands on in the lower parts of the houses.

One of the places robbed was that of Mr. VanDeventer in North Plainfield. Although the Borough officials made vigilant searches they were unsuccessful in securing any trace of the burglars.

Last night another raid had been arranged, possibly by this same gang of thieves, to rob a house in Washington Park.

About nine o'clock, as Special Marshal Stewart was attending to the fire in the furnace at the residence of Mr. William McQuade, he was startled by hearing the cellar doors rattle, he looked up quickly and saw a man in the act of opening the door.

Stewart grasped his club and sprang out suddenly on the man, before he was aware he was observed. The marshal is a big, strong, muscular man and he soon had the best of his adversary, but he had not counted on there being more than one, and he was suddenly hit from behind by one of the man's companions, of which there were two.

The three to one combat did not last long; for Stewart, when he found they were getting the best of him, pulled out his revolver and began to shoot. This was too much for the would-be robbers, and they started on a run, with the marshal in pursuit.

They proved to be too well versed in the art of sprinting for the marshal, however, and he was left in the lurch. But his shooting iron proved a more prominent factor in the race, for Stewart was shooting all the time he was running, and finally winged one of the trio. This one he captured, but the other two may be running yet, Stewart says, for all he knows.

Marshal Pangborn took the man to Somerville this morning.

TRIED TO RUN INTO A TRAIN.

Mr. Voehl's Horse Causes Some Excitement at the Freight House.

A horse belonging to Mr. Jacob Voehl, and driven by a man named Hoagland, caused considerable excitement at the freight house this morning about eight o'clock.

It is a very timid animal, and a passing train started it to rearing and plunging, and, tomake matters worse, a drill engine arrived in some cars on the side track near the horse, which the animal tried to run into.

One man was thrown to the ground while endeavoring to quiet the animal, and Hoagland, who had hold of the bridle was hit in the face by the horse's knee, while it was rearing. The wound is not serious.

The horse was finally quieted and the man drove off with his load.

PERSONAL.

Masters Bert and Fred Ten Eyck of North Branch are visiting friends in this city.

Miss Etta Shurtz of Somerville is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Peter Hodge of North Plainfield.

Mrs. J. Caroline Ayres has removed from Mr. Eden Boice's to corner Central avenue and Fifth street.

Mr. Harry Milliken and Miss Ella Milliken of this city spent Thanksgiving day with the family of Mr. William Craig of Dunellen.

Mrs. A. M. Gillam and Miss Emma Gillam of Duer street arrived home yesterday, after spending a week with friends at Bedminister, N. J.

Mr. Frank L. C. Martin of Park avenue received gratifying news that he had been elected State Representative of the New Jersey Division, League of American Wheelmen, for the ensuing year. They will meet some time during December.

Miss Dean Proctor's poem, "The Song of the Ancient People," published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., is soon to appear as a holiday book. The poem is by Prof. John Fiske of Harvard, the notes are by Mr. Frank Cushing, the famous ethnological and archeological scholar, and the illustrations are by Julian Scott of this city, two of which are in colors, in a reduced form, from his water color pictures. It will be one of the beautiful and interesting books of the year. No expense has been spared in its production.

The large lecture room of the First Presbyterian church was beautifully decorated last evening and was turned into a reception room by the removal of the seats and the placing of chairs, easels and rugs around the room, the occasion being an informal reception to the pastor, the Rev. Chas. E. Herring. The pastors of the churches of the city were invited, as were the superintendents of the Sunday-schools. The pastors who attended were the Rev. Dr. Richards, the Rev. Z. Fenton, and the Rev. Mr. Schenck. Altogether it was a pleasant success.

The Policemen Eat Cream.

Mr. John Tier furnished the city policemen with cream for their Thanksgiving dinner Thursday. The officers wish, through The News, to thank Mr. Tier.

MADE ONE NOMINATION.

ONLY ONE DEMOCRAT HAS COURAGE TO RUN FOR OFFICE.

And that One was Lawyer William A. Coddington, and the Office was that of City Judge—"No Nomination" was the Favorite.

The Democrats held their City Convention last night, in their headquarters on West Front street. It was evident they did not anticipate holding a very long session as there had been no fire built in the place, was as cold as a barn, presenting quite a contrast to the well-heated room in which the Republicans held their convention Wednesday night.

They commenced to gather about a quarter before eight o'clock, and from that time until twenty minutes after eight they were busy buttonholing each other to get some one to run for mayor. One delegate suggested that they nominate James Martine for that office, but his companion was wiser and stated that "Martine had said he wouldn't take the nomination under any consideration." After awhile they became disgusted in trying to find a candidate, and the meeting was called to order by the chairman of the last convention, Mr. John M. Dayton.

As no one would accept the chairmanship Mr. Dayton elected himself to fill that position, Mr. Louis H. Brown was made secretary, and Messrs. L. M. Stover and Saltzman were appointed as judge and inspector, respectively, but they were not kept very busy counting the votes.

The first nomination was for mayor. Delegate Loughlin nominated Mr. Otto Arens. Before the nomination was seconded Chairman Dayton inquired if Mr. Arens were present. On being told that he was not, the chairman said he would like to say in regard to nominating any one who was not present that it was all wrong, unless the delegate and the person's consent, as he himself had been placed in a position, as the Democrats of his ward. Mr. Bacon said he was positive Mr. Arens would not accept a nomination, as his health would not permit. Delegate Loughlin then withdrew Mr. Arens' name. As nobody had any nominations to make, it was moved that the candidate for mayor be named by a committee to be appointed later on.

Assessor—No nomination.

Collector—No nomination.

City Judge—The only Democrat at the meeting who had courage enough to accept a nomination, and he were nominated, Lawyer William A. Coddington.

For Commissioners of Appeal, Messrs. Jeremiah Manning and P. P. Taylor were named. When Mr. Rand was asked by the chairman if he would accept, he replied that while he thanked the delegates for giving him the complimentary nomination at that office, and though he didn't mind being "knocked down," he thought that the nomination for treasurer should be made by the committee, the same as the rest. No nomination.

The committee to name the candidates was chosen as follows: First Ward, John Rafferty; Second Ward, W. R. McClure; Third Ward, Fred Bacon, Fourth Ward, Mike Watson. To this committee will fall the work the convention was called for.

The convention then adjourned.

RECITALS BY MR. CHARLES T. CATLIN.

The First Entertainment of the All Souls' Lecture Course.

A thoroughly appreciative audience was present last evening in the cozy All Souls' church, on Park avenue, near Seventh street, to listen to recitals of Mr. Charles T. Catlin, who, by his excellent dialect and easy, though intensely dramatic delivery, swayed his audience at will.

The programme was as follows:

Piano Solo..... Miss Emily Sandford

Kilboo's Hotel (Recited in Character). C. T. Catlin

The piano solos of Miss Emily Sandford were very acceptably rendered.

The second entertainment of the All Souls' lecture course will be a lecture by the Rev. E. C. Bolles, D. D., on the evening of Dec. 9, entitled "The Thames from Source to Sea." The subject will be illustrated by stereopticon.

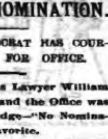
THE GAME OF FOOTBALL

WHAT A STRAIN AND EXERTION A MATCH INVOLVES.

It Requires Not Only Strength, But Endurance to Stand the Falls, Blows, Grapplings and Struggles of a Player.—The Cripples it Makes.



THE people of this vicinity, who have attended football games, by reading the account below, from the Philadelphia Times, may get an inkling as to what football playing means to the physical system.

Few except those who have been through the experience are aware what exertion and strain and exhaustion a hotly contested football match involves. It is all a great deal more than appears on the surface, and the self control required in the midst of great excitement adds to the nervous tension besides the physical fatigue. This of itself is enough to try an average man, but when to it is added the struggles, the falls, the grapplings, the blows (for there are blows now in a while), it requires stamina and real endurance as well as strength to stand it.

Because the men on the opposite sides in the field are not seen squaring off and striking at each other in regular Sullivan-Corbett style, it does not follow that there are not scientific ways in which in the tussles a team can be materially weakened or some particularly aggressive member of it disabled. Let any man in fair condition be suddenly thrown to the ground and then have ope or two heavy men, or it may be seven or eight, or even more, fall and throw their weight on him. Possibly his hand may be under one of their feet, or in the fall one of their forearms may have choked him across the neck. How much wind and energy will an average man have after one such experience as that.

And yet it is a common football experience. Many a man is hurt more in a football fight than he cares to admit, and so he makes light of it and plays on for the sake of the college or team and from self-pride. But games appear to be growing rougher, and there are a great many "accidents" and injuries, and taking all the teams in and around Philadelphia, it would be astonishing if the extent of the injuries received in football were known. There is one doctor in Philadelphia who has on his list thirty cases of injury at football, and they are nearly all cases requiring surgical treatment.

AGAIN IN THE TOILS.

Brodie and Hoffman Rearrested After Escaping from Hunterdon County.

Sheriff Lake, of Hunterdon county, has applied to Governor Abbett for a requisition allowing him to bring from Albany, N. Y., John Hoffman and Stephen Brodie, the two desperate characters who so cleverly escaped from the county jail there a few days ago. Having secured Governor Abbett's consent the Sheriff will apply to Governor Flower for a similar paper and then take the two men back to the cells they so unceremoniously left.

Hoffman and Brodie were arrested in Elmira as suspicious characters, and although they could give no good account of themselves the justice was about to release them, when the Elmira Chief of Police found on Brodie's necktie the printed name of W. E. Trewin, a Flemington clothier. He telegraphed to Trewin a description of the men, and Sheriff Lake sent back a request to hold them. The sheriff went on to Elmira and identified his old prisoners. They refused to go back to jail unless requisitions were obtained; nevertheless they will be in their old cells and under more strict surveillance in a day or two. They were serving terms for housebreaking at Glen Gardner.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The British colony of New Zealand, east of Australia, has conferred the ballot on women. It is in New Zealand that co-operative farming has begun to make progress.

The electric searchlight to be used in Jackson park at the Chicago fair will have an illumination of 180,000,000 candle power. The carbons in the radiator are twelve inches long.

George William Curtis created the Easy Chair department in Harper's Magazine as far back as 1853. He continued it till his death. Then the Harper's dropped the department, for the Easy Chair had become empty forever.

There are nearly a billion dollars of paper money of various kinds in circulation at present in the United States. Of this amount there are $626,000,000 silver certificates, $116,000,000 coin notes under the law of July, 1890; $172,000,000 national bank notes, and still $346,000,000 in old legal tender notes.

Sharp complaint is made of how the farmers of Maine are "ground down by the heel of the greedy capitalist." In this case the greedy capitalist is the sweet corn canner of Maine. The principal agricultural industry in some parts of the state is the raising of sweet corn for the canneries, and Maine canned sweet corn has a name throughout the world. A writer on the subject tearfully begs the prosperous canners to consider the farmers a little next year, and for the love of humanity to offer a fair price to the farmers. Well, they will not do it. It is not the way of capitalists ever to cut down their own profits for the love of humanity. The only thing will be for the agriculturists, for love of themselves, to start canneries of their own on the co-operative plan. They can do it. The canneries of Maine are represented as without exception prosperous and growing more so.

Co-operative Vacations.

Those who live on the seashore need for their recreation a little journey to the mountains or into the interior plains of the country. The one in the interior needs, on the contrary, the next salt sea air. The people who toil the hardest and most steadily are the ones really best entitled to outings. They are the ones most benefited by the change.

The happy period has come in our history when such vacations, such changes and outing trips are within reach of the poor. The girl who earns only a few dollars a week may have her vacation. The way to manage it is through co-operation. A number of girls or young workingmen would begin now and lay by each a small sum weekly for the vacation trip, by the time summer came the money would be ready. A very small amount would be enough. There are cottages by the seashore and in the mountains, plain little houses, where the rent is cheap. The furniture might be only of the temporary kind used in camping. Young men might hire a cook. Girls can always do their own cooking. There will be plenty of time.

The appetite is so good during vacation trips that nobody is fussy about eating. A cottage rented for the season by an association of vacation seekers could be occupied in turn by installments of the members, each installment having it a week, then giving place to the next. Between now and next summer charming spots can be found, the cottage or tent rented, the parties made up and the money saved. Where there's a will there are intelligence and pluck.

Our Friends the Workingmen.

Two items of recent news show that workingmen are beginning to learn how to fight. A great organization, said to embrace 80,000 mechanics and laborers, has been formed in western Pennsylvania. It is called the Western Pennsylvania Industrial association. The organizers say it is formed for a political purpose, and that purpose is the election to office of only such candidates as are pledged to the interests of the workingman. They will take no account of party, but will stand simply and solely on the ground of favoring the workingman. The candidate who pledges himself to do this will secure their votes. If these men live up to their blue china, they can secure almost any measure they want. But the chances are that after passing high sounding resolutions they will drop apart and each sneak off to his own way and drop into the ballot box his same old Democratic or Republican ticket.

The other significant news item is that a large number of striking workmen in a certain industry are starting a co-operative factory of their own. They will make contracts and do work and transact business just as the firms did by whom they have hitherto been employed. They cannot help making a success if they stand together, in spite of jealousies and unacquaintance with business forms. All they do not know they can learn with patience and perseverance.

Workingmen's co-operative factories have often failed, but that is no sign they are to fail forever. Workingmen have in their own hands the power to peaceably accomplish all they desire if they will use their brains.

AMERICAN PROPOSALS.

They Are Coldly Received at the Brussels Conference.

OUR DELEGATES WITHDRAW THEM.

French and Other Delegates Refuse to Consider Our Mutilation of the Money Question Without First Consulting with Their Respective Governments.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 26.—The proposals laid before the international conference by the American commissioners are as follows:

It is generally admitted that the very large depreciation of silver as compared with gold in the last twenty years, and the frequent and violent fluctuations of silver incidental thereto, have been injurious to the commercial and other economic interests of all civilized countries, and have caused and are causing serious disturbance and inconvenience to trade. It is the belief of the people of the United States, with singular unanimity, that the re-establishment of some ratio of value between gold and silver and the full use of silver as a coin metal upon such ratio by gold, by the general agreement between the great commercial nations of the world, would very greatly promote the prosperity of all classes of the people. * * * They believe that the sentiment for the larger use of silver as a money metal has been steadily growing throughout the world, and that the present time is propitious for holding an international conference to consider the subject.

Uncle Sam's Remedy.

The United States, while frankly disclosing its own views as to the remedy to be applied, has not wished to impose any conditions that would embarrass any government that might be willing to confer upon the most advantageous relation of silver to the coinage of the world. For these reasons the government of the United States proposed a convention of the powers for the purpose of conferring upon what measures, if any, can be taken to increase the use of silver as money. In conformity to the purpose of this invitation the delegates of the United States offer the following resolution.

Resolved, That in the opinion of this conference it is desirable that some measures should be found for increasing the use of silver in the money departments of the world.

In presenting, as requested, a further programme to be laid before the conference, the delegates of the United States consider it due to other nations represented that opportunity be afforded them to consider plans for the enlarged use of silver as money other than the one favored by the United States. It is our desire and expectation that the powers here represented will submit proposals to this end, and we desire those to have precedence in the discussions.

In addition to any plans of the kind which may be presented we submit for discussion the following, which have been suggested by recognized authorities, and at the same time we submit the general plan of bimetallism which is favored by the United States.

The United States' Plan.

Firstly, the plan of M. Moritz Levy, proposed to the international conference of 1881; secondly, the plan of the late Adolph Soetbeer (see Vienna News Free Press, Sept. 3d, 1892; Handelsblatt, Berlin, Sept. 25, 1867; Pioneer Mail, Allahabad, Oct. 13, 1892); lastly, we present the plan proposed by ourselves as delegates of the United States. The re-establishment and maintainence of a fixed parity between gold and silver, and the continued use of both as coined money of full debt paying power would be productive of important benefit to the world.

These ends will be accomplished by the removal of the legal restrictions now existing and the coinage of silver into full legal tender money, restoring by international agreement the parity of value between the metals which existed prior to 1873 at such a ratio as the conference may decide upon. The essentials of such an international arrangement should be the unrestricted coinage of both gold and silver into money of full debt paying power, fixing a ratio in the coinage between the metals, and the establishment by law of such equality, so as to the public for minting gold and silver coins.

The plan proposed by the United States commissioners cannot be discussed and pronounced upon until many other plans shall have been disposed of. The general attitude of the conference, however, leaves little doubt that the American plan will be rejected. The German and Austrian delegates are strongly against any measure which should necessitate any change of moment in existing legislation on the money question.

Sir Charles Wilson, one of Great Britain's delegates, started for London if action on the conference, has received the most consideration from statesmen and economists of the continental powers, and will be probably the only one having any chance of their approval. The plan may be summarized thus:

The universal and fundamental suit of value to be one gram of fine gold; the coinage of gold coins containing less than 8.888 grains of fine gold to cease; the coinage of foreign gold coins of inferior value to be prohibited within the countries signatory to the agreement; gold coins of inferior value in circulation at the time of the conclusion of the agreement to be withdrawn within five years; the free coinage of legal gold coins to be permitted to private individuals on payment of a coinage fee of two per thousand; the issue of gold certificates to be permitted against a gold reserve; bank notes and treasury certificates of less value than 5 sous pieces of fine silver not to be issued. As a complement to the gold coinage Professor Soetbeer recommends the coinage of silver money in the proportion of twenty units of silver to one of gold; the chief coin to be pieces of one, two and five shillings, marks or francs respectively; silver to be a legal tender for payments up to three pounds sterling, sixty marks, seventy-five francs or twenty dollars; all silver coins below a certain fixed standard of purity to be withdrawn; the coinage of silver not to be permitted to private individuals, but to be under the sole control of the state. Silver certificates might be issued by money offices and provincial banks in advance for deposits of legal silver coin; no certificate, however, to represent less than ten shillings, ten marks, ten francs or two dollars, as the case might be; each of the states adhering to such international agreement to give notice to the rest within two months of the termination of each calendar year of all changes made during the year in its coinage system.

The American proposals were coldly received. M. Tirard declined to consider them without first consulting the French government, and most of the other delegates also declined to give consideration to the American proposals without consulting their respective governments. Thereupon the American delegates decided to withdraw their proposals provisionally.

Alfred de Rothschild, of the British exchequer, has proposed that an international syndicate be created to purchase silver, with the view of effecting an appreciation in the value of the metal.

THE IMMIGRATION PROBLEM.

Ex-Minister Smith Favors an Educational Qualification.

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The first regular meeting of the Patria club this season was held at Sherry's. Hon. William H. Ahroux presided, and the immigration problem was freely discussed by Frederick Taylor, Hon. Charles Emory Smith and Senator Chandler. Mr. Taylor drew a graphic picture of the evils of unrestricted immigration, and declared that a demand should be made on our lawmakers for prompt and effective legislation in the matter. A radical change in the naturalization laws was also advocated by Mr. Taylor.

Hon. Charles Emory Smith placed the responsibility for a great deal of the undesirable immigration upon the various steamship agents. He was in favor of having an educational test, and the possession of consular certificates as able in only admitting suitable immigrants to these shores.

Senator Chandler reviewed the existing laws and said that he was in favor of testing the sense of congress upon an educational qualification. Each immigrant should also have some money when he arrives. He was not in favor of a heavy head tax nor any radical change in the naturalization laws.

The United States opposes the motion for further time.

ALARMED ABOUT BLAINE

He Is Quite Ill, but Not Dangerously So.

EXAGGERATED REPORTS DENIED.

There Are So Many Conflicting Reports About the Distinguished Patient, However, That It Is Difficult to Tell Just What His True Condition Is.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The illness of ex-Secretary Blaine, which is undoubtedly alarming to his family and friends, is surrounded by contradictory statements, which only have the effect of increasing the belief now current in Washington that his condition is serious. In the same moment almost the reports are encountered that Mr. Blaine has wholly recovered from the cold and fever that have recently prostrated him; that he is up and dressed and at work in his library, or, on the other hand, that he lies helpless in bed in raving delirium, and that his mind as well as his body is affected by his illness.

The actual truth, as learned by careful inquiry, seems to be that Mr. Blaine has really been dangerously ill, but that now he is improving, although he is still far from being out of danger.

Crushed by Bereavements.

The great trouble with Mr. Blaine, his intimate friends say, is his domestic bereavements. The death of his sons Walker and Emmons, coupled with his advancing years and his disposition to exaggerate slight illness into serious attack, has caused him to lose active interest in affairs and render him peculiarly open to the assault of any ailment. Members of the household have been extremely reticent, but the announcement was made at his house that Mr. Blaine is much better, and that the published reports of his illness were so exaggerated as to be most distressing to his family.

A personal friend who called to see Mr. Blaine states that he was dressed and while not strong was cheerful in conversation. President Harrison sent Private Secretary Halford to Mr. Blaine mansion with inquiries about Mr. Blaine's health, and Mr. Halford was told that the newspaper reports of Mr. Blaine's illness were exaggerated, and that he was dressed and sitting up and in a cheerful frame of mind.

One task in which Mr. Blaine seems to take a real interest is a revision of his great book, "Twenty Years in Congress." He was at work at this when he caught the cold which has made him so ill.

Mr. Blaine has been invited to visit Bermuda, where a private cottage and steam yacht are at his service. Another invitation comes from Mr. Flagler, the Standard Oil millionaire, who wishes Mr. Blaine to sojourn at the Ponce de Leon, in Florida. Another hospitable offer is from Hamilton Disston, of Philadelphia, who would like Mr. Blaine to visit him on his Florida plantation. It is said that Mr. Blaine has decided, if his health permits, to visit southern California.

His original plan was to become the guest of Joseph Medill, at Pasadena, but as Mr. Medill's house there has been temporarily rented, he declined. All that can be said with certainty is that Mr. Blaine and his family are agreed that southern California is the most desirable locality for him to spend the winter, working, if he is able, upon the revision of his historical book.

"The Picture of Death."

NEW YORK, Nov. 26.—The Herald's Washington correspondent says: "Mr. Blaine had another bad attack Friday evening, and for a time the outcome was much in doubt. The truth is Mr. Blaine is a physical wreck. He will never be a well man again. 'To see him is enough,' said an intimate friend. 'Blaine is the picture of death, and is as white as the pillow upon which he rests.'"

Illness at the White House.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—The venerable Rev. Dr. Scott, father of the late Mrs. Harrison, has been suffering for several days from a type of low malarial fever. His age of ninety-three makes his illness, slight as it might appear in the case of a younger man, a cause of alarm to the presidential household. Dr. Gardner frankly says that he cannot hold out much hope. Every day sees Dr. Scott grow weaker.

A Jealous Woman's Triple Crime.

CAIRO, Ills., Nov. 26.—Captain Ransom Sampson was shot dead and his wife fatally wounded by a woman named May Sims at the Illinois Central depot. The woman then shot herself through the head and will die. The tragedy is due to jealousy. May Sims is said to have been a former mistress of Sampson.

LIZZIE BORDEN MAY GO FREE.

Belief That the Grand Jury Will Not Indict Her for Murder.

TAUNTON, Mass., Nov. 26.—The impression prevails here that the grand jury will not indict Lizzie Borden for the murder of her father, Andrew Borden. It is quite certain that no new evidence of any importance has been given before the jury, and that proceedings are delayed because the evidence is not considered sufficient to warrant the finding of an indictment. There is yet nearly a week for unearthing fresh evidence, and in that time enough may be gathered to make things assume an entirely different aspect.

As conditions are now the chances for Miss Borden's early release from confinement are bright.

If she is indicted and the jury at the trial fail to convict there would be little hope of ever bringing her before the court again, even though she should be charged the next time with murdering the other member of the family, whose name was not mentioned in the warrant for her arrest. If the grand jury sets her free it does not mean that she is forever cleared of any future action of the body, but, on the contrary, she can be hauled up at any time on a new charge, provided there is at the time fresh and convincing evidence against her. The probabilities are strongly in favor of no bill.

FOUR MEN HELD UP.

Yorbis Wanted Checks and Backed His Demand With a Gun.

HAMILTON, O., Nov. 26.—Oran Yorbis, aged forty, of Sharonville, held up Dr. J. W. Cornell, of the same place, covered him with a shotgun, and caused him to sign a check in his (Yorbis') favor for $500 on the First National bank of this city.

Next Yorbis went to Grover Brown, of Sharonville, and covering him with his shotgun made him write out a check for $1,000.

Then Yorbis went to Undertaker Yorbis and demanded that he write a check for a similar amount, but the undertaker talked him out of it.

The robber proceeded to Dr. Smithers' office, and demanded a check for $5,000 under penalty of death. At this point a constable arrested him.

Train Robbers at Work.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 26.—Assistant Treasurer Nutter is advised of the arrest in New Orleans of J. L. Montieu, cash clerk in the subtreasury at New Orleans, for pilfering money from the money bags containing silver. Each bag should contain 1,000 silver dollars, but Montieu took one out. In all he stole $500. A recount of all the money in the New Orleans subtreasury —about $10,000,000—has been ordered to ascertain the exact shortage. It will take a month to count it all.

THE BREAKERS BURNED

Cornelius Vanderbilt's Newport Villa Goes Up in Smoke.

THE VANDERBILTS' NARROW ESCAPE

They Tried to Save a Few Things and Were Nearly Entrapped by the Flames. The Silver and Jewels Placed in the Mansion's Big Safe.

NEWPORT, R. I., Nov. 26.—"The Breakers," the beautiful summer residence of Cornelius Vanderbilt, was burned to the ground between 4:30 and 6 p. m. It was the greatest fire Newport ever knew and attracted thousands of spectators.

At 4:30 a servant notified Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt, who were entertaining Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Wharton in the library, that the house was filled with smoke. The servant was ordered to have the firemen notified by telephone. Mr. Vanderbilt followed the man across the hall, but upon his return a minute later flames were bursting into the hall from all directions.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt tried to save a few personal relics, and in doing so nearly lost their lives. In five minutes the house was a mass of flames, and in less than an hour it was nearly consumed.

The firemen were powerless. Mr. Vanderbilt stood by and encouraged them for a time, when he gave it up and told them the building must go. Only a small part of the servants' wing was saved.

The Still Alarm a Mistake.

A great error was made in sending a still alarm rather than a regular alarm. The delay was costly. Another serious drawback was the lack of water pressure. The villa was at Ochre Point, nearly a mile and a half from the nearest fire station. Before an alarm could be sent out and the apparatus reach there the fire was far beyond control.

The whole building was a roaring furnace from the roof to the ground and from end to end when the department arrived. All the rich tapestries, rare paintings, valuable bric-a-brac and fine decorations and furnishings were beyond rescue. The house was built about a dozen or fifteen years ago for Pierre Lorillard, of New York, and was purchased, with the extensive grounds, by Mr. Vanderbilt in 1884 for $400,000. More than $100,000 was expended in additions and improvements to the building.

The villa was of irregular shape, about 100 by 90 feet in size, from one to two stories in height, the lower part being of brick and the upper of wood, with numerous towers and gables.

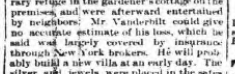
The character of the furniture and decorations may be judged from the fact that in a single hall were hung tapestries estimated to be worth $200,000 or more. Members of the family and servants alike lost all their clothing.

Silver and Jewels Saved.

Mr. Vanderbilt and family found temporary refuge in the gardener's cottage on the premises, and were afterward entertained by neighbors. Mr. Vanderbilt could give no accurate estimate of his loss, which he said was largely covered by insurance through New York brokers. He will probably build a new villa at an early day. The silver and jewels were placed in the safes by the servants and are probably all right. Mr. Vanderbilt and family have been here only since Oct. 1, having spent the season elsewhere this year because of the recent death of their eldest son.

Smallpox Near Danbury.

DANBURY, Conn., Nov. 26.—Smallpox has appeared in Bethel, four miles south of this city. John Buckley had the disease in New York, and his wife and child came to his father's place in Bethel. The child soon got down with the disease and its mother deserted it. It is feared she will spread the contagion. The Buckley house is quarantined.



EVENING TOILETS.

Pleasing Combinations of Color—The Novelty Blouse Frock—A New Ball Gown.

Yellow and white is an attractive combination for an evening dress. A charming gown recently seen was of white brocade, with yellow velvet sleeves. Sleeves are usually made very long now, and this is a much more becoming fashion to the majority of women than the strap of ribbon or short puffed baby sleeve of two or three years ago. The dress with the long train shown here is of deep buttercup yellow brocade, with velvet sleeves the same color edged with lace frills, and lace trimming around the top of the bodice. Of course it was made for a dark woman.

EVENING GOWN OF BUTTERCUP YELLOW BROCADE.

A novelty in evening dresses is the blouse frock. It is a loose robe fashioned in silk crepe or any light delicate material, and falls in folds from a transparent yoke of lace or jeweled net. The yoke is outlined with a full lace frill, and there are long ribbons to wind about the waist of watered silk in some contrasting color. The edge of the skirt, which trains slightly at the back, is trimmed with a quilling or ruche of the same ribbon.

A new ball dress is made of poppy red satin, covered with a thin veil of black lace, and bordered with two rows of poppy petals round the bottom. It has a yet corselet belt, with an open pattern finished with a red silk bow and sash at the back. Very pretty evening dresses are of delicate colored silk or satin closely veiled with cream lace.

THE HOUSEHOLD

CARVING A FOWL.

A Few Hints That May Be Useful on Thanksgiving Day.

There are a number of factors which go to make the lot of the carver anything but a happy one. His knowledge of the anatomy of the subject under consideration may not be of the best, and any deficiencies in this respect are very likely to manifest themselves in a most embarrassing and unlooked for manner. But these are not all or the worst. Inevitably some portions of every fowl or joint are more desirable than other portions, and how to serve each member or guest so that all shall be pleased with the distribution, each having the morsels most satisfactory to his or her palate, is the hardest task of all.

Who has not seen the furtive glance traveling, quick as thought, from the allotment of food presented to the plate of some other member of the party and read, though no outward sign gave indication, the sensation which struggled within the disappointed one's breast? Is not every welcome if the etiquette of the dinner table permitted guests to exchange their rations?

Nearly every carver has, however, a pretty clear idea of what he wishes to accomplish, and if the subject be a fowl Good Housekeeping (which takes the foregoing sympathetic view of his position) predicts that he will proceed as follows:

The fowl is placed with the neck to the left of the carver, and the fork is thrust into the meat across the breastbone. The leg is first severed in two parts, one joint being taken off at a time. In the first instance, the skin may be deftly cut around, and the bending backward of the joint, with a stroke or two of the knife, will do the business. In removing the joint next to the body, it is necessary to know the exact location of the joint; when the keen knife will cut its way directly between the two bones, and the thigh is dropped into the platter with a single quick cut.

If the fowl is a large one the wing is cut off in a similar manner; otherwise it is removed in a single piece, and in either case a section of the breast meat should accompany the cut from the shoulder joint. The breast should be carved in thin slices parallel with the breastbone. Then the wishbone is taken out and the collarbone separated from the body, the shoulder blades are detached, and the cartilage between the ribs is cut through, separating the breast from the back. Then the back is turned over, and, with the knife placed midway, the tail end is lifted with the fork, and the carcass is broken in two.

Apple Jelly.

Take about thirty good sized apples, rub them with a cloth, cut them into quarters (without peeling them) and throw them into cold water slightly acidulated with pure lemon juice. When all are cut and ready, put the apples into a large preserving pan, just cover them with cold water, squeeze a lemon into the water to preserve the whiteness of the fruit, set it over the fire and boil without stirring for twenty-five minutes. Pour this mixture into a hair sieve, and when the juice has all drained into a basin placed underneath for the purpose strain it through a thick muslin and to every pound of juice allow one pound of sugar. Boil this together for fifteen minutes, skimming it carefully when necessary. Add some small thin strips of lemon peel previously boiled in water, or flavor with vanilla; the latter is preferable.

Yorkshire Pudding.

There are two modes of cooking Yorkshire pudding when it is to be served with roast beef; if it be liked very rich it may be baked under the meat, thus catching the dripping; but a simpler way is to cook it in separate pans during the last forty-five or fifty minutes in which the beef is roasting. The pudding is made in this way: Beat three eggs very light, and add a pint of milk and a level teaspoonful of salt. Gradually pour this mixture upon a cupful of sifted flour. Beat thoroughly and pour into well buttered muffin pans. A dozen may be filled with a mixture of the ingredients mentioned.

The baking should occupy three-quarters of an hour, a quick oven being used. Place the roast beef on a large warm platter and arrange the little puddings around it. Serve very hot.

Daisy Embroidery.

Most amateur embroiderers seek some kind of work that involves a small amount of trouble while giving good results, and this is found in daisy embroidery upon soft white muslin of spotted patterns. The object is to convert these spots into flowers that more or less resemble daisies. Such spots are dotted regularly over the muslin are easiest to manage, and therefore usually chosen. One cut shows a more elaborate way of working the flowers when the spots are scattered among the details of a leafy, branching pattern. The spots are covered with French knots; the rays of the flowers are worked with spike stitches placed on each side of a straight line of split stitch. A good effect may also be gained by working three sections with feather stitching, such as is used in many kinds of lace embroidery for the midribs of leaves and in similar places.

DAISY WORK ON FANCY MUSLIN.

This work is even prettier when a pale shade of pink or blue is used for the flowers than when the cushion variety like flossella is employed, which is rather apt to pass for a portion of the pattern already on the muslin.

There are many materials besides muslin that are worked with a pattern of spots upon them, and these may with equal success be converted into daisies. There is damask, for instance, which makes up into charming tea cloths, sideboard slips and carving cloths when thus treated; there are sateens and printed cottons for toilet cloths and aprons, and several makes of satin and silk for handkerchief sachets, work bags and all kinds of fancy knick-knacks.

MEAT DIET.

A Traveler's Experience Among a Tribe That Lives on Meat and Water.

Many races of men live entirely on animal food, and it has been claimed that they are the most free from disease of all kinds. Sir Francis Head says of the Pampas Indians: "They are all horsemen, or, rather, pass their lives on horseback. In spite of the climate, which is burning hot in summer and freezing in winter, these brave men, who have never yet been subdued, are entirely naked, and have not even a covering for their head. They live together in tribes, each of which is governed by a cacique, but they have no fixed place of residence. Where the pasture is good they are to be found until it is consumed by their horses, and they then instantly move to a more verdant spot. They have neither bread, fruit nor vegetables, but they subsist entirely on the flesh of their mares."

Describing the effect on himself of this diet, Sir Francis says: "After I had been riding three and four months, and had lived on beef and water, I found myself in a condition which I can only describe by saying that I felt no exertion could kill me, although I constantly arrived so completely exhausted that I could not speak, yet a few hours' sleep upon my saddle on the ground always so completely restored me that for a week I could daily be upon my horse before sunrise, could ride till two or three hours after sunset, and have really tired ten or twelve horses a day."

Artificial Heat for Babies.

A simple appliance whereby the mortality among newborn infants is considerably arrested is the invention of a French physician who noticed that infant weaklings generally suffered from low pulse and temperature; consequently he reasoned their lives might be saved by the application of artificial heat. The result is the principle of his incubator. The apparatus is simple. The box in which the baby is warmed into life is about 2 feet 6 inches long, 18 inches deep and 14 inches wide.

The top is of glass, through which the nurse can watch the baby without disturbing it. The box is divided into two compartments by a lateral partition. In the lower section are placed four earthenware bottles filled with hot water. The air is admitted into this compartment through a small hole at the head of the box. The air passing over the bottles is warmed to a temperature of about 84 degs., and passes through a row of fine sponges suspended at the foot of the box. It then ascends to the upper compartment, passes over the sleeping infant and escapes through a ventilator at the top, in which revolves a tiny fan wheel, which keeps the air in constant circulation and of an even temperature.

Warts, Their Causes and Cure.

Warts are peculiar excrescences on the skin, and consist of elongations of the papillæ of the skin, covered with a hard, dry cuticle. From friction and exposure to the air their surface comes to have a horny texture, and is rounded off into a small buttonlike shape. Warts are sometimes formed on the very surfaces of the skin and are easily removed, but generally they are implanted in the true skin and very simple built of tissue. Warts in themselves the actual causes of warts. They are supposed to be produced by pressure on the skin and are aggravated by a lack of cleanliness, and often, especially with the young people, they come and go without apparent cause. The hard variety of warts is not communicated by touch, though it seems certain that the soft variety of dark complexion, or more fleshy, excrescence, can be communicated from one person to another by contact.

According to Americus Dultivator, the most effective method of removing warts is to pare the outer surface and then touch them with nitrate of silver. A simpler but quite effective one is to keep the surface softened for several days with grease.

ETIQUETTE.

WHAT TO DO.

Unwritten Laws of Society—Usages at Breakfast and Dinner.

There are four principles of life, which consist of good manners, politeness, courtesy, good breeding and savoir faire, and happy is the man or woman who knows well these laws of good society that they are a charm, a happiness and a boon to all those who fall beneath the spell of these delightful qualities, for the perfect manner is the best letter of introduction. It is the courtesy we extend toward each other. It is the passport to all good society, and the savoir faire that enables us to know what to say and what to leave unsaid. It is the foundation of the respect we have for our neighbors, our friends and ourselves.

With the foregoing exordium a writer in Good Housekeeping tells us how to make breakfast, which is the first meal of the day, also the happiest, and gives some hints in regard to dining.

The good morning should be given in a cheerful manner. Endeavor at this time to be interesting, and converse on subjects that are pleasing to others.

It is an old fashioned notion that "children should be seen and not heard." An occasional talk by the little folk is not objectionable; yet, at the same time, they should not monopolize conversation or attention. They have their place, and it is an injustice that they should at the family board always be silent.

Personal remarks and questions solicited of a private nature are not only bad form, but exceedingly irritating and vulgar. Respect the misfortunes of others, and show deference to their shortcomings and bodily ailments, for it is a sign of good breeding and wise consideration.

Among the usages of good society the dinner is the one form of entertainment where punctuality should be strictly recognized. To be late is a grievous error. To arrive too early is in many instances embarrassing. Five minutes before the time appointed is a rigid necessity. An invited guest should observe the proprieties, and by so doing is a good index to his social standing.

Avoid conversations that refer to domestic affairs, headaches, toothaches, children's diseases, tragedies, accidents and personalities of all kinds. A constant complaining of family disasters is not only distressing, but the physical, mental, moral and household calamities is an annoyance that under the best of circumstances it is too generous to bear.

WHAT SHE THOUGHT.

9 a. m.—Dearsmel I wonder if I made a mistake? I don't love him. Mamma is right about that, and I'm sure I could not to marry him just because he has a little money. I suppose the poor fellow is waiting his breakfast now. I'll never call again of course. I really believe I'm glad! My right ear is burning—I guess he must be thinking of me.

11 a. m.—I wonder if there is any possibility of his calling again to-night. I am sured hope not. Still I wouldn't care to spend the evening alone, and perhaps no one else will call. After all he was certainly an interesting fellow. Yes, he was more than interesting, and I almost wish—

1 p. m.—I am more satisfied than ever that I did well by refusing him. mamma's advice. It's much better to give a man an honest answer than you don't care for him seriously before he proposes than to break his heart by flirting with and so-called friends.

3 p. m.—A note from him saying that he won't call to-night. Hem! I don't know that I regret it. I'm necessarily for the note. Who ever asked him to call or wanted him to call or expected him to call? I'm sure I didn't. I thought I made myself clear last night. Oh, my, why will things always go wrong? I'm going up stairs to have a good cry.

5 p. m.—I went to cry some more. Dear me! I'm the most unhappy girl alive, and it's all my own fault. I've broken his heart and I've broken my own, and I regret myself.

7 p. m.—I don't want any dinner, and I don't want to see papa's friend, so there!

9 p. m.—Dear me! He's in the parlor. I'm not dressed, and my eyes are red as the curtains. What shall I do? I certainly must not keep him waiting. I suppose he has come after all to make up and take back my letters. Oh, I wish—

9:30 p. m.—He hasn't mentioned the letters, and he seems very melancholy. I almost believe—

WHAT HE THOUGHT.

9 a. m.—Well, I guess I acted wisely after all. She's a sweet little girl, but we haven't either of us enough money to get married on, and I'm not absolutely sure that I love her. Of course I don't. We've known each other a long time and all that, but that doesn't always mean love. Of course I've got to stop calling on her to-morrow. I suppose I will break her heart. I'll see she's thinking of me.

11 a. m.—I wonder if she'll expect me to-night? I hope not. I don't want to call her any more than I can help. Hang it, why don't I? I'll do with myself. Club? Bah! Chesters? Pooh, pooh! I might call on some one else, but I would be paid no. It's early in the season for cool last night I might call on—

1 p. m.—Well, I'm satisfied, after thinking it over, that I did the correct thing. Father is right. Never let a man act horrid dealing with the female heart. How pretty she was last night! I feel rather mean, I guess, I'll bet her write her one of those notes tonight. They I'll stay at home and smoke.

3 p. m.—Confound it! I can't help thinking about her. Can't read it! Wish my father and mother weren't such confounded prudes. I like the very devil—

A Jar of Butter.

She was one of those saucy women that know more in a minute than a man knows in seventy hundred and eighty-four years, and she kept it constantly on display. It was about 10 o'clock in the morning when she bustled into a family grocery on Third avenue, and approached an innocent looking sandy haired clerk with a stub pencil over his ear.

"Is there butter in that jar?" she in quired, tapping the vessel with her toe.

"Yes, thadam," affirmed the clerk.

"I thought so," she said; "I can tell a butter jar instinctively."

"Yes'm," the clerk acquiesced.

"Is it sweet?"

"Yes'm."

"Where is it from? Western reserve?"

"No'm?"

"No?" and her feathers drooped a little. "From Michigan, I suppose?"

"Yes'm."

She smiled with satisfaction.

"I thought so; I must be," she confessed. "Tisn't fresh, of course; butter never is when it is put up in jars."

"No'm," admitted the clerk. "It was made last fall."

"Goodness me," she exclaimed. "All that time and you say it is sweet yet?"

"Yes'm. We guarantee it."

"Tisn't worth quite so much as if it was fresh, is it?" she asked, with a boarding house accent.

"No'm."

"What's the price of it?"

"A dollar a gallon, ma'am."

She jumped as if a mouse had bitten her. "A dollar a gallon!" she exclaimed. "I never heard of selling butter by the gallon."

"We always sell that kind of butter by the gallon, ma'am," said the clerk, with guileless gravity.

"What kind of butter is it?" she asked in a less confident tone.

"Apple butter, ma'am," and the clerk bowed his sandy head and waited for the storm.—Detroit Free Press.

Impressive.

One of the homeliest men in Detroit has a beautiful little girl about five years old. The other day she was sitting on his lap with a handglass before her. She looked at her father a moment, then looked at herself and turned to her mother.

"Mamma," she inquired, "did God make me?"

"Yes, daughter."

"Did he make papa too?"

"Yes."

Then she took another look in the glass at herself.

"Well," she said thoughtfully, "He's doing a good deal better work lately, isn't he?"—Detroit Free Press.

They Came High.

"My darling," she murmured, "you were so grand, so noble, when you proposed to me this day in the carriage! Shall I ever forget how touchingly you spoke of yourself, of your future, of the sacrifices you would make for me? It must have cost you something to speak those words."

"It did, Mabel," replied the young man, a shadow creeping over his face. "It cost me about a week's salary in cab hire."—Truth.

FRANK L. C. MARTIN.

This Date in History—Nov. 26.

1493—Columbus, restored to his usual hopefulness, speculated at length on a new, charming style on the prospect of converting all the Indians to the Catholic faith, adding an empire to the Spanish crown, and paving the City of the Great Khan and opening a trade which should make it the richest country in the world; the Indians continued to receive him then the land of Cuba and grass tobacco to the southeast, and he resolved to sail on.

1781—William Cowper, poet, born.

1787—Oliver Wolcott, "signer," born in Windsor, Conn.; died 1797.

1778—Sandwich Islands discovered.

1891—Parnell having refused to resign, his supporters declared him leader of the Nationalists, whereupon 45 Irish members of parliament withdrew from alliance with him; soon after they chose Justin McCarthy their leader, and fighting began. Charles Francis Adams resigned the presidency of the Union Pacific railway, and Judge Dillon was elected his successor.

It Wasn't the Same.

The bustless man was hurrying along the street late in the evening, when the piteous whine of a beggar stopped him.

"Will you please and be so kind, sir," said the fellow, "to give me some money? I'm out of work, and I've got a wife and six children sufferin, sir, for the necessaries of life."

"Get out!" exclaimed the hurrying man. "I've heard that story before."

"No, you haven't, sir," protested the mendicant.

"Didn't you tell me that same thing one a week ago, and I gave you half a dollar?"

"No, sir, I didn't," whined the beggar. "I told you I had a wife and four children. We've had twins at our house since then."—Detroit Free Press.

FOR THE PUPILS' HEALTH.

Principal Maxson Dismisses the Scholars Because of Cold Rooms.

Pupils of the Stillman High School, who went to the building to-day prepared to go on with their routine studies, were compelled to wend their way home again, because Principal MAXSON, always looking after the scholars' welfare, decided that the rooms were too cold and damp for them to study in.

The temperature of the building was below sixty degrees, and to sit in those rooms would endanger the pupils' health.

Janitor Clarkson, when spoken to about the matter, said that it was the first time in eight years that the school had to be dismissed on that account. He says the boiler is not large enough to do the work required of it—to heat both the Stillman and the Franklin schools. It has always been customary to bank the fire in the furnace over Sunday, he says, and leave the building without heat until Monday morning. This causes the building to get very cold, and in weather like this, also very damp. It is impossible to get a warm temperature in the rooms by nine o'clock Monday morning, if the fire isn't started until six o'clock.

Hereafter Principal MAXSON says, the fire is to be started up Sunday afternoon and steam turned on until the building is thoroughly heated, and the fire banked until the next morning. The Principal says he thinks the Board will uphold him in authorizing the janitor to burn a little more coal to save the pupils from being sick.

It is very important that the rooms should be warm enough, and Principal MAXSON is to be commended for his quick action this morning, as it no doubt saved several from sickness.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Frederick Moon of West Sixth street is visiting friends in Flemington.

Miss Bertha Fisher of Jackson avenue has been confined to her home, for the past week, by illness.

Miss Florence Kent of Brooklyn spent Sunday as the guest of Miss May MacLaughlin of Somerset street.

Miss Delano, teacher of the Junior Class in the High School, was taken sick Friday and is now confined to her home with a low fever. Miss Agnes Morton has taken her place until she is able to get back to her duties.

The Y. M. C. A. has secured, as teacher of a men's singing class, Mr. E. A. Emery of Washington avenue. Mr. Emery was formerly a pupil of Dr. Messiter, of Trinity church, New York, and is a teacher of over eleven years' experience in training of male voices.

Mrs. Frances Gibby, widow of Judge William Gibby, died at her home, in Rahway, on Thursday evening. She was born near Belfast, Ireland, in April, 1815. She came to America when a girl and was married to Judge Gibby in 1838, and from that time made her home in Rahway. Mrs. Gibby had been confined to her bed since the death of her husband in 1886. Five of her children survive. Four daughters and one son. One of the daughters is Mrs. H. Newton Spencer of Somerset street, North Plainfield.

The death occurred yesterday of Mrs. Elmbeth D. Vail, widow of the late Joseph W. Vail, in the seventieth year of her age. She had only been ill a few days with acute pneumonia. Mrs. Vail was a very active old lady, having been out to witness the installation services of the Rev. Charles E. Herring as pastor of the First Presbyterian church, last Tuesday evening. She was formerly a Miss Shotwell, the daughter of Mr. Daniel C. Shotwell, and was born in Somerset county, back of Dunellen, on March 26, 1820. Only two children survive her, Mr. J. T. Vail, the real estate agent, and Mr. Daniel Vail of Locust Valley, L. I.

FARMER AXT ROBBED.

He Went to Newark to Spend Thanksgiving and Had Hard Luck.

Joseph Axt, an old farmer residing in Washington Valley, had rather a rough Thanksgiving Day experience last Thursday.

He was found late at night, wandering through the streets of Elizabeth, with a team and carriage. To a policeman, who stopped him, he stated that he had been drugged and robbed of $65 in a roadhouse between Springfield and Millburn. One of his horses was sick. AXT said he was a well-to-do farmer and had been celebrating Thanksgiving in Newark with his son, who had started for home early in the afternoon. He got on the wrong road and drove into Elizabeth. He did not know where he was when picked up.

Before he started from Elizabeth one of his horses was taken sick and died, and this doubly unfortunate farmer, had to journey homeward with one horse.

BREVITIES

—MUGG'S Landing at Music Hall to-night.

—City election one week from to-morrow.

—Borough Council meeting next Friday night.

—Marshal Pangborn this morning locked up another tramp.

—Mrs. A. W. Band's show windows have taken on a holiday appearance.

—A shark with a tin cuspidor in his stomach has been caught off Barnegat.

—November has always been known as the month for meteors, but this year it has beaten the record.

—The burglar taken to Somerville Saturday morning, by Marshal Pangborn, gave his name as "Paterson Joe."

—Two tramps were gathered in by Policeman Lynch, yesterday. For look-suspicious they got a night's lodging.

—The Boards of Registry will meet to-morrow, at the polling places, from one to nine p. m., to revise and correct the registry lists.

—And now a Rahway man comes to the front with predictions. He claims to have had no less than three visions and says that President-elect Cleveland will die before the day of inauguration.

—The State Diary Commissioner McGuire warns all bakers and confectioners against the use of chrome yellow in their goods. The law subjects the user to a heavy fine, where used as a substitute for eggs.

—Mr. Charles Hankins of Rahway while out hunting near Short Hills on Thanksgiving day, shot a raccoon weighing 21 pounds. This is said to be the biggest one of its species killed in Union county for over twenty years.

—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has already erected a good part of the trestle on which its tracks are to be run from Somerset street. The tracks are to be elevated as soon as the trestle is finished, which will be in about a month.

—The committee, appointed in regard to the widening and extension of Peace street, met at the residence of Mr. William C. Ayers, on West Second street, Friday evening. Nothing definite was decided, and the committee adjourned subject to the call of the chair.

—A $2.00 membership in the Y. M. C. A. entitles young men to enroll in the class, under Mr. Embury, for the training of voices. Young men who are interested are requested to enroll their names at once as members of this class. A class for boys under the same leadership will it is hoped soon be organized.

—A recent number of Lippincott's contained a very entertaining story of the trials of a small boy in a district school, and how his grandfather took his part, and paralyzed the teacher by asking her to spell "wayzay." It is a word that few ever heard of, but it is in Webster's, and signifies the point of an orbit, though mostly used in the plural. A spelling bee got hold of the word, and now everybody wants to know about "wayzay."

—This is the season of the year when excited hunters mistake their fellow-hunters for deer and partridges with fatal results, when they blow into the gun barrel to see if it is loaded; when they march single file and the rear one stumbles and falls and perforates his companion with a few No. 6 shot; when they sit on an old fence and the top rail breaks down, and one will do his hunting hereafter in the "happy hunting grounds above."

—In the matter of sewer pipes and drains no one ought to be permitted to lay them, except by the direction of the Board of Health, whose business it is to cause their removal if laid improperly. It is not likely that persons knowingly lay them improperly, as it must be to their own injury as well as their neighbors, the case referred to Saturday being a case in point, the drain the Health Inspector discovered having been laid undoubtedly through ignorance of the consequence, and possibly without the knowledge of the occupants upon whose premises it was found, if laid by a previous occupant. Mr. Groendyke says that when he bought the property it was represented that it was properly sewered, and that he was not aware of any nuisance.

The First League Game.

The first game in the Journal Trophy League will be bowled between the Crescent League team and a team from the C. Y. M. L., to-morrow night. The Crescent team is composed of L. H. Van Emburg, G. Wood, C. Lyman, P. Alstyne, H. Haven, C. Teel, G. Macintyre, C. Vail, J. Davis, captain; C. E. VanWinkle.

FUN AT THE "BI" CLUB.

A "STAGGARAQUETTE" THAT WAS ENJOYED SATURDAY EVENING.

Famed Banjoists, Story-tellers and Soloists, Music and Boxing While Away the Time.

The following amusing advertisement, from the pen of the Bicycle Club patriarch, Mr. T. S. Barr, in THE NEWS columns last week, called attention to the fact that a good time was on hand for Saturday evening.

WANTED—Married men and single men, democrats and and misanthropes, associate members and idiots, democrats and republicans, high and low tariff men, thin men, fat men and fleshy men, men who excel in the line of beauty.) Every good citizen who enjoys a hearty laugh, is wanted at the Bicycle Club house next Saturday night. (Bring a quarter with you.) Note: Prohibitionists will enjoy the Ballantyne on tap that night.

The talent secured for the entertainment were Messrs. Brooks and Denton, banjoists, and J. Alex. Silberberg accompanist, Mr. Carey, the comic singer and Mr. Ballantyne the well-known storyteller.

One of Mr. Ballantyne's stories was of an inveterate drunkard, an Irishman.

The parish priest exhorted him to reform, and, as a last result, worked upon his superstition and threatened to turn the offending Irishman into a rat, if he did not keep sober.

This portentous threat kept the Irishman straight for a week. Then he went on a drunk. When he went home, he had, what is vulgarly termed, "a sorrowful jag." The awful threat of the priest was oppressing him.

He held himself in shaky uprightness, by a tables help, and looked mournfully at his wife.

"Zh Bridget!" he remarked dolefully. "Zh—Bridget!" hic—"y'no whazzer priest sed?—hic—y'no? Zha! Bridget! sezze'll turn me nto rat fy' get drunk. Zha Bridget!—hic—when y' see th' fur—hic—growin' on m' han, 'n' eyes glittin small, Oh Lor! Zha Bridget! 'f y' see—hic!—'t see skin gittin soft an slick en hair—hic—en hair growin whereshouldn't—Zha Bridget! when y' see tail—hic!—when y' see tail growin', Watch th' cat!!!

Mr. Ballantyne told many other interesting tales.

Mr. Will Runyon of Plainfield also entertained by singing college songs.

Different members of the club then put on the large and fairly soft boxing gloves, with each other, and carried on what looked like an animated conversation in the sign language, to the great amusement of the spectators.

THEIR ANNUAL ENTERTAINMENT.

"Young Mrs. Winthrop" to be Given by the Country Club.

Members of the Union County Country Club are completing arrangements for their annual dramatic entertainment, to be held in the Casino, on Saturday evening, December 10th. Besides the ladies and gentlemen composing the cast a large number of the members of the club are actively interested in the artistic and financial success of the entertainment, which is to be given with the same careful attention to detail that characterized the club's presentations of "Esmeralda" last season.

"Young Mrs. Winthrop" is the play to be given, and it will be under the direction of Mr. Henry S. Blake. The following is the cast:

Constance Winthrop, a woman of society	Miss Parker Mason

Mrs. "Dick" Chetwynd, a bubble of society	Mrs. Chas. E. Brooks
Jennette, a maid	Miss Massett
Douglass Winthrop, a man of business	John R. Blake
Burton Scott, his family lawyer	Wm. H. Cock
Dr. Meldrum, his family physician	Chas. E. Brooks
Herbert Winthrop, 7 grandson	Frank Taylor
John, a butler	Roger Ericson

A Small Fire.

An alarm of fire was sounded from box 25, about one o'clock yesterday afternoon, and Gazelle Engine Company, Zephyr Hook and Ladder Company and Alert Hose Company responded. The fire proved to be in the bath room of the residence of Mr. Frederick H. Wits on LaGrande avenue. Three lines of hose were laid, but by the time they were down the fire was out, as the members of the household extinguished the blaze with water from a garden hose. Beyond the burning of some clothing in a closet adjoining the bath room, no damage resulted.

No one seems to know how the fire originated. About a year ago there was a fire in the same room, but not much damage resulted.

Tried to Commit Suicide.

A hostler employed at Boyce's hotel, North Plainfield, started on the warpath last Wednesday. After filling up with fire water, he went into a butcher shop on Somerset street and grasped a knife, saying he was going to commit suicide. Several men in the shop seized him before he could accomplish his purpose, and threw him to the floor after a hard tussle.

Marshal Pangborn was sent for and he put the nippers on the would-be suicide and took him to Somerville, where he is now rusticating.

—The following five-men teams will compete on the Crescent League alleys to-night: Team No. 1—Haynes, Woolston, Woodruff, Chas. Dunham, Leggett. Team No. 2—Keeney, Petrie, Buckle, Sutphen, G. A. Hallock.

FORTUNATELY THE HORSE STOPPED

Narrow Escape of Three Persons from Death Yesterday.

Another accident, caused by the electric street cars, occurred yesterday, and again it was more by good luck than good management that it did not prove fatal.

About half-past four o'clock yesterday afternoon, as a gentlemen and two ladies, seated in a carriage, were riding along West Front street, near Washington avenue, the horse they were driving, became frightened at an approaching electric street car, and started to run away.

The driver had the horse under good control when it suddenly dashed around the corner of Washington avenue. The corner was turned so short that the rear wheel of the vehicle struck the curb, completely wrecking the wheel, and throwing the occupants of the carriage out on the sidewalk.

Only the quick presence of mind of the man saved it from being a fatal accident. In falling he managed to give a hard tug on the reins and call "whoa" to the horse, which stopped it, otherwise the driver might have been dragged along the street, and probably killed. As it was no one was injured beyond a few bruises.

UNION COUNTY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORS.

They will Hold a Meeting at Springfield on Dec. 16.

The Union County Christian Endeavor Union will hold a conference at Springfield on Friday evening, Dec. 16. An interesting programme is being arranged and delegations from all the C. E. societies in the country will attend. The session will be held in the old Presbyterian church in Springfield. Robert P. Spear will probably be the speaker, and his subject will be "Missions." A paper will be read and the pastors in the country will be asked to give their impressions on Christian Endeavor work. The conference will close with a consecration service and it is hoped to have Miss Alice B. Spangenberg of Netherwood as the leader.

He Says it Was a $5,000 Poem.

At the time of the naval engagement between the Monitor and the rebel ram Merrimac, in which the latter was defeated, nearly thirty years ago, said Mr. John H. French, recently, before a group of friends, "the Herald offered $5,000 as a prize for the tersest poem in honor of the victory, and paid it for a poem which it was considered told the whole story in these four lines:

"The June bug hath a gaudy wing,
The lightning bug hath flame;
The bed bug hath no friends at all,
But he gets there just the same."

It is difficult to understand in this day what the poem has to do with the fight, but it is explained that the old style war vessels were very showy, (of gaudy wing) though of little account alongside the ram Merrimac which could move about comparatively like lightning and belch forth most destructive flame, while the Monitor was so insignificant-looking that it was spoken of most derisively by the naval officers when it arrived on the scene of conflict after several of our best war vessels had been sunk, and the whole fleet at Hampton Roads threatened with destruction. It was referred to as "a cheese box on a bed bug's back," the turret being dubbed the cheese-box. It had no friends to speak of in the navy, until after its first engagement, when it "got there," as the poem tells.

In Mr. French's opinion Mr. Ericson, the inventor of the Monitor, was never honored by this government as he deserved to be for his great services, for if it had not been for the Monitor's victory there was nothing to prevent the Merrimac going right on to New York, destroying it and every Northern port, and turning the tide of battle against us.

The Results of Carelessness.

In the Sub-Treasury in New York city, according to the Philadelphia Press, there is on deposit to-day more than $5,000,000, representing outstanding money-orders, and of this amount more than $2,000,000 represents money-orders which are overdue, and which may never be presented for payment. Ten years ago, in a spasm of virtue, Congress appropriated the money to pay the salaries of ten clerks, who should check up the books of the money-order office, and prepare a list of money-orders which had not been presented for payment.

It was estimated then that if this list was prepared, the owners of two-thirds of this money could be traced, and the money could be restored to them. To-day one solitary clerk sits in a little office on the top floor of the Postoffice Department there, checking up the unpaid money orders. He is working now on orders issued in 1871; at this rate he will not catch up with his work within twenty years, and by that time most of the owners of the money will be dead, and their heirs or executors will be hard to find.

In every suit brought by a stockholder of a corporation, in behalf of himself and other stockholders, for relief to which the corporation is entitled, the complainant shall immediately on filing the bill of complaint, and issuing a subpoena to answer, give such notice of the pendency and object of the suit to other stockholders of said corporation of as the Chancellor shall in each case by order direct.

Want a Coffee Cart.

The Rahway firemen feel the need of a coffee brigade, similar to Plainfield's, according to the following clipping from the Rahway Advocate:

Mr Editor: Chief T. O. Doane, of the Plainfield Fire Department, in an article in the Firemans Herald, says the coffee brigade is one of the valuable auxiliaries to his department. We felt the need of it this morning at the fire on Union street. Are our ladies behind their sisters in Plainfield in looking after the firemen? AGNES.

To Demolish Another Landmark.

The Central Railroad Company to-day will begin to demolish the building at the intersection of Broad street, Elizabeth, and the railroad tracks, which for some years has been used by the United States Express company for head-quarters. The express company will move into the Central Railroad building on East Broad street. The doomed building is one of the oldest landmarks on Broad street.

—A provincial newspaper calls attention to a feeding-bottle (i. e., nursing bottle) advertisement which concludes with the words:

"When the baby is done drinking it must be unscrewed and laid in a cool place under a tap. If the baby does not thrive on fresh milk, it should be boiled."

This, it is remarked, is a trifle hard on the baby.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Eurasian.

A strange race of monsters are the people described by Sara Jeanette Duncan in The Popular Science Monthly under the head of "Eurasia." A Eurasian is a cross between a European and a native of India. The race is something like the mulatto of the American republic in social standing, and not unlike the mulatto cross in other respects. It has been said that the mulatto inherits the vices and defects of both the white and black races, rather than their best characteristics and traits. The same is true of the Eurasian. These mixtures of races so much unlike are somehow a bad thing for humanity.

The Eurasian is a poor creature among men. Mrs. Duncan says she is weak physically, and indolent also. Still less His inheritance of Hindoo blood enables him to walk abroad in the sun in India and endure the climate which kills a European children. The Eurasians multiply and multiply at a rate that reminds us again of the negro race in America, yet the death rate among them is very high. Poverty and crowded living make these half bloods an easy prey to disease, yet they nevertheless multiply at such a rate that they now constitute a distinct race of their own and need no further admixture of European blood to continue them.

They form the slum population of the Anglo-Indian cities. In Calcutta alone there are 20,000 of these people, and what to do with them is as disturbing to the government authorities as the negro problem is to some of the states of this Union. Physically they are narrow shouldered and skinny. They have the straight black hair that check bones, full, curved lips and soft dark eye that bespeak their Indian ancestry, with almost none of the steely robustness of the European. There is no prospect for them socially, except very small increase in numbers and surely still they could drive out the native Indian and take his place, or rise and become equality with their white companions and consorts. But of this there is no hope either way. They are good natured, lazy and thriftless, and the most inveterate and artistic liars alive. Drunkenness and brutality, however, are not common among them. The reading of Mrs. Duncan's paper confirms one who stops to think about it in his conclusion that, such as they are, there are too many people in the world.

The Naval Parade Next Spring.

About the time of the opening of the World's fair next spring the finest naval review ever witnessed in America will be given in New York bay and Hampton Roads. The most interesting point about it will be that all the vessels of our navy, new and old, that can be spared from active duty will be there. Along with the splendid ships of the white squadron will come like grizzled war veterans beside the handsome young national guard, the old Kearsarge and Portsmouth.

The outgoing Republican secretary of the navy is anxious that the naval vessels planned and built entirely during the present administration shall be finished as far as possible before he takes leave of office. It was expected that No. 6, the 3,500-ton protected cruiser now building at San Francisco, would be finished by the spring of 1893, but delays in getting material made this out of the question. No. 6 will not be done till next fall. She is 340 feet long at the water line and was modeled after the fine Spanish cruiser Reina Regente. She is three decker, and will carry 1,300 tons coal supply and travel at a sustained speed of twenty miles an hour, it is expected.

It is hoped that the New York and Indiana will be finished in time to assist in the splendid naval parade between Hampton Roads and New York. The New York is the largest armored cruiser yet launched for the new navy. The Indiana is the largest battleship. It is not certain, however, that the Indiana will be near enough completion to enable her to steam along with the parade. The other vessels will probably be the following:

Cruisers New York (flagship), Baltimore, San Francisco, Charleston, Philadelphia, Newark, Chicago, Atlanta, Concord, Bennington, Petrel, Yorktown, Castine, Machias, Vesuvius, cruiser Vesuvius, double turreted monitor Miantonomoh, dispatch steamer Dolphin, gunboat Nashville, practice ship Essex, torpedo boat Cushing and the old Kearsarge and Portsmouth.

Whoever else was disappointed in the fall elections, there is one candidate who is not. That is Miss Elda L. Knowles, the pretty and plucky girl attorney g neral of Montana. The People's party nominated her, and she and the rest. Miss Knowles is a college graduate—a master of arts from her alma mater, Bates college, Lewiston, Me. She is a New Hampshire girl, and studied law in that state first and afterward in Helena, Mon.

A Paris paper has a daily fashion chronicle printed in English for the benefit of its English and American lady readers who do not understand French. We clip the following as an item of news from a late issue: "The fashion bears a crisis which is wonderful and was never seen before. In fact never such a indecision had obscured the minds."

THE COMET MISSED US.

No Collision and Not Even a Shower of Meteors.

THREE PEOPLE INSANE FROM FEAR.

There Was Great Anxiety in Philadelphia and Other Cities as the Hour Approached When the Earth Crossed the Path of the Big Holmes Comet.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 28.—Great interest was manifested in the city Sunday night on account of the promised appearance of the comet, and as the shades of evening began to gather hundreds of men, women and children gathered on the streets for the purpose of witnessing the expected heavenly wonders. The crowds maintained their positions until long after the hour fixed by the astronomers for the collision, when they were driven home by a drizzling rain.

There were many who were afraid to venture from their homes, and preferred to die by their own fireside if the expected death was to come. Three cases of insanity through fear of the destruction of the world were reported by the police, and prominent physicians who were seen predicted that many cases of nervous prostration and possibly death would result from the intense strain upon the nervous systems of the weak and superstitious.

Amelie Hurdford, twenty-two years old, of 925 Wood street, became violently insane, and by the advice of her physician was sent to the insane department of the Philadelphia hospital to be cared for.

Alarm at Elizabeth.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Nov. 28.—Alarm in this city over the comet grew at the approach of the hour named for the possible collision. Many people who have not attended worship for years have been for many years were on their knees. In many churches the services were continued until after midnight. This was particularly the case in the catholic churches and places of worship for the colored people. The latter gathered in large numbers and participated in profound prayer meetings. Silent prayer meetings were held from quarter past 10 o'clock to 11 o'clock, when a praise meeting was started to give thanks for the escape of the world from annihilation.

Thought It Was the Comet.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 28.—"It's the comet, sure!" was the exclamation on all sides Sunday night when the fire bells sounded, it having been previously announced that the earth would pass through some of the comet there were scenes of gloom covering the skies solidly in every direction. Not a star could be seen. At Columbia college Professor Rees had everything ready, but as science could not penetrate the veil he made no observation.

Not Sure at First.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—Thousands of New Yorkers who spent the hour from 8 to 9 Sunday evening abroad looking for the comet and awaiting the shock were compelled to go home disappointed. Instead of the comet there were scenes of gloom covering the skies solidly in every direction. Not a star could be seen. At Columbia college Professor Rees had everything ready, but as science could not penetrate the veil he made no observation.

Not Bicla's Comet.

ST. PAUL, Nov. 28.—Although clouds have somewhat hindered observation at Lookout observatory, what Drs Payne and Wilson have seen of the comet has convinced them that it is not Biela's. They think that it is a new comet or one whose orbit has changed.

Yale Observers Disappointed

NEW HAVEN, Nov. 28.—At the Yale College observatory the astronomers were on the watch for a shower of meteors. They were disappointed, for no meteoric display took place.

WHAT THE POLITICIANS ARE DOING.

Senator Gorman Denies That Prominent Democrats Are in Confer.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The alleged conference of Democratic senators to exchange views on the best policy for the party to pursue in and out of congress was promoted by Senator Gorman and Richard Croker, it is said. Among those invited to the conference are Senator Faulkner, of West Virginia, and Senator Call, of Florida. Senator Faulkner said that he knew nothing about the conference, except that one was to be held. He understood that the object of it was an informal talk about the course to be pursued by congress. Senator Call said that he did not believe in such a conference, and added: "It seems absurd for ten or twelve men to fix any definite policy for their party on the tariff or any other question of national importance. The president-elect is capable, I think, of shaping the policy of his party. He should not be embarrassed by concerted opinion."

A dispatch from Washington says that Senator Gorman declares that no such conference has been arranged. "The story is a fake," he said.

How the Congressmen Stand.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—The Herald has sent to the members-elect of the house of representatives of the Fifty-third congress the following questions:

First—Are you in favor of an extra session, and if so, why? If not, why not?

Second—Do you believe in the repeal of the McKinley bill or simply a modification of it—a modification that would insure a tariff for revenue only?

One hundred and ninety-nine of the 356 congressmen have replied to The Herald's inquiries as follows:

In favor of extra session	79
Opposed to extra session	69
Noncommittal	39
Favor repeal of McKinley bill	81
Favor modification of bill	48
Opposed to any change in bill	61
Noncommittal	17

Answers come from congressmen in every state but two. The southern states speak strongly for an early extra session and the prompt repeal of the McKinley law.

Hall, president of the First National bank, of New Canaan, and was a highly respected young lady. It is feared illness caused her to leave home and perhaps to commit suicide.

Mrs. Cleveland at Church.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Nov. 28.—Every seat in the Presbyterian church here was filled at the morning service when it was known that Mrs. Cleveland intended to be present. She wore a dark navy blue dress, over which was a loose fitting, light colored jacket. A mink boa encircled her neck, while a pretty round hat, trimmed with black ostrich feathers, finished the costume.

UNDAUNTED BY DEFEAT.

The President Says His Tariff Views Are Unchanged.

MR. MILLS AND TARIFF REFORM.

He Says the Reduction Should Be Made All Round—Free Raw Material and a Revenue Tax on Manufactured Goods Is the Platform He Stands On.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—President Harrison has followed a new method of work in preparing his annual message this year, says a gentleman who saw him at work on it. This message is of particular interest, because it will be the last annual message which he will send to congress. It has been the custom of the president in past years to write the message on a pad of memorandum paper, writing when the fancy seized him or when some idea was suggested to his mind, "but this year," he says, "I am doing something I have never done before. I am dictating my message to a stenographer this year. I find that the physical effort of writing on this pad of paper is exhausting."

The president looked weary as he spoke. There is not an unhealthy look in his face, but there lies in it the expression of deep sorrow. It is seamed with wrinkles. The great strain of the long days of Mrs. Harrison's last illness has told upon him. Before they came he was a man of tireless energy.

No Backdown on the Tariff.

"The newspapers of the United States are taking a great interest in what you may say on the tariff question," said the visitor. "It looks as though there were McKinleyism that has defeated the Republican party, and they are anxious to know whether you will modify your views on the subject of protection in this message."

The president had thrown himself into his chair prepared to take up his work again. He leaned back, and looking his visitor squarely in the face he said: "The newspapers of the United States ought to know me well enough to believe that when I announce a principle I am not going to change my views merely because of a defeat in election."

Chinese Defy the Law.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The latest Chinese restriction act has fallen a dead letter. The law was passed on May 5 last, and required that within one year all Chinese laborers within the United States should take out registration papers before the collector of internal revenue of their respective districts, and furnish photographs of themselves for purposes of identification. Those of the Chinese residents of the whole United States have complied with the law, and they were residents of far off Oregon. According to census figures there were 107,475 Chinese in the United States June 1, 1890.

Wong Ching Foo, secretary of the Chinese general Reform league, says that there are not fewer than 150,000 Chinese in this country possessing qualifications which he contends should entitle them to the registration. This would make the total Chinese population double that number, or at least 250,000. The only penalty provided in the law is deportation back to China.

What Deportation Will Cost.

Taking the lowest estimate—that given by the census people, 107,500—and the average cost of shipping each Chinaman from the present place of residence in the United States to some port in the Flowery Kingdom at $100, the enforcement of the law would involve an expenditure of $10,750,000. The cost of carrying out this little programme is imposed by the statute upon the secretary of the treasury and the attorney general, and $50,000 is appropriated for the purpose. The additional $10,700,000 required for transportation purposes must be paid by the next congress if the law is to be enforced on May 5 next, for it is made evident that the Chinese have not the slightest intention of attempting to comply with its provisions.

Mr. Mills and Tariff Revision.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Speaker Roger Q. Mills, of Texas, author of the famous Mills tariff bill of the Fiftieth congress, declines to talk about an extra session of congress, but expresses his views as to what is to be done in the matter of reforming the tariff.

"I am now, as I have always been," he said, "in favor of putting all raw material on the free list, and putting only a revenue duty on the manufactured article. There should be a revision of the tariff on broad lines. It should be remodeled from top to bottom. Of course it will take time to do all this. The man who has a constituency that raises wool wants you to keep your hands off him. The steel rail man wants you to pass him and make up your revenue from the lumber district, and the lumber district representative urges the house to look to the coal district, and so to the end of the hundreds of articles that go to make up the list. To attempt to do the work by means of bills that operate in one direction will not bring about the reform the people demand. It must be systematic and include the whole scheme of taxation. When it is to be commenced is a matter in which I have no voice. That rests alone with the president, and I have no doubt he will do what is best for the country."

Holman Against an Extra Session.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Congressman Holman, of Indiana, chairman of the house committee on appropriations, has returned here. He does not favor an extra session. He says:

"Extra sessions are rare, and have only been called on occasions of great emergency. That condition does not seem to confront us now. I am not prepared to say that there will be a deficit that will demand such a session of congress. I see by the papers that there will be perhaps $25,000,000 in the treasury that will be available, outside of the $100,000,000 of reserve. If this coming session reduces expenditures as it ought to, that amount, together with the revenues, will run the government until the end of the fiscal year." Mr. Holman is of the opinion that the coming session will do little more than pass the appropriation bills.

The Calendars Ready for Congress.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—The calendars of pending business of both senate and house for the second session have been printed ready for Monday next. The unfinished business of the senate is the antopoint bill, which will remain the pending order every day until disposed of. There is no great measure before the house among its unfinished business.

THE EXHIBIT OF THE VATICAN.

Relics at Rome That Will Be Sent at the Chicago Fair.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—Secretary of State Foster has designated Mr. J. C. Heywood as the agent of the United States to select from the Vatican museum and library relics appropriate to the discovery of America to be exhibited at the Columbian exposition. Mr. Heywood was selected on the suggestion of Cardinal Rampolla, the papal secretary of state. He is a resident of Rome and a former citizen of Philadelphia, where he was at one time a newspaper reporter.

The College of Cardinals will loan to the United States for exhibition at Chicago the originals of everything it may want out of the library and museum, except the records of the church. The college will, however, have facsimiles made of any documents desired. One of the most interesting documents in the exhibit will be the original bull of Pope Alexander VI. dividing the new world between Spain and Portugal. This is known as the "bull of demarcation." Other exhibits of interest will be the letter from Ferdinand and Isabella to the pope announcing the discovery of the new world and a letter written by one of the cardinals on the divine right of kings to assume ownership of any countries they might discover.

MISS JULIA HALL FOUND.

She Was Captured at New Rochelle, N. Y., by a Search Party.

NEW CANAAN, Conn., Nov. 28.—Miss Julia Hall, who while insane wandered from home on Thanksgiving day, was found at New Rochelle, N. Y. A big posse of her fellow townsmen had scoured the neighborhood for her. She is thirty-three years old and the daughter of R. C. Hall, president of the New Canaan First National bank.

Proprietor Fowler, of the Hygeian hotel, in New Rochelle, recognized Miss Hall's photograph when it was shown to him.

She registered there on Thursday evening as Miss Jennie Harding, of Waterbury, Conn., and left early on Friday morning without taking breakfast.

When captured she was very tired and worn and simply said, "I've been visiting." That is about all that could be extracted from her.

She had been at Mount Vernon and surprise is expressed that the police of that place did not find her, though they had an accurate description of her. Members of the search party were probably close to her at times.

EX-SECRETARY BLAINE'S PLANS.

He Will Leave for Southern California About New Year's.

He also said that his father will not leave the city much before New Year's day, when he will probably go to southern California, unless he changes his present plans. His exact destination is not yet fixed.

CROUSE CASH IN COURT

Indications That a Widow May Contest the Will.

NONE KNEW HE HAD BEEN MARRIED

New York Lawyers Are Said to Represent a Woman Who Claims to Be the Syracuse Millionaire's Widow — His Fair Friend at Saratoga Called Miss Edgar.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 28.—Whether or not Daniel Edgar Crouse was secretly married and a widow and son will claim his $10,000,000 is as much of a mystery as ever. It is known beyond all doubt that Mr. Crouse did keep company a few years ago with a beautiful lady. John Kennedy, a former coachman for the Crouse family, says that about six years ago he was taken by Edgar and his father John to Saratoga to drive their swell turnouts during the fashionable season.

The Crouses stopped at the Clarendon hotel and drove together nearly every pleasant afternoon. After taking the old gentleman back to the Clarendon the coachman was always directed to drive to the Windsor hotel, where a beautiful lady came out, accompanied by her maid, to the victoria and enjoyed a whirl over the avenues in Mr. Crouse's company. She called him Edgar, but he always avoided mentioning her name, so that the coachman never heard it.

Sent Her to Europe.

Information is gained from an authentic source that this lady, who is now believed to be preparing to contest the will, was sent by Mr. Crouse to Europe, and that documents exist to show that he sent her drafts to London as well as to New York. It is also said that Mr. Crouse agreed to marry her upon her father's death, and that she holds letters in his handwriting to this effect. She may be an adventress, but appearances do not point that way.

Louis Marshall, the attorney who represented the New York attorneys when the will was read, will say nothing except that the New York heirs are prominent in the profession and would not hazard their reputation by presenting a false case. It is reported that there will be another contestant to the will in the person of Mrs. Kate Crouse Leslie, of Utica. The latter lived for many years at the Crouse residence, and claims to have been legally adopted by John Crouse as his daughter. She married General Leslie. She would be the legal heir to the whole estate if she were legally adopted—that is, if Edgar Crouse did not leave a widow.

Shot the Editor Dead.

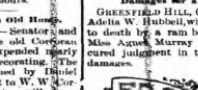
JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Nov. 28.—Charles H. Pratt, editor of The Daily Leader, was shot and instantly killed at Gainesville by Thornton S. Stringfellow, the alleged cause being Pratt's intimacy with Mrs. Stringfellow. It is supposed that in returning home the murderer found Pratt and his wife together and shot him through an window. Stringfellow's statement was corroborated by his weeping and hysterical wife. He was placed under arrest, but is at large. Pratt leaves a young wife.

Death of Cardinal Lavigerie.

PARIS, Nov. 28.—Cardinal Lavigerie is dead. He gained worldwide fame not only as one of the most distinguished prelates of the Roman church, but more especially on account of his successful efforts to reconcile the papacy to the French republic. To his efforts are largely due the measures taken by civilized nations to suppress the slave trade in Africa.

Damages for a Ram's Work.

GREENFIELD HILL, Conn., Nov. 28.—Miss Adelia W. Hubbell has been nearly butted to death by a ram belonging to eccentric Miss Agnes Murray in May, 1887, has secured judgment in the courts for $1,750 damages.



A Novelty in Lingerie.

The great novelty of the moment is the empire nightdress, the outcome of the empire craze, which will assuredly dominate the winter fashions. Here is an empire nightdress, a pretty and typical model. The gown is of nainsook, trimmed with valenciennes lace. The upper part outline the low neck, short waisted empire bodice, which was in vogue at the time of Waterloo.

EMPIRE NIGHTDRESS.

This little arrangement is carried out in nainsook bouillonnes, alternated with bands of valenciennes insertion, arranged in graceefully curved lines, and it is edged with narrow valenciennes lace.

The pointed nainsook yoke, which fills in the low empire bodice, is covered with the pretty neck frill of deep valenciennes lace. The neck or Toby frill is a feature of the newer lingerie, but those who object to it as inconvenient can replace it by the less becoming arrangement of a double nainsook frill bordered with lace and placed edge upward. This frill would descend the yoke to the empire bodice, diminishing to a point, and lapping over itself below the neck.

Damaged in Transit.

A young shop assistant dropped his pen on some collars that he was making up in parcel for a country customer. Prospective complaints on the part of the said customer, and a wigging from his employer—what was to be done? A luminous idea germinated in the fertile brain of the counter man. He wrote as follows at the bottom of the delivery note:

"You will find some of the collars slightly soiled. This is no fault of ours—it was done on the journey."—Petit Parisien.

WOMAN AND HOME.

HAPPINESS AS WELL AS RESPONSIBILITIES OF MOTHERS.

The Unheard of Business Woman—A Home for Every Woman—Dust and Disease. Truth About Old Maids—Tossing Children—Household Economy.

To be mother of rosy, rollicking children, what happier fate could one desire? And yet there are those who "out-Herod" Herod in their determination to evade the responsibility of child rearing. "How I envy you your children!" said a kind hearted Christian woman to me, "but, oh, I never could assume such a responsibility!"

Responsibility? Fiddlesticks! What a flimsy covering for selfishness, in most cases. There is plenty of responsibility, but the thought is made too great a burden—too great a bugbear. When a mother has done all she can for her children—by example, precept and prayer—may she not leave the result to an All Wise Father, who knoweth and doeth all things well?

Aged mothers will tell you that in no time did they enjoy life so well as when their children were about their knees. We who are enjoying that period, with all the labor it entails, are inclined to be skeptical.

May they not be right? Best they are in many respects. Best for influence; best for opportunities; best for planting a good seed for the reaping by and by. All we mothers have not far to look for our mission. The work is here. Then let sweeter fate is with heartfelt earnestness, and with none of the feeling of I-can't-shoulder-the-responsibility.

For the first ten years of a child's life mamma is everything to it, and in those years must most of the so called training be done. For this I do not feel myself capable of giving any rules. My own shortcomings are manifold, but there is one thing I would like to say—send the children to bed happy. This may seem a small thing in itself, but its results for good are infinite.

At this hour the noisy play is hushed and they are ready to talk over the doings of the day reflectively; tender thoughts creep in unbidden and the plastic mind retains easily any impression. See to it then that no attendant fills their little heads with ghost stories or other like foolish. If possible attend them yourself, and if there are little ones, lie down beside them, and with their clinging arms about your neck tell them tender, loving stories until their eyes close in sleep; you will feel well repaid and can go about your work with a lighter heart.

There are mothers and mothers. Loving, sympathetic, spiritual mothers, and others who are mere physical mothers, and outside the pale of these I do not care to come in because of the responsibility.

A childless wife! Speak the word softly; they know not what that means. Only be one with the Creator in the God-given power of motherhood, to feel that we are objects of his special care, is it not sufficient for us to be glad of the responsibility.—Housekeeper.

The Unheard of Business Woman.

A business woman! Who is the business woman, about whom so much is heard nowadays? Is she found only in certain pursuits that require special business faculties? Or are these faculties the same that are required of the model teacher, housekeeper or writer, one who has the courage to master difficulties, who is prompt, self reliant and responsible, who works systematically, who carries that energy into whatever she undertakes which shall insure success, is she not a business woman, no matter what her vocation?

The fact is some of the smartest business women in the world are never heard of outside of their homes, who have never earned a penny except as a "penny saved is a penny earned," but who, by dauntless courage, wisdom and careful economy, have so managed their husbands' moderate incomes that they have kept their homes in cheery order and given their children a fair education.

There seems to be quite a tendency just now for women to despise the home field of business in pursuit of some other which shall yield more money. Already the probable results of this tendency are being discussed in a grave question. Canon Farrar says, "If it be true that the cornerstone of the commonwealth is the heartstone, how important is the work of every woman, even in that sphere of family life which many are tempted to despise as too narrow for their energies!" Apart from the conscious and unconscious influences of the lives of thousands of women "never heard of half a mile from home," is there not room in the management of a home for all the business abilities which a woman may possess? The trouble is, housekeeping is still an untaught science, or has been until very lately, while the luminous power of the homemaker is undervalued.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Every Woman Should Have a House.

Every woman ought to possess her own house, no matter how small or how grand it is. Still she should possess one. She should call her very own, and one which keeps her sufficiently employed to prevent her getting into mischief. That sounds perhaps a little harsh, but any truthful, observant person will coincide with the writer in pronouncing a boarding house a hotbed of gossip and imaginary ailments.

Women thus situated have not enough to do to keep them occupied. Their beds are made in the morning, their rooms dusted and their meals served with no planning on their part; therefore their days are given over to the ripping up of a gown, a few fitters to write, perhaps a thousand in the house for a day or two in spring and fall, and the remainder of their idle hours taken up in fancy work and visits to each others' rooms that result in untold gossip and imagination of bodily ailments. A new arrival furnishes food for conversation that lasts until the next one comes or some one already installed does something that the council of three or ten regards with disapproving eyes.

Her gowns, her jewels, her visitors and her domestic relations are touched upon with unsparing harshness. They sit in judgment on actions that they know nothing regarding their incentive, and condemn or extol according to the limitation of their own bosom, while if they were to be believed they are at the very verge of death; so numerous and changing are the ailments which they have ample time to note, though busier mortals endure or fail to notice at all symptoms which these women boarders magnify into terrifying complaints.—Philadelphia Times.

Dust, Upholstery and Disease.

Housekeepers in furnishing would do well to remember that the ordinary practice of covering a floor with carpets is not without its disadvantages, even its dangers. The particles which give substance to the pure search light of a sunbeam as it penetrates the window pane are of the most varied character. Harmless as are very many of them, there are also many more possessed of true morbific energy and capable of almost unlimited multiplication. Any one can see, therefore, how, when sheltered in dusty woolen haugings, chair upholstery and carpets, they render these articles veritable harbors of disease. The less we have of such the better, especially in bedrooms.

Some practical deductions naturally suggest themselves. As to curtains and carpets, it is but rational that they should as a rule consist of the smoother and harder fabrics which will bear thorough and frequent brushing. If thicker floor cloths and rugs be used they should be in such size and arrangement that they can be readily taken up and beaten. It is but part of the same argument to say that as much of the floor as possible should be either varnished or laid with oilcloth, so as to allow of frequent cleansing. Cane and leather, for a like reason, are incomparably superior to the richest upholstery when we come to speak of sources of surface.

Some perhaps may imagine that in making these observations we treat this matter too much as a hobby. Only one circumstance, however, is required in order to convince any such of their real and practical significance, and that is the actual presence of infectious disease. When this appears all forms of cumbrous comfort in the apartment must give place not merely to a freer and simpler arrangement, but even to bare, sunlit and airy desolation.—Lancet.

The Truth About Old Maids.

There never was a greater mistake than the prevailing notion that because a woman passes the first flush of youth without joining hands at the altar with some lord of creation she must be inevitably an undesirable creature that from henceforth will be called an old maid and made the subject of silly jests and thoughtless ridicule.

As a woman talking to women, and men as well, we give as our candid opinion a rather pronounced statement, but one that every thinking man implicitly believes in—namely, that no woman lives to the age of thirty-five without at least having one offer of marriage; therefore the silly notion that is compiled with the term "old maid" is entirely wrong.

A woman has her own reason for remaining single. It isn't because no man wants her, but rather because she does not perhaps choose to ally herself with such ones as have done her the honor to ask her, or may be there has been in her life some great disappointment, or a finding out before it is too late how much better it is to be even called an old maid than an unhappy wife.

Charming, attractive women, many there are who are still classed among the sour visaged, ill-natured, elderly maidens, whom we are accustomed to seeing on the comic valentines, yet who perhaps, instead of mourning over their fate because they are not matrons rather than maids, could unfold many a heart story of love and romance to the gushing youngsters who, just starting out in life, think that to be an old maid is to be on the human bargain counter waiting for any chance purchaser.—Philadelphia Times.

Tossing Children.

The other afternoon I got into a car of the Sixth avenue elevated road going up town. At the next station above where I entered the car a father, mother and a boy about five or six years old got into the same car. As soon as given up the mother, who made room for the boy beside her; after a time the father got a seat and tried to persuade the boy to come over to him. The boy very irritably refused, and with pouting lips remained closer to his mother.

A few stations farther on a seat beside the mother was vacated, and then the father changed his seat to the vacant one beside the boy. Much coaxing and the small boy was persuaded to kneel between them and look out of the window. No sooner was he comfortably settled than the father began tossing him up by pulling the boy's ears, pinching his cheeks, shoving his elbows off the window sill and pulling his feet. At every manifestation of anger or impatience the father would throw his head back and laugh. At last he made the boy cry, and his enjoyment reached a climax as he stopped saying in an audible whisper, "Cry baby! cry baby!"

The poor little fellow was a painful object. He was very thin, had tiny bones, and was evidently worn out nervously, and without doubt his physical condition was due entirely to the thoughtless cruelty of his father, a big, healthy, careless, fun loving man, and had almost written monster—selfish and dense to every finer emotion. The patient expression on the mother's face as she occasionally soothed the boy proved that the experience was too common to even arouse comment in her.—Christian Union.

Economical Household Purchases.

It is well understood, or it should be, that discretion in buying and skill in cooking are both vital to true economy. The woman who should go to a dry goods store, and, without specifying what particular kind of dress she wanted, divest the salesman to give her enough of the best woolen goods for a dress, and who should then hand the material over to her dressmaker with instructions to make it well and trim it becomingly, might or might not be well dressed. It is fairly certain that she would be handsomely dressed. Yet thousands of women give orders after precisely this fashion to their butchers and cooks, and are then despondent because their bills are so large.

It is a primary duty of the housekeeper to understand the relative values of the goods, and to know how they should be cooked to preserve their virtues. If the most expensive viands are desired, all right. Let them be so prepared that they shall justify their cost. They do not necessarily traverse the principles of true economy. But the most expensive viands, while they are likely to be the best for their particular purposes, are entirely out of place in the preparation of other equally valuable and equally toothsome dishes. Their use then becomes gross extravagance. If the housekeeper knows the character of each article of food that is bought, and devotes each to its proper use, she has mastered the great principle of dietetic economy.—American Analyst.

How to Clean Delicate Goods.

When the embroidered flannel skirts and blankets belonging to the infants of the household become somewhat soiled by little spots scattered here and there, it is a good plan to wash out the spots without putting the entire garment into the water. As usually laundered the beautiful embroidery has taken many hours are half ruined after their first contact with water, and if much soiled had best be sent for a dry cleaning. When only a little soiled, lay the garment flat over a bowl and pour boiling hot water over them until they disappear.

Then soap them in the usual manner most of the water is absorbed and press while damp. Flannels should never be blued, and crocheted skirts and shawls should be pulled and shaken into shape before drying. If pressed with six of the wool will be matted and lifeless.

Little hoods from Angora wool may be cleaned by heating two or three ounces of wheat flour until so hot that you can scarcely bear the hand on it. Put the flour in a clean earthen or tin vessel and rub it well into the hoods before using. When cold pin the articles on the line and leave them out in a strong wind, or beat thoroughly with a rattan beater. Angora furs may be cleaned in the same way. The flour must be stirred while heating to prevent scorching.—Chicago News.

Hasty Judgment.

It is well to suspend judgment. In many cases until we have had time to review circumstances and place motives. Especially where children are concerned should we be very careful not to confuse their ideas of right and wrong by acting with injustice, scolding or correcting them for mistakes due to their inexperience, and perhaps inflicting punishment when none should be served. A little child once rau nearly a mile from her own home to that of a friend carrying an umbrella to her mother, whom she supposed to be there. Great was the wind rose, and arrested her flight and drenched the little one. Before she arrived at her destination, wet, bedraggled and quite unable to explain why she had come when met by curious eyes and amazed questions. The mother had seen the impending storm and gone home, and the result of the whole proceeding was—for this true story took place in former days than ours—that the child was shut up for many hours of the next day to think over the fault of equivocation.—Harper's Bazar.

Cleaning White Rugs.

There are many inquiries of how to clean white gontskin rugs. They can be cleaned by washing or with naphtha. Wet a small part of the rug with naphtha and rub with soft cloth until that space is clean; then clean another space, continuing until the entire rug has been treated in this way. Hang in the air until the odor has disappeared. Take care that no gas is in the room while the naphtha is being used.

To wash the rug put into a tub about four gallons of tepid water and half a pint of household ammonia. Let the rug soak in this for about half an hour, sopping it up and down in the water frequently. Rinse in several tepid waters, and hang on the line to dry, if possible in a shady place. Select a windy day for this work. Even with the greatest care the skin will become hard when washed. Rubbing it between the hands tends to soften it, or it may be folded lengthwise, the fur side in, and then be passed through the clothes wringer several times. This of course should be done only when the rug is dry.—Exchange.

Washing Lemons.

"Please put those lemons into a dish of water and let them stay there ten or fifteen minutes before you use them," said a lady to the new housemaid, who was getting ready to make lemon pies. The girl looked somewhat surprised, and the lady continued: "I do not suppose that many people stop to think of it, but the outside of a lemon is anything but clean. If you will look at it you will see some tiny black spots like scales all over it. These are the eggs of an insect, and if the lemons are not washed they are very likely to become an ingredient of whatever dish the lemon is used for. For years I have made the practice of cleaning all the lemons I use with a small scrub brush kept for the purpose, then dropping them into a dish of water to remain for ten or ten minutes before using. It is a little trouble, but I am very fond of having things clean, especially the things I am expected to eat."—New York Ledger.

Careful Habits for Children.

Children who take cold easily should always be made to change their stockings on coming in from out of doors, and it is a capital plan when so doing to dip each foot in a basin of cold water, rubbing foot and ankle dry with a vigorous application of a rough towel. If a child has a tendency toward throat trouble his neck should be bathed every night and morning with salt and water commence with lukewarm water and accustom him gradually to perfectly cold water) and rubbed dry with a rough towel, and after brushing his teeth he should always gargle his throat well with salt and water.—New York Tribune.

The Food of Children.

Children who are allowed to eat warm bread, rich pastries, cakes and candies are almost invariably subject to habitual attacks of indigestion. The farreaching effects of such attacks can be avoided by the prohibition of such food. Meat, not too tender, and crusts of bread are excellent objects upon which a child's teeth may be exercised and strengthened.—Exchange.

How to Secure "Top Milk."

"Top milk" is the upper half of milk which has been allowed to stand for a time, say three hours. It should be dipped, not poured off from the under milk. For a baby of three months at first add as much water as cream, gradually diminish the proportion of water.

Hints.

If moths have gotten into trunks or chests of any kind, the trunks should be emptied, and everything brushed and aired; then wash the trunks with borax and water and air and sun. After drying put cloth under that space is clean; then clean another space, continuing until the entire rug has been treated in this way. Hang in the air until the odor has disappeared. Take care that no gas is in the room while the naphtha is being used.

Arrested at the Depot.

Richard Canfield, colored, was pretty well filled with Jersey lightning last evening. In fact he was so well filled that he didn't know how full he was, nor what he was doing. He happened to wander up toward the North Avenue depot, where Policeman Decourcey is always in waiting for just such fellows. Canfield started in to clear out the waiting room, and the officer promptly tackled him. He was too much for Decourcey, however, and help had to be secured before Canfield could be taken to the station house, where he was finally locked up.

This morning Canfield was taken before City Judge Codington to answer to the charge of being drunk and disorderly and with resisting an officer. He was convicted and fined twelve dollars.

Deceased was in the eightieth year of his age. Mr. Adair was for many years manager of the old Hibbard homestead, His second wife and three children—two sons and one daughter—survive him. Mrs. Joseph Clark of Scotch Plains, is the daughter, and Mr. George Adair of Scotch Plains and Mr. Charles Adair of Newark are the sons of the deceased.

Seeking to Restrain the Heirs.

The heirs of Job Male are charged with a desire to dissipate a mortgage on some part of the estate, and yesterday the administrators and receivers applied to Chancellor McGill for an order restraining them from taking any action in that direction until the final order of the court is filed and accepted. The Chancellor appointed Frederick Adams, of Newark, to take testimony.

GANNON IN JAIL AGAIN.

SUMMIT'S CONSTABLE CHARGED WITH A SERIOUS CRIME.

Accused of Attempting to Assault Mrs. John Meizel, whose Little Boy He Had Arrested—He Committed a Similar Offense Last July, but was Released.

Bernard Gannon, the Summit constable, whose crime against Bertha Reckling, a prisoner he had in charge, aroused the indignation of many people in the county, is again in trouble. He was arrested on Saturday, charged with villainous assault upon Mrs. John Meizel at Summit.

Gannon on Thanksgiving Day arrested Mrs. Meizel's little son for stealing bottled beer from the cellar of a residence. The allegation is that Mrs. Meizel went to Gannon to plead for the release of her son, and, it is stated, offered him $5 to let him go.

Gannon refused to take the money, but it is alleged, made an improper proposal to Mrs. Meizel, which she indignantly resented. It is charged he attempted to assault her, using her very brutally. Mrs. Meizel escaped screaming from him, and made complaint before Justice Behan.

Constable McGrath arrested Gannon and took him to the county jail. The Summit people are determined that Gannon shall be punished this time if he is guilty as alleged.

The wrongs he was alleged to have committed against Bertha Reckling was committed in July last. The girl was arrested for theft, and Gannon, before taking her out of the lock-up in Summit, was charged with attempting to assault her. On the way to Elizabeth he was charged with extorting $10 in money from the girl.

The case was investigated by order of the court, and Prosecutor Marsh said in open court that some of the statements made by the girl were fully corroborated. Gannon pleaded not guilty, and the grand jury did not indict him. He was released and a few days later was engaged in guiding foreign born residents from Summit to the court for naturalization, in behalf of the Democratic party.

A year ago or so Gannon was indicted for keeping a disorderly house in Summit.

Mr. Smith is very interesting, and it is hoped that the young men of the city will avail themselves of the opportunity of hearing him. The admission will be free.

Peace Street Opening Decided Upon.

The Committee of Common Council—Messrs. Ginna, Case and Fisk, and the North Plainfield Township Committee, consisting of Messrs. Smith, Allen and Voorhees, which held a joint session Friday night respecting the extension of Peace street (now Broadway) after looking over the maps and assessments, and full and free conference, unanimously decided to accept the report as presented. The particulars have already been published. The report was ordered by resolution filed in duplicate with the city clerk and the clerk of the Township of North Plainfield.

The Plainfield Common Council will probably accept the report at the meeting of Council next Monday, and when these formalities are gone over the work will be proceeded with.

The commissioners who are appointed to assess benefits and damages were present at the meeting to explain their report. These commissioners for Plainfield were Messrs. William C. Ayres, William Sandford and Jeremiah Manning, and for North Plainfield, Messrs. Jacob Long, A. J. Winkler and Lewis E. Barkelew.

The Greek Class to Begin in January.

In order to lighten the work of the classical department, Principal Maxson *has arranged to have the Greek class be*gin in January. This gives one month longer to the pupils to prepare for college. Next year the class will begin a term earlier, so as to give pupils three years to meet the requirement of college, instead of two years as heretofore. This will do much to relieve the crowding complained of in the class course.

THE PRICE AND OUTPUT OF COAL.

Lehigh Valley Officials Reply in the Coal Combine Suit.

An additional batch of affidavits was filed yesterday in the Court of Chancery by the defense in the suit of the State of New Jersey against the Reading Railroad coal combination. These affidavits are chiefly in defense of the Eastern and Amboy Railroad case. Charles Harshorne, Vice President of the Eastern and Amboy, as well as of the Lehigh Valley, gave the history of the two roads, and then went on to deny that, under a lease of the Lehigh Valley to the Reading, any combination was entered into concerning the selling of mining of anthracite coal, or that there was any purpose to create a monopoly in the supply of coal so as to give Reading control over the output and price. The coal companies in which these railroads are stockholders do not monopolize the product of sale.

Robert Sayre, Second Vice President of the Lehigh Valley; John R. Fanshaw, Secretary, and A. W. Steadman, Chief Engineer of the same road, presented same affidavits supporting the same. C. E. Henderson, General Manager of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, in his affidavit gave tables to show that there has not been a scarcity of coal in consequence of any diminution or limitation of supply during August, September and October of this year. He claims that the advances made in prices were not unreasonable, and that at present the prices are not properly remunerative. He says it is misleading to compare the prices this year with those of 1890 and 1891, as they were the prices only of certain operators. They were not the prices of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company. Referring to the charges that various companies sent their agents to meetings in New York to join in the advance of prices, he denies that the meetings were held for such a purpose, and adds that no prices are fixed thereat by any binding action whatever. The meetings are held only for consultation as to the state of trade, as is done in almost every business.

John H. Jones, Chief of the Bureau of Anthracite Coal Statistics, gives figures to disprove the charge of curtailment in the output of coal, quoting the amounts mined by a large number of companies. He adds that in point of fact the supply of anthracite coal has been greater for the last ten months of the year 1892 than ever before, the same aggregating 34,571,852 tons, an increase over the corresponding period of 1891 of 1,849,049 tons. He shows that in 1885 over 38,000,000 tons were shipped, but that the shipments fell off in 1889 to 35,000,000 tons. In 1891 the shipments were greater than ever before, namely, 40,448,387 tons.

ROSELLE DOUBLY BLESSED.

Besides Getting Pure Water from Here it is to Have Sewerage.

A special election was held yesterday in Roselle to decide whether the place should have a new sewer built to empty into Pyle Creek, a tributary of Staten Island Sound.

The election was an exciting affair, as female property-owners were allowed to vote. Thirty-eight women trudged bravely to the polls through the storm and deposited their ballots. More than 90 per cent. of the entire vote was cast and the advocates of sewerage won a signal victory, they polling three-fourths of the total vote.

The people of Roselle have now a double cause for rejoicing. The town heretofore had to depend on wells for its water supply, and in case of a big fire the firemen would be wholly unable to successfully fight the flames. Now a plentiful supply is obtained from Plainfield's Water Works.

Music Hall Notes.

The attraction at Music Hall on Friday evening next will be the musical extravaganza "Our Goblins"—made famous by William Gill. When Mr. Gill took the piece through the country, he had a cast, embracing such artists as Francis Wilson, Digby Bell, Emma Carson and others, who have since become unusually prominent. The company which Brinkley Bros. present here, embraces a cast equally as strong, among whom are Mrs. George S. Knight, whom everybody knows, Richard F. Carroll, late of the New York Casino; William Blaisdell, late principal comedian of the Pauline Hall Opera Company; Miss Annie Sutherland, Miss Clara Lavine and Mr. Oscar Girard. There are eighteen people in all, in the company. The company itself is sufficient guarantee as to the character of the attraction.

Don't forget Bazaar and Music.

W. C. T. U. Notes.

One of the rules of the Homestead Mills—Rule No. 7—is as follows: "The use of intoxicating liquor by any employee, while on duty, is absolutely forbidden, under penalty of immediate discharge."

No man but a total abstainer is allowed, under the laws of Michigan, to be employed as engineer, train-dispatcher, fireman, brakeman or other railway servant. Any railway violating the law is liable to a fine of $500 for each offence.

In Salem, Mass., samples of posters, lithographs and other advertisements of entertainments must be submitted to a committee of the city rulers before being displayed. An example worthy of imitation by every city Council.

Another Cure for Diphtheria.

The Scientific American says the following is the best remedy for diphtheria: At the first indication of the disease in the throat of a person make the room close, then take a tin cup and pour into it a quantity of tar and turpentine, equal parts. Then hold the cup over the fire so as to fill the room with the fumes. The patient on inhaling the fumes, will cough up and spit out all the membraneous matter, and the diphtheria will soon come off. The same mixture of tar and turpentine will soon loosen the matter in the throat and thus afford relief that has baffled the skill of the physicians.

EDITORIAL NOTES

What does the New York Sun mean by talking about "the romantic ideas which not unfrequently accompany red hair?"

The very precautions you take against "catching" cold often make you more liable to it. Make friends with cool fresh air and it will not hurt you.

Eight states have taken advantage of the appropriation for a naval militia and already have a promising and tolerably well equipped force of young volunteer seamen.

The Knights of Labor will establish an employment bureau of their own, which is an excellent move. They have put it on record in their platform that they desire the adoption of the Swiss referendum in this country. In Switzerland, whenever a sufficient number of citizens demand that any legislative measure shall be referred to the whole people, instead of merely to the parliament, for decision, it is so referred. It would be well perhaps for some of the great organizations like the Knights of Labor to adopt the referendum in the transaction of their own affairs. Important measures might be placed before all members in good standing to be rejected or adopted by the whole body, instead of being merely settled by a governing board or convention of delegates. Then we would see how the referendum scheme works. The Knights of Labor also want a graduated tax placed by congress on both income and inheritances. The tax on inheritances is now imposed in Great Britain. Many intelligent persons in the United States favor it.

A Harmless Explosion.

Time's revenge was strikingly illustrated in the celebrations commemorating in London the fifth anniversary of "Bloody Sunday," as it will be known in English history. Five years ago on a November Sunday a great host of socialists, democrats and unemployed workingmen tried to hold a meeting in Trafalgar square, London. Their ideas were rather hazy as to what they wanted to do. They were only certain that they desired to wave red flags and declare that the government ought to give employment to poor people. But orders were given that the police should prevent the meeting from taking place. Nothing daunted, the processionists formed in various parts of London and marched to the number of 100,000 to Trafalgar square. Here 4,000 police met them, and for a time there was fierce fighting. Forty policemen and 200 citizens were seriously injured. A liberal member of parliament, Mr. Cunningham Graham, was clubbed by the police.

On the fifth anniversary of this "Blood Sunday," in November, 1892, a vast concourse of people met once more in Trafalgar square. They celebrated the restored right of the people to hold public meetings in the square,—a right restored to them by the Gladstone government. They carried red flags to their hearts' content, and declared that the government should start the unemployed poor at work upon all needed public improvements, and nobody contradicted them. Then they dispersed and went home; nobody hurt, everybody satisfied. Moral—Let discontented people talk and they will feel better and not blow anybody up.

A Workingman's Words.

If philosophers and statesmen would write as plain and good English as Fred Woodrow, who alleges in a letter he writes in The Century, then they might make some impression on mankind. Mr. Woodrow addresses some advice to workingmen out of his own experience and observation. He believes that co-operative stores would enable poor people to get their supplies at wholesale rates. Further, profit sharing in the industries will be the next step up. Workingmen, Mr. Woodrow says, are at present ignorant of the manipulation of money and of business management. By way of obtaining certain kinds of enlightenment at least he recommends to them to think about the following points:

We have made some considerable to about what we ought to have. Do we ever stop to think of how much we throw away? We think of one dollar, one half dollar, sausage meat and our red herring—never the which and sometimes not enough—but how often is it that we stop to think of the dollars and dollars we drop in our mugs of beer? We object to a cut in our wages, and have hard words for the employers as from time to time county reduce a worker's weekly pay, but do we not do the same thing when we send a shemaker out of a quarter for soaking our socks and undergo the beauties that holds our coat and waistcoat? We complain of being left on the plate by statesmanship, and of our having to pay taxes to bribe aldermen and make ballot-boxes and contractors rich, but we see to it that when we deposit a ballot-boxful it is a good man, and not for a rogue? And are there not times and thoughts in our existence of my home—when a race than as to what kind of man we want at Washington.

We find fault with the capitalist for depressing labor values when the market is full of hands, but do we not crack the same label of things when we compel a contractor in the middle of an important contract to give us higher wages or find himself left out in the cold? We have no compact with employer in the matter

WARNON'S WONDERFUL CURES.

Crowds Flock to Wilkesbarre to Test the Clergyman's Powers.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., Nov. 29.—The wonderful cures worked in this place by "the Healing Evangelist," the Rev. P. Warnon, have been continued with the most remarkable results. Crowds are flocking to this city from many parts of the country, drawn hither by the hope of being benefited by the marvelous powers of the "Evangelist." The most obstinate forms of chronic disease have succumbed to his treatment, it is said, there being hundreds of witnesses ready to substantiate this statement. The "Evangelist" makes no announcement or reward of any kind, and treats all without distinction who come to him for help.

REV. P. WARNON.

The services at which the healing "Evangelist" acts and performs his cures have been held in the Zion African Methodist Episcopal church, which was offered to him by the colored preacher, the Rev. T. Danforfield. Here the "Evangelist" has drawn crowds nightly.

It is said that persons totally deaf in one ear for thirty, eighteen, nineteen and twenty-four years, respectively, were by a moment's treatment enabled to hear and correctly repeat words spoken or whispered in them while their hitherto sound ears were closed. In the daytime the "Evangelist" treats people at his boarding house, 10 Stream street. Here the rooms are crowded from early morning until night. He treats about 200 persons daily in this manner.

DESPERATE CONVICTED MURDERERS.

They Attempt Suicide at Pittsburg. Frank Garvin Sentenced.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 29.—Two Italians, Angelo and Joseph Zappe, who were sentenced to hang for the murder of Frank Heimstetter, after being taken back to their cells attempted to kill themselves by dashing their heads against the prison walls. Angelo battled his head against the stone wall until the blood streamed from the cuts and then jumped from the cell range to the floor, twenty feet below, and is badly though not fatally hurt. Joseph also battered his head almost to a jelly against the bars of his cell door. They were removed to padded cells and a special watch placed on them.

George Strasser, who killed Joseph Brandel last August, was then called and also sensed to death by the court.

Frank Garvin, who killed his wife, was sentenced to eight years and nine months' imprisonment in the penitentiary.

The court holds that the accused had availed himself of the laws of the state, and was not deprived of his life and liberty without due process of law.

GRACE WILSON THE GIRL

She Is Said to Be Crouse's Alleged Widow.

AFTER THE TEN MILLIONS SHE LEFT.

Considerable Mystery Still Surrounds the Identity of the Woman Who, It Is Said, Will Make a Big Fight for the Syracuse Millionaire's Money.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Nov. 29.—The name of the alleged widow of Daniel Edgar Crouse, who left an estate of $20,000,000, is now known. She is believed to be preparing to contest the will. The woman in the case is Grace Wilson. She came from Chicago about twelve years ago and made her home in New York. At one time she lived at the Rockingham flats, southeast corner of Fifty-sixth street and Broadway. An exceedingly pretty and attractive young woman, of good family, Mr. Crouse formed her acquaintance in 1883. He took her to Saratoga and she had rooms at the Windsor. He promised also to fit up rooms for her in the Ashland in New York, but it is not known whether he ever did so or not. Frequently he sent her to Europe and for months she lived in superb style in England, Crouse paying her expenses. While thus apart they corresponded by letter and by cable.

How the Alleged Widow Looks.

An intimate friend of Mr. Crouse said: "I do not positively know that Mr. Crouse and Miss Wilson were married, but it was only last August that I met Edgar and asked him where Grace Wilson was. He replied that she was in Europe and married. He did not say whether she was married to him or some one else. Soon after I took a trip to Europe and saw Edgar on my return. He inquired if I had seen Grace. I said, 'No.' 'She is married now, you know,' he said.

"Miss Wilson is thirty-two years of age; a decided blonde. Her hair is light and her eyes blue. She is of medium height, stylish appearance, weighing about 135 pounds."

The construction of the will is considered peculiar in that it mentions only a few special bequests, and says that the rest of the estate shall go to the heirs, the next of kin. He may have worded the will this way expressly to provide for a wife and son, without having the fact of a marriage disclosed until after his death.

It is rumored that at one time Mr. Crouse bought Miss Wilson off, giving her a large sum of money in exchange for the letters he had written her, but she was clever enough to retain possession of two or three of the most incriminating ones.

They Will Fight "Mrs. Crouse."

Professor Smith's Trial.

The specifications were then voted on one at a time, and all were sustained by a large majority except the last. The decision will not determine the guilt of Dr. Smith, but will settle the question whether or not he will be put on trial on the charge.

They Have Got a Cannon.

Lace Fichus and Bibs.

For dinner and evening wear a great many fichus are made; they are in the Marie Antoinette form, with ends at the back, and are made of bits of silk, crepe or real gauze de soie; some are finished off with fine pliese frills and a profusion of valenciennes lace; others are edged with pink silk ruches and some other style of lace; others are of spotted gauze or net, with wide lace falling from the edge; these are looped up here and there with pearl bead tates, jeweled butterflies, beetles, flies or natural flowers are placed about at will in the gauze. The bibs, made of a long straight piece of lace falling from the collar, are also much in vogue, made of black, cream or white guipure.

Fashion Echoes.

The new blouse gown, falling in straight natural folds from the neck, has given an impetus to stripes, and one of the best silks for this purpose has a white satin ground, with a diagonal woven stripe in mauve or blue at intervals of 1½ inches, inclosing infinitesimal sprays of white brocade and small colored flowers. For young girls either silk gauze or pearl garniture forms the best trimmings.

Watches seem to be worn now in the most extraordinary positions. What can be more useless to the wearer or more tempting to the marauder than a watch attached to a short gold band worn like a medal on the left breast or suspended beneath a jewel bow brooch?

The new evening silks principally show line stripes on a shot watered ground, which, like the chameleon, is many colored. Velvets, silks, velvet gauzes, everything is shot this season.

Among the accessories to dress that women delight in are many charming lace things, and here the long Louis XV. sunpire pattern are made entirely of lace.

Fashionable colors for evening are peach, straw color, pink, turquoise blue and sea foam. For morning, brown and petunia, with various shades of green, but above all else this year in Parisian and oriental combinations.

Enamel flower pins for the hair have a new lease of life. These are in silver and mounted on silver pins, with an interposing spiral spring that gives them movement. One of the prettiest instances in a morning dress is silvery tints gently shading into pink and blue.

White enamel is conspicuously present in jewelry. Blue enamel, light in tint, has the next prominence.

COST OF SINGLE LIFE.

STAYING UNMARRIED ISN'T A VERY EXPENSIVE MATTER.

Here's a Story of How a Writer in New York City Manages to Live Comfortably and Happily, Even Though She Is a Girl. Three Girls Who Have a Nice Home.

In these days when there is so much talk about the wisdom of a girl's marrying I like to gloat over the blessings of my maidenhood. I am not married, and I have not fallen a victim to any of the good-hearted and well meaning people who are devising schemes for banning women who earn their own living. I honestly cannot imagine myself being roofed into a woman's apartment house by a lot of printed regulations in a gold frame. Wholesome, intelligent freedom is what I want, and what I've got. Allah be praised!

For a girl who must live inexpensively the boarding house is not to be considered. She can't get a room into which she is willing to take callers, formal or informal, for less than twelve dollars or possibly ten dollars a week south of Harlem. And I don't believe a girl can retain her health or self respect in the cheap boarding place where the food is bad, the servants impudent, the whole house smelly, full of mice and disagreeable people.

A furnished room, with one's food in the lower bureau drawer, the kerosene stove and other cooking utensils stuck behind, into and under things, is untidy in the extreme, to speak politely. The only really nice and satisfactory way is for several congenial girls with incomes and occupations which do not conflict to co-operatively housekeep in a pleasant flat. I'll give you my recipe for the home life of a New York self supporting woman. It is my own experience.

My income is precisely eleven dollars a week, and I earn every penny of it. Well. It puts me ten dollars a week for all my expenses. I have a room to myself, a kitchen and parlor at opposite ends of the establishment, and just what I want and need to eat. There are cheerful, open grates in my apartments, pictures on my walls, carpets on my floors, and I am permitted to have a cat to keep the rodes away.

This is how I do it all.

My friends—Jeannette, a medical student, and Elsie, an artist—hire with me a furnished flat of six rooms, for which we pay forty dollars a month. I have the lightest sleeping room, for there I must convert my ideas into salable "articles," and Elsie takes a corner of the dining room, where the light is just right for her painting.

She answers the doorbell—I can't have the flow of my ideas interrupted by peddlers and milkmen, and Jeannette is away most of the day.

We take turns in attending to some of the household duties, such as sweeping and dusting. I always get the breakfast. That earns for me a quiet morning with my ideas.

We have good things to eat. There are always either baked, boiled or stewed potatoes, cooked on the gas stove. Bitte kitchen range. We have grain in some form and then broiled fish usually.

The baker loaves us half a dozen fresh rolls each morning, and I usee with a cup of chocolate and a bit of fruit complete a breakfast upon which the girls usually compliment me. (We would be a quiet to say nice things to each other which we have the opportunity.)

We dine "en ville" the table at noon. Each one gets her own lunch, which consists of a glass of hot malted milk, some fresh bread and butter, cheese and fruit. Elsie leaves off painting at 4:30 and gets the "heavy" part of the dinner, Jeannette prepares the dessert.

We don't often bother with soup, but we always have a roast or some special meat, potatoes of course, vegetables, a salad, dessert and each a tiny cup of black coffee. Then we take turns in disposing of the debris according to our engagements for the evening. At bedtime we each take a cup of hot milk and sleep peacefully for eight hours.

So much for the gastronomic end of the combine.

Saturday evening we make it a point to stay in. Elsie reads aloud, Jeannette mends the family clothes and linen, I do the millinery and make furbelows. When any of us needs new headgear I stroll up Fifth avenue, pick out something pretty, go on to Sixth avenue, duplicate the materials of the original twenty-five dollar hat for four dollars. I make all the little fixings and cut and fit out the house gowns which the girls wear, they sew them themselves.

Each spring and fall we hire a woman to come to the house and make us a street dress apiece. We pay her three dollars a day, and she does all three gowns in a week. These dresses cost us our eighteen dollars each and they are well made and fashionable. We have always something left over from the season before, which does for second best. Our jackets last two years. We have a couple of summer and two winter house dresses, made of linen, pongee, material, which easily become very effective by a touch of just the right colors in the right places. (And we change our gowns always before dinner, we think we owe it to each other whether we have company or not).

Now about the actual expenses. Each of us spends $10 in six months. One flat food and gas and fuel cost us each $6.50 a week:

Flat, food, etc.	$156 00	Jacket.....	$7 50
Street shoes.....	18 00	Car fare.....	6 00
Shoes.....	6 00	bows and ac-
Gloves.....	6 00	cessories.....	38 50
House slippers..	8 00
Total.....			$240 00

Of course we have to shampoo our own hair, do our own manicuring, and all such things. Our magazines and books all come from the library, but we buy the newspapers.

And that is the way we girls live—very lavishly, very comfortably. We find plenty of opportunity to practice the golden rule, but it is good discipline. We try always to be cheerful and to meet our obligations promptly.

It costs me just ten dollars a week for the privilege of remaining single, and if I choose to save up my extra money for—why, even for a trousseau, that is my own affair. —Margery Daw in New York Press.

How to Stain a Floor.

The labor of staining a floor is not very great, and with a little patience and skill a few of the boys of the family might be allowed to use up their superfluous energy in this way. By slitting on a low stool and painting one board at a time, lengthwise of the board, and using a large brush, a good sized room may soon be covered. Allow it to dry well before putting on a second coat, and this in turn before shellacking, and let twenty-four hours at least elapse before using the room after the final coat.—Christian Union.

Miss Willard's Early Equestrianship.

Frances Willard was not a girl who was easily balked. Her ambition to do all her brother did drove her when forbidden to ride a horse, to saddle and ride her cow. Here is the story of this characteristic episode:

Father was so careful of his girls and so much afraid that harm would come to us if we went horseback riding that I determined to have a steed of my own, and captured a saddle and trained a favorite heifer Dime to act in that capacity. I took the ground that the cows were a lazy and inert race, and never worked much; so no reason why they shouldn't begin now. Up in Lapland they made a great many uses of the deer that people didn't where we live, and he was all the better and more famous animal as a result of it. So since father wouldn't let me ride a horse I would make Dime the best trained and most accomplished cow in the pasture, and Dime would like it, too, if they would only let her alone. So with much extra feeding and currying and no end of curry combing to make her coat shine I brought Dime up to a high degree of civilization.

She would "moo" whenever I approached and follow me about like a dog; she would submit to being led by a bridle, which Loren, always ready to help, had made out of an old pair of reins; she was gradually broken to harness, and would draw the hand sleds of us girls, but the crowning success was when she "got wonted" (which really meant when she willed) to the saddle, and though I had many an inglorious tumble before the summit of my hopes was reached I found myself at last in possession of an outlandish steed, whose every motion threatened a catastrophe, and whose awkwardness was such that she presented a picturesque exhibition of the animal's powers, but used to ride out of sight down in the big ravine, and only when the boys were busy in the field. —Mr. Stead in Review of Reviews.

Woman.

"What is woman for?" So asked Dr. L. F. Bryson at the annual meeting of the American Social Science association at Saratoga on Aug. 30.

She is for soul, for thought, for love, for bewitchment, for romance, for beauty and for man. She is for this world and for other worlds. She is for all time and after time. She is for memory and for hope. She is for dreams beauteous. She is for poetry and art. She is for the fulfillment of the human imagination. She is for the household and her mate. She is for everything that is worth anything. She is for life. She is for faith. She is for earth and heaven. She is for summer and for winter. She is for the glory of the world, which would be intolerable without her. She is for all delicacy and daintiness. She is for youth, for middle age, for old age. She is for the merry hearted and for the weary footed. She is for light. She is the crown of creation, the consummate masterpiece of nature.

It was Robert Burns who, in an hour of ecstasy, sang:

And nature swears, the lovely dears
Her noblest work she classes, O!
Her 'prentice han she tried on man,
And then she made the lasses, O!

"What is woman for?" cries Dr. Bryson, while standing up before the American Social Science association. She is not for analysis by the chemical methods of the members of that body. She is not for the monoculous inspection of a lot of delegates assembled in convention. She is not for the gratifica- [illegible] She is not for science alone. Or, no, no! She is for those only who surrender their souls wholly to her magic and throw themselves unreservedly at her feet.—New York Sun.

The Cure of the Breast.

A correspondent, asking about the care of the breast before confinement, says: "Last time I had to stop nursing the baby when only three weeks old on account of sore nipples, which were so painful that the agony could not be endured. Now there are little white raised spots on the surface of the nipple. A simple alum and water enough, or should I use something else?"

The best general directions we can give are these: Daily carefully wash the nipples with plain water and a little borax or boric acid. Then harden them with alum and alcohol, say a teaspoonful of powdered alum to a tablespoonful of alcohol or, if more convenient to get, whisky. Draw the nipple out gently every day to insure that it will be long enough for the infant to suck it. Wash the cracks or abrasions and heal them if possible.

After delivery take the greatest care of the nipples before and after each suckling, particularly as to cleansing. If they are sensitive protect them with a soft cloth covered with vaseline or very bland oil.—Mothers' Nursery Guide.

Something of a Mathematician.

A young southern woman, Elizabeth Brown Davis, stands among the foremost mathematicians of this country in intellectual accuracy and skill. The first mathematical work of importance accomplished by Mrs. Davis was that of reading the proofs and verifying the calculations of Professor Simon Newcombe's Calculus. Later, when the computer in The Nautical Almanac office, Mrs. Hill, entered the competitive examination which was to determine his successor in company with a dozen men. Within three hours every man, all college graduates, had been examined in the mathematical and astronomical problems with which they were confronted, but the girl of nineteen answered every question, solved every problem, won for her papers the sure "100 plus" from the committee, and received the place at $1,200 a year. After graduating from the Columbian University, Mrs. Hill married and resigned her place on The Nautical Almanac, though she kept the contract for calculating the ephemeris of the sun, and her calculations are ahead now up to 1896.—New York Sun.

The Development of a Child.

For the moment let me follow the child out of the stage of infancy into that of school age. The boy of five, let us suppose, is sent to school a perfect stranger to books and the usual educational equipment. Everything on the road to school attracts him to such an extent that liking enough he may arrive late. When at school the teacher may find him so restless that the question of keeping him in order so that he shall not disturb others is a matter of serious difficulty. So long as he can be kept in action things go well enough, but to keep this activity within conventional bounds is the problem.

Very often repressive measures that quite paralyze his nature are resorted to in order to adapt his organism to the environment instead of the reverse being attempted. It is forgotten how often that this young creature is here not active, even restless, impulsive, inattentive—i. e., ever ready to secure some new impression—as could not be developed for nature's plan.—Wesley Mills, M. D., in Popular Science Monthly.

THE POTTER.

One of the Most Ancient and Esteemed of Oriental Crafts.

Earthen vessels are among the earliest productions of man's industry and industry, and more than 3,000 years ago the manufacture had already attained great perfection. Most beautiful and best-modelled specimens of delicate porcelain have been found in the tombs and monuments of Egypt.

Every boy and girl who has known the delight of making mud pies will understand something of the fascination of this

The potter and his work and the frailty of his wares are often found used as emblems in the Bible. Jeremiah xxiii. 2-4, mentions the "wheel" and also the remodelling of a spoiled work.

A large field or "place" is the usual chosen site for the potter's trade. In the open ground the preparatory work is carried on, the sifting, mixing, blending and kneading of the clays; here also are the kilns, which are for the joint use of all the potters on the works. Around the field are the shops.

The frailie nature of eastern pottery renders this trade an extensive one, though the Arabs have a perverse skill in the potter a "rascal" and his calling a "mean" one. The manner in which the work is carried on now must be quite similar to that practiced by the ancients. The clay is kneaded by the feet and divided into various sized pieces, which are used according to the purpose for which they are required. The lump is put on the top of the wheel and molded by the hands and fingers of the potter, to the desired form, while with his feet he propels the axle to which his wheel turns. Should he find his work faulty, he crushes it in his hands and remodels the whole. When finished the work is carried off with a cart or wooden tool. After being for some time dried in the air the vessels are arranged on trays of fireclay, and on the shoulders of two men are carried to the kilns.

A Boy's Composition.

The following composition, which the Boston Gazette publishes, is not recommended as a model of literary style, but the merit is worthy of attention, and we are sure the boy who wrote this composition will generally get what he wants:

Wunst there was a preecher and he got onto a ship and he sailed and sailed and sailed and finally he come near a iland and when he come near the iland a big storm come up and it blode and blode and blode and the preecher and all the people on the ship thought they was goin to git drownded and a little bird got blowed of the rikin into pride toget onto the ship but every time he tride to get onto the ship the ship leaned over the other way and the little bird could'nt but he didn't set down in the water and cry but just kept puggin away and finaly he lit down onto a sale and a saler went up and got the littel bird out of the sale and giv him some bread and water and bime by when the storm blode away the sun come out and the ship come to land and the preecher and all the people was glad and the bird flud away.

Moral—If you don't git what you want first best you keep puggin away and you git it bime by.

The Book Elves.

The witches get in my books, I know,
Or else the fairy elves
For when I study they plague me so
I feel like one of themselves.
Often they whisper, "Come and play;
The sun is shining bright!"
And when I fling the book away
They fan me with delight.
They dance among the stupid words,
And twist the "rules" awry,
And fly around the page like birds,
Though I can't see them fly.
They twitch my feet, they blur my eyes,
They cross me drowsy, too,
In fact the more a fellow tries
To study the worse they do.
They can't be heard, they can't be seen—
I know not how they look—
And yet they are a dark line between
The leaves of a lesson book.
Whatever they are I cannot tell,
But this is plain as day:
I never'll be able to study well
As long as the book elves stay.

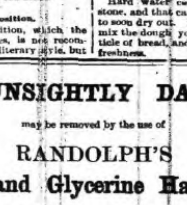
The Cleverest of Pigs.

Young Piggy-wiggy was a beau,
At least young ladies told him so,
For he could skate, and he could row,
And he could play the old banjo
With a thump, thump, thump!



YOUNG PIGGY-WIGGY WAS A BEAU.

Well pleased were they who had the chance
To see young Piggy-wiggy dance,
And call by shining on his head
"You clever, clever dear!" they said,
With earnest, grunt, grunt!

Now this intelligent young pig
Appeared at first Miss Nancy Pig;
But when he cried, "Come, let us wed,"
She only hung her bashful head
With a hunc, hunc, hunc!

A LECTURE ON JAPAN.

BY MR. WILLIAM D. MURRAY, IN VINCENT CHAPEL LAST EVENING.

Illustrated by Stereoscopic Views.—An Excellent Lecture.—The Lecturer's Object is to Call Attention to Japanese Missions.

Mr. William D. Murray of Seventh street lectured in Vincent chapel last evening for the benefit of the M. E. Sunday-school.

His subject was "Japan," and the lecture was illustrated by a fine collection of stereoscopic views, Mr. C. G. Taft operating the lantern.

Before the electric lights were extinguished that the views might be better exhibited, Mr. Murray, by way of introducing his lecture, gave the position of Japan geographically, and told of its variable climate.

The area of Japan he gave as 149,000 square miles, and its population at forty millions, about 266 inhabitants to the square mile, the United States having but 18 to the square mile.

The history from 660 before Christ—the time of the first emperor—to 600 years after Christ, is mythical. To the time of the 12th emperor Japan had a dual government—the emperor being the divine ruler, and the shogun, or general, who was appointed by the Emperor or Mikado, being the virtual ruler.

This dual government was abolished in 1868. A Constitution was proclaimed February 11, 1889, and the people were given a parliament of their own.

The Religions are the Shinto and Buddhism. The essence of Shintoism, as you are doubtless aware, is the worship of ancestors and of sacrifice to dead heroes. Outside of this the believers simply follow their own natural impulses and obey the Mikado.

The Buddhists, you may remember, believe in the doctrine taught by Buddha in the sixth century before Christ. It is believed to have been atheistic, and yet it was characterized by elevated humanity and morality, but presented a relief from existence as the greatest good, the transmigration of souls through all phases and forms of existence, being a part of the belief.

There are many temples erected in Japan, and these show in a great degree the skill and artistic sense of this wonderful people. To their great Mercy Shrine they have erected some 3,000 temples. In one of the most beautiful of these temples you are shown a rope which was used to lift into position the enormous beams of which the temple is built. This rope is made of the hair of the women, who to show their devotion to the Shinto religion, cut off their hair that it might be used to make the ropes needed to lift these beams. In this way a thousand pounds of strongly woven rope nearly an inch thick was made and is preserved among the numerous relics.

There are but 34,000 Christians in Japan. The lecturer's object in visiting that country was not that he might have it to say that he had been to a country which was out of the beaten path of foreign travel, but because he was interested in our missions in that country. The missionaries are not so badly off as our missionaries in some other countries, for the people and the country are remarkably pleasant and interesting, but they feel lonely so far away. They like to be remembered by those at home, and helped along in what we all feel is a most noble work. The lecturer, therefore, has made it a rule to lose no opportunity to bring to the attention of the people here the missions there.

The lecturer took his hearers on an imaginary trip through Japan, showing nearly seventy views to be met on the way. These he explained in terse, clear-cut language, which made them fully understood, and by the applause at the close it was quite evident that the trip was thoroughly enjoyed, and the lecture appreciated by the audience, many afterward personally thanking Mr. Murray for his kindness in giving it.

Arrested for Illegal Liquor Selling.

On complaint of Captain Grant, James Muldowney of West Third street was arrested, yesterday afternoon, for illegal liquor selling.

He pleaded not guilty to the charges, of which there were two, and furnished bonds in the sum of $200 in each case.

Trial was set down for one week from to-morrow.

A SWINDLE EXPOSED.

THE SCHEME WORKED BY THE CLERK OF A NEW YORK FIRM.

One of the Victims was Mr. August Frentz of Scotch Plains, who Afterwards Employed a Detective and he Exposed the Scheme.

Mr. August Frentz of Scotch Plains is one of the best marksmen in that vicinity, and is considered by his neighbors as a man who knows a good gun when he sees it, and it is very seldom, if ever, that anyone gets the best of him in a bargain when guns are the factors. But recently he was the victim of a swindling scheme.

It seems that recently he went to New York to purchase a gun, and some of his friends advised him to go to a certain well-known dealer in sporting miscellany. Acting upon the advice of his friends, he went to the store and asked to be shown a gun.

There were many affable and courteous clerks in the store, and one of these immediately commenced to show his stock of shooting irons. There were guns of all kinds exhibited to Mr. Frentz—double barreled guns, single barreled guns, breech loading guns, and guns of innumerable sorts.

Mr. Frentz seemed to be hard to please and none of those shown suited his fancy. He was about to leave the place, without making any purchase, when the clerk who had waited on him called him back and showed him a gun, the price of which was $100, that he had not brought out before.

After parleying a long time about the price of the weapon, it was agreed upon that Mr. Frentz was to take the gun. The purchasing price was paid, and Mr. Frentz, not going right home, said he would call for it later in the day, if it was convenient. The clerk said it was, and the gun was left. He returned about an hour later and started to take his purchase from the counter, when he noticed it was a different gun and not the one he had bought. He noticed also that it was of an inferior make. The clerk was asked about it, but said that it was the same gun he had sold to him. Finding that he could get no satisfaction, after a lively exchange of uncomplimentary names, Mr. Frentz returned to his home, taking the gun with him.

Mr. Frentz confided the occurrence to another sportsmen, who advised him to employ a detective to look into the matter. The detective was accordingly engaged, and soon obtained what was considered evidence of a startling nature to the police.

The detective claims to have discovered that twenty-five of the clerks employed by the firm were leagued together in an alleged scheme to swindle people similar to that worked on Mr. Frentz, and that the firm had lost $25,000 in the last four years.

The clerks would sell a gun for a high price and then work off an inferior and much cheaper article on the purchaser. It is said that warrants are to be issued for their arrest.

Miss Heidt's Strange Death.

Respecting the cause of the death of Miss Mary E. Heidt, who died Thanksgiving day a sister of hers says: "She was taken sick while at the theatre the previous Tuesday evening, at the performance of the "Voodoo." She laughed heartily at first but she complained later of a pain in her side. This was at the beginning of the second act. She felt so bad that I had to help her out of the theatre. She was taken immediately home, and a physician was summoned. The doctor did not then say what the trouble was, but the next afternoon he and another physician held a consultation and decided that something had given away inside, but they didn't know what. Next day, after her death, they made an autopsy, and they said that she had ruptured her bowels. The family physician believed it had occurred between his morning and afternoon call, and said it was that which caused her death. He also said he had never seen a case like it before."

Miss Heidt was a fine, healthy-looking girl, weighing over 150 lbs. Her sudden death was a great surprise to a large circle of friends, as well as to the other members of the family, which comprises her mother, four sisters and a brother. They returned last night from New York State, where they buried her.

PERSONAL.

Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Randolph of Peace street moved to-day to the corner of South Second street and Muhlenberg place.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Van Winkle, formerly of Brooklyn, removed to-day to this city. They will reside on Central avenue.

Mr. James C. Field, formerly of the firm of Field & Randolph in this city, but now of Somerville, spent yesterday visiting his old friends in Plainfield.

Mr. George V. Creveling of East Fifth street is stricken with paralysis several days ago, while at his work in a feed store on Crescent avenue. He was taken to his home, and a physician was summoned. Upon examination it was found that his entire left side was paralyzed.

Miss Virginia Cox of the New West Education Commission will address the meeting at the Congregational church this evening. A tea will be given in her honor at Mrs. M. E. Dwight's, 95 Rockview avenue, from three to six p. m. to-morrow, to which all the ladies of the congregation are invited.

NOW FOR THE TROPHY.

THE FIRST GAME IN THE JOURNAL LEAGUE BOWLED LAST NIGHT.

The Crescents Win after an Exciting and Interesting Battle of the Pins.—Their Opponents were the C. Y. M. L. of Plainfield.

In spite of the stormy weather last night there was quite a large attendance at the Crescent League club house to witness the first game in this city in the Journal Bowling League.

It was announced that ladies would be in attendance to see this game, but the snow and slush proved too much for the fair sex and none was present, as it took all the courage of those of the masculine gender to brave the elements.

The Crescents had for their opponents the C. Y. M. L. of this city, and as both teams have been doing any amount of practicing lately, the game was looked forward to with much interest by the friends of both teams, inasmuch as it was the first game bowled between these two clubs and the first game of the League in this city.

The game was very interesting and exciting, for to the surprise of the old Crescent Leaguers, the Young Men started off with a rush, and a lead of seven pins in the first frame. They increased their lead in the next frame, and still held first place at the third but by a small margin, in the fourth they increased their advantage to thirty pins, but at the end of the fifth the old stagers of the Crescent League began to gain on them, and there was only four pins difference in favor of the Young Men. At the end of the sixth the Crescents had four pins to the good, and held the lead to the end, winning by twenty-seven pins. It was a close shave though, and but for the high scores made by H. Van Emburgh and C. Van Winkle the game would have gone the other way.

Van Winkle made three strikes in succession and at the close of the game had a total of 179 to his credit. Van Emburgh also bowled a good game and scored 170.

Following is the score:

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Cleaning a Dress With Benzine when it Caught Fire.

This afternoon Mrs. Ann Waldron, of Emily street, North Plainfield, a sister of Mrs. Ellen Tierney, started to clean a dress with benzine or naptha. She poured the benzine in a basin and set it in the sink, in a corner of the room near the range. She had just put the dress in the basin and stood rinsing it, when some vapor, which must have been blown across to the range by a draught from a window, which was open a little from the bottom, ignited. The benzine in the basin blazed up, encircling Mrs. Waldron and burning the dress which was in the basin to ashes. The flames leaped up to the ceiling and there would, no doubt, have been a disastrous fire, but for the prompt action of a man who was at work out in the yard. He rushed into the house as soon as he saw the blaze from the window, and succeeded in putting the fire out. In doing so, however, his hands were considerably burned and his hair singed.

Mrs. Waldron was not injured, but she was pretty well scared, as well she might be, for benzine is dangerous stuff. She says she "thanks her stars" she's alive. It was a very narrow escape for her, as it seems a miracle her clothing did not catch fire.

An alarm was sounded, but when the horses started out of the engine house with the engine they ran to one side and one of the wheels caught in the doors, breaking a whiffletree. Before they could get another the recall sounded.

$8,453.73 PAID.

BY THE P. & R. R. CO., TO MISS VAN DOREN'S COUNSEL.

That is the Value which a Court and Jury Fix as the Compensation for an Injury to a Leg.—A Long Legal Battle Ended.

$8,453.73 was to-day paid by the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company to Borough Counsel Chas. A. Reed for the amount of damages he recovered by suit against the company in the United States Circuit Court for his client, Abbie Van Doren, of Trenton, N. J.

The latter was run over by a horse which had been frightened at a locomotive standing near a street crossing in Bound Brook, in June, 1889. There was a long legal battle, the company claiming that the driver of the horse was to blame and not the company, but Mr. Reed succeeded in convincing the court to the contrary.

MRS. FERGUSON SENTENCED.

She is Given the Choice of a Fine of $50 or 20 Days in Jail.

Mrs. Ferguson was sent up-stairs to-day by City Judge Codington. She was given the choice of paying a $50 fine or spending 20 days in the county jail at Elizabeth. Her counsel gave notice of appeal.

It will be remembered that she cleared Michael Watson on his trial for illegal liquor selling, by swearing that she furnished the liquor herself. She put herself in the hole out of which she had pulled Watson by this statement.

Policeman Alleband said that he gave her the bottle of whiskey of Watson, and that she went out and came back with the whiskey, declaring that she bought it of Watson as directed. On the trial, she was the only witness for the city and cleared Watson by swearing that she got the liquor in her own cellar.

Mrs. Ferguson was tried last Wednesday morning. At the trial, on cross-examination, she admitted that the whiskey and the money changed hands on the same occasion, and that it was not suggested by anybody what the money was for if it wasn't for the whiskey. The court adjudged her guilty. She was sentenced, as above stated.

TWENTY-TWO PARDONS GRANTED.

The Court of Pardons yesterday had one of the largest lists of applications for pardons that has come before it since the establishment of the court. There were over fifty applicants. Only twenty-two pardons were granted. They are as follows:

C. Lowe, Union, embezzlement, eighteen months; Geo. Honig, Essex, forgery, eighteen months; Theo. McLear, Hudson, assault, one year; George C. Kerr, Essex, embezzlement, eighteen months; F. W. Irdell, Salem, forgery, one year; Dominick Fitzpatrick, Somerset, breaking and entering, three years and six months; Jane Smith, Atlantic, larceny, nine months; Julius Woodl, atrocious assault, sentenced in May, 1890, seven years; William O'Dell, Passaic, rape, sentenced in May, 1884, fifteen years; Vincenzo Spatito, Essex, assault, one year; Frank Vincent, Essex, assault, one year; James Ryan, Essex, breaking and entering, two years; Henry Molett, Essex, bigamy, five years.

STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS.

Ex-Chancellor Williamson Conscious, but Unable to Talk.

Ex-Chancellor Benjamin Williamson, of Elizabeth, was again stricken with paralysis yesterday morning. His left side is affected.

A few weeks ago he was stricken on the right side. He had partly recovered from this attack and the past two Sundays was able to go to church. He was reading a morning newspaper yesterday when the second attack came on. Members of the family found he could not articulate, although he was conscious. Last night his condition was unchanged.

For Warden of the County Jail.

To-morrow the Union County Board of Freeholders will undertake to name a warden of the Union county jail. Warden Dodd's five year term has expired and it is expected a Democrat will be put in his place, according to the following, clipped from an exchange:

The list of candidates for offices such well-known Democrats as the following: Warden J. Edward Marsh, father of the Senator; Alderman Jacob Shippard, Deputy Tax Collector Michael Flaneran, Court Constable James J. Carey, Officer Chas. Eckert and ex-Chief of Police Phil Breen, all from Elizabeth; Constable John B. McGrath, of Summit; Alexander Cusumano, of Roselle; Patrick Lynch, of Plainfield, and there is a strong probability of Chief of Police E. B. Kelly, of Summit, and Constable John M. C. Marsh, of Westfield, being named in the caucus of Wednesday. If a few ballots dis close the impossibility of uniniting on any of the other candidates.

—It is not generally known that it is a State prison offense to point a deadly weapon at any one, regardless of the fact that the weapon is not loaded. Experience has shown that it is the unloaded weapon that does the most damage.

THE PROLIFIC RABBIT.

Is Causing Much Anxiety to New Jersey Farmers.

Farmer of central and northwestern New Jersey have just made the discovery that Australian rabbits have been propagated there during last Spring and Summer and are running at large in great numbers. As is known, the Australian breed of rabbit is a most destructive one, and one, too, that multiplies with great rapidity. The farmers in northwestern and central New Jersey are thoroughly alarmed at the prospect of having their crops destroyed by the animals. It is said that the imported rabbits released there have bred freely with the native species, but are still unfit for eating. A bill is being prepared for the legislature's consideration that, if passed, will make it a penal offense to harbor the Australian rabbit or assist in its growth in number in any way. The farmers are greatly incensed against the thoughtless fantasmen who introduced the animals into New Jersey, and talk of taking legal action against them.

Says Mrs. Bond is Sane.

The Bond will case was again before the Essex County Orphans' Court, Newark, yesterday. Relatives are trying to upset a will in which Annie E. Bond left the bulk of her property to the Home for Aged Women. At previous hearings they produced evidence to show that she was mentally unbalanced at the time the will was made. Yesterday the friends of the will had their turn. Dr. W. J. Andrews testified that he had known Mrs. Bond for sixteen years, and never observed anything indicating insanity. Henry Cook, Thomas J. Gray and Mrs. Fischer gave similar testimony. Judge Kirkpatrick reserved his decision. Mr. J Lot Marshall and Mr. Harry Marshall of this city are interested in the case as relatives.

Putting in Long Distance Telephones.

The New York and New Jersey Telephone Company was on the Jersey yesterday putting in long-distance telephones in all the signal towers along the line of the New Jersey Central. It is believed this move indicates that the company is preparing to lock horns with the order of Railroad Telegraphers, and that in case of a strike the telephones will be utilized to help the company out.

EDITORIAL NOTES

It is quite possible that in the census of 1900 the new south will be found to have grown comparatively more than the north. In the one city of Augusta, Ga., manufactures increased from 1880 to 1890 more than 240 per cent. The times as much wages are paid to operatives as were paid ten years ago.

It might almost be said of the late Duke of Marlborough that nothing in his life became him like the leaving it. He had the justice to get his life insured for $1,000,000 a year or two before he died, in order to at least partially reimburse his American wife for the sum she spent on Blenheim castle, this insurance she now gets. When she began her repairs on Blenheim house she mortgaged some of her American property for half a million in order to get ready money. Marlborough also purchased with his wife's money the pictures, tapestry and bric-a-brac for Blenheim in his American wife's name. She can now therefore claim them and take them out of the rehabilitated castle.

A Composite Photograph.

W. T. Stead has been making a notable experiment. He secured photographs of Mr. Gladstone and the sixteen members of the new Liberal cabinet. Then he divided the sixteen officers into four groups, according to their facial characteristics. The four whose type of face was somewhat the same were photographed one upon another. Each group had its head man, in whom the type of features was most marked. There are four clean shaven members of the cabinet. These Mr. Stead put together, with Lord Rosebery at their head. The four men with the largest heads constituted another group. Last of all the four groups were photographed one upon another, and Mr. Gladstone's picture taken on top of them all.

It is of interest to observe whose features are most strongly stamped upon each group. Whether this is anybody that the man whose likeness is most prominent has the strongest character perhaps not even Lavater could tell. In the beardless men's group Lord Rosebery's face is most prominent. Sir William Vernon Harcourt cannot be made out at all, but Mr. Bryce, the friend of America, comes out plainly in his group.

Truth compels the outsider to say that in the composite photograph, which is the final result of all, the differences of collar, coat and necktie can be much more plainly made out than differences in the intellectual physiognomies of the great men who compose the British cabinet. Even Mr. Gladstone, though photographed last on the top of all the rest is not distinctly to be traced. As to the final result, Mr. Stead puts it thus: "The predominating note of the type which has been thus evolved is that of a benevolent and thoughtful gentleman of about sixty."

Scandinavians in America.

We learn various facts, of interest from Professor Boyesen's paper in The North American Review discussing the Scandinavian element in the United States. One is that the citizens from Norway and Sweden have always voted the Republican ticket and will continue to do so till time shall be no more. If, in view of certain recent afflicting dispensations, this fact will be any satisfaction to the Republican party, we gladly give pertinence to it. The reason assigned for it by Professor Boyesen is, however, old. It is not because Swedes and Norsemen love the Republicans so much as because they hate the Irish. There is, Professor Boyesen tells us, an irreconcilable feud between Irish and Scandinavian so great that if the impossible should happen and the Irish under any circumstances vote the Republican ticket and will continue to do so till time shall be no more. If, in view of certain recent afflicting dispensations, this fact will be any satisfaction to the Republican party, we gladly give pertinence to it. The reason assigned for it by Professor Boyesen is, however, old. It is not because Swedes and Norsemen love the Republicans so much as because they hate the Irish. There is, Professor Boyesen tells us, an irreconcilable feud between Irish and Scandinavian so great that if the impossible should happen and the Irish under any circumstances vote the Republican ticket, then the Scandinavians would immediately jump the fence and go Democratic. This is unfortunate if true to the extent the writer says.

Scandinavians are strong, sober, sturdy and manly, with the courage, endurance and love of freedom their ancestors drew in with the wild sea air still abiding in their souls. They save money and thrive, and adapt themselves easily to American institutions. Their worst vice is drunkenness, which probably they also inherited with the old Viking blood in their veins. But it is cheering to know they are not so bad in this respect in the United States as they were in the old country, and that the temperance movement is at present making rapid progress among our Swedes and Norsemen in the northwest.

Another fact deprecated by Professor Boyesen is that these immigrants send back to the ancestral countries for parochial schools, and keep up the old language and old notions. It is a great misfortune, for these Swedish Lutheran preachers and schoolmasters are full of prejudices against American life and manners, and have no adequate knowledge of the kind of intelligence young American citizens ought to receive.

Our total Scandinavian population, including Danes, Swedes and Norwegians, numbers 1,800,000. They are learning Yankee politics rapidly too. The present congress contains four representatives of this race, while Hon. Knute Nelson, the newly elected governor of Minnesota, is a Norwegian.

REV. DR. SCOTT IS DEAD

The Grim Destroyer Again Invades the White House.

CAREER OF MRS. HARRISON'S SIRE.

He Was Known to Fame Before Young Benjamin Harrison Wooed and Won His Daughter at Oxford, O.—The President at His Bedside When He Died.

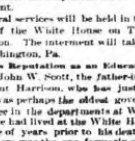
WASHINGTON, Nov. 30.—Rev. Dr. Scott, the father of Mrs. Harrison, died at 4:10 p. m. Tuesday. The president, Mrs. McKee, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harrison, Lieutenant Parker and wife, Russell Scott, his grandson, and Dr. Tennis Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, of which Dr. Scott was a member, were at his bedside. John W. Scott, the only surviving son, and Mr. McKee were the only members of the family absent.

Funeral services will be held in the East room of the White House on Thursday afternoon. The interment will take place at Washington, Pa.

His Reputation as an Educator.

Rev. John W. Scott, the father-in-law of President Harrison, who has just passed away, was perhaps the oldest government employee in the departments at Washington. He has lived at the White House for a couple of years prior to his death. His room there was the one formerly occupied by Fannie Hayes and later by Nellie Arthur.

During his stay at the White House everything possible was done for his comfort. Dr. Scott had some cause, by distinction other than his relationship by marriage to the president of the United States, His life was spent principally in study and teaching and for many years he enjoyed the reputation of being one of the best educators in the west. He was a man, too, of the highest moral character, and despite his heavy burden of years he was one of the most companionable as well as popular men in Washington even before his son-in-law became president of the United States.



REV. JOHN W. SCOTT.

A Native of Pennsylvania.

Rev. John Witherspoon Scott was born in Beaver county, Pa., Jan. 22, 1809. He was a son of Rev. George M. Scott, one of the early pioneers of South Presbyterianism in western Pennsylvania, whose father, Colonel John Scott, resided in Northampton county, Pa., on a large tract of land deeded him by the colonial government for valuable services rendered by him, and which he named "Nova Scotia." Colonel Scott was a prominent conspicuous in the state as an ardent patriot during the war of the Revolution.

John W. Scott graduated at Washington college, Washington, Pa., in 1829. He next took a postgraduate course at Yale college, where he received his second degree in 1834. The same year he was appointed professor of mathematics and natural science in his alma mater, which chair he filled for three or four years.

In 1838 he resigned his professorship at Washington college and accepted a similar appointment in the Miami university, in Oxford, O. Here he remained until the spring of 1854, when he removed to College Hill, near Cincinnati, for the purpose of founding the Farmers' college, and when it became well established Dr. Scott was invited back to Oxford to found a female college there.

He accepted the invitation and remained in Oxford ten more years—until after the female college was built, when he accepted a professorship in Hanover college, near Madison, Ind., which chair he filled for a number of years.

Young Harrison Wins His Daughter.

After his retirement from college life he was engaged in the more congenial occupation of private reading and preaching the gospel. In 1861 he accepted an appointment of a clerkship in the mail division of the pension office, interior department, feeling more happy in having some quiet employment at the seat of the national government than in wasting in idleness the later hours of his hale old age.

In 1825 Dr. Scott married Miss Mary Potts Neal, daughter of John Neal, Esq., at Washington, Pa. She was his loving companion and helpmate until she died in 1876.

It was while Dr. Scott was in charge of the Western Female seminary that Benjamin Harrison, a student who was taking a course at Oxford, met and loved Carrie Scott, the daughter of the venerable professor.

The young people were married Oct. 20, 1853, and together began the struggle in life, which resulted eventually in their occupancy of the White House. Besides Mrs. Harrison there was another Miss Scott who became Mrs. Lord. She died in Washington a couple of years earlier than her distinguished sister, who has but recently passed away.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., Nov. 30.—Dr. Graham N. Fitch died here, aged eighty-four years. In 1848 he was elected to congress from this district and served two terms. In 1857 he was chosen United States senator, retiring in 1861.

The Priests Do Not Want Brady.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 30.—Catholic priests of this diocese are in almost open rebellion against the venerable Archbishop Kenrick because of his action appointing as his coadjutor Very Rev. P. P. Brady.

Hon. John F. Connolly Dead.

SCRANTON, Pa., Nov. 30.—Hon. John F. Connolly, additional law judge of Lackawanna county, died here. He was thirty-three years old and was elected five years ago.

Birdsall for Police Justice.

TRENTON, Nov. 30.—Governor Abbett has appointed Charles Birdsall as police justice for Jersey City to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Robert S. Davis.

Attorney Kehn Has Fled.

DENVER, Nov. 30.—George A. Kehn, a prominent Denver attorney, has mysteriously disappeared, leaving debts aggregating [illegible] $100,000.

MANY WOMEN CLAIM CRANE.

He Wrecked Three Lives and Now He Is an Embezzler.

DETROIT, Nov. 30.—Edwin Crane, confidential and chief clerk of the R. C. Dun Mercantile agency, has fled from the city. Crane was a baritone singer, sang in the Baptist choir, was a salesman and a society swell. A year ago he married the daughter of J. C. Elwell, a wealthy St. Louis (Mich.) banker. The true story of his life reads like a romance.

Twelve years ago he met Agnes Burdette in Leeds, England, betrayed her and the night before their wedding day robbed her brother and fled to Montreal. On the steamer he met George Fornett, son of the then collector of customs at Montreal. Fornett heard him sing and secured a situation for him with Mitchell & Son.

Crane was soon all the rage in Montreal, his voice taking him in the best society. He became acquainted with Amelie Lefevre, a soprano singer of some note, and ruined her by promising marriage. The result, however, was a wedding day. Crane robbed her mother and fled to Detroit.

Before he had been here a year he had won his way into popular favor with his voice and was soon earning $2,000 a year. Five years ago Miss Lafevre discovered his whereabouts and wrote him, begging for money to support their child. His intimate friends advised him to send money, which he did up to two years ago.

Six months ago—after twelve years—Miss Burdette, the Englishwoman, discovered his address, and two weeks ago she arrived in Detroit with a boy whom she introduced to Crane as his son. A stormy scene occurred in a small room in the Franklin House, in which a shot was fired. The clerk hastened to the room and found the woman in spasms. She had shot at Crane, but missed him. The man had left town, after securing $600 on a note indorsed by Homer Warren. He also took with him the funds of four singing societies of which he was treasurer—about $1,300.

Dun & Co. are said to be out a good sum. Crane bought a ticket for Liverpool. Miss Burdette and her boy have disappeared.

TO SUSPEND IMMIGRATION.

A Resolution to That Effect Before the Senate's Committee.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—The senate committee on immigration met in Room 38 at the Fifth Avenue hotel. The following resolution was submitted and discussed:

"All immigration, except from North and South American countries, shall be suspended for one year from March 1, 1893, the law to be so framed as not to hinder the free return of American citizens or the easy admission of visitors."

Various other propositions were also discussed. The fear of a cholera epidemic leads many of the committee to favor the suspension of immigration.

Governor Bulkeley Relents.

HARTFORD, Nov. 30.—Governor Bulkeley has revoked the dishonorable discharges of Colonel Elisha Peirce, Lieutenant Colonel Charles E. Thompson, Major Thomas M. Smith and Captain George B. Newton "on account of their previous good military record." The officers were discharged three years ago because they resigned when the armory in this city was let for polo playing to an association of which Governor Bulkeley was a director.

Free Coal for New England.

HALIFAX, N. S., Nov. 30.—The reported purchase of the Nova Scotia coal mines by a United States syndicate is confirmed. Horace Whitney, brother of Hon. W. C. Whitney, is interested in the deal. He expects the removal of the American duty on Canadian soft coal, thus opening the markets of New England to Nova Scotia fuel.

Young Cobb's Excellent Call.

TROY, N. Y., Nov. 30.—Rev. BOLD JERSEY BANDITS.

They Rob the Farmers' National Bank at Allentown,

BUT ARE RUN DOWN BY CITIZENS.

Cashier Elmer Hutchinson Too Swift for Them—The Daring Highwaymen Were Getting Away with $2,000 When Cornered by an Angry Crowd.

ALLENTOWN, Nov. 30.—Two bold bandits, in true western style, held up the cashier and bookkeeper in the Farmers' National bank at this place in broad daylight, but after leaving the bank with a large sum of money they were run down and captured. At about 12:30 p. m. two young men entered the bank and walked directly to the window, behind which stood Cashier Elmer H. Hutchinson. One of the men had a mustache and the other was smooth faced. The man with the mustache pointed a revolver at Cashier Hutchinson and said, "We want all the money you have."

At the same time the young robber with the smooth face covered Bookkeeper William D. Smith with his revolver. Smith was also behind the rail. There was no one else in the bank at the time, but the book keeper, the cashier and the two robbers.

Run Down by a Mob.

The bank officials were powerless and $2,000 in greenbacks which lay on the counter was shoved out to the robbers. One of them kept the cashier and his assistant covered with his revolver; the other put the money in his pockets and then started towards the door. The other robber commanded Cashier Hutchinson and his assistant to walk backward toward the wall and then to stand there facing it.

They did so, and the robber who took the money, finding the coast clear, walked out of the door. The other soon followed and started on a run down the street. As soon as the bank men found that the robbers were gone they started in pursuit, firing at the robbers as they ran.

Cashier Hutchinson, who is a fast runner, gained on the two thieves, who perceiving this, turned and fired several shots back at their pursuers. William Laird, a farmer, and William H. Brown, a hardware merchant, kept up with Cashier Hutchinson, and they assisted in overtaking and capturing the robbers after they had run about 300 yards. The thieves finding that they were hemmed in on all sides, threw up their hands on being covered with shotguns and pistols in the hands of the excited citizens.

Wild Threats Made.

During the chase Cashier Hutchinson emptied all the chambers of his revolver, while the thieves fired three shots. None of the bullets took effect.

The crowd gathered around them, and amid many wild threats they were secured and the two were taken from them. They gave the names of J. B. Morris and Frederick Smith. Later in the day they were taken to Trenton. Upon being searched a memorandum was found bearing the words "Woodstown bank, Nov. 30." It is supposed that they intended to pay this place in Salem county a visit today.

CLEVELAND HAS GOOD LUCK.

He Kills Over One Hundred Snipe and Four Ducks.

EXMORE, Va., Nov. 30.—Mr. Cleveland succeeded in bagging 126 snipe in a little over an hour's time here. Of these fifty-three were brought down at one spot. Four black ducks which left the water and flew over the boat also fell victims to the fowling piece of the president-elect.

During the afternoon Samuel Kelley, a venerable man of seventy years, who has never traveled further than Northampton county, called upon Mr. Cleveland and was pleasantly received. When Mr. Kelley asked the president-elect how he liked the island Mr. Cleveland replied that he was so highly pleased with his residence there that he would be glad to exchange places with Mr. Kelley if he could serve the people as well as by going to Washington.

While out gunning on the beach Mr. Cleveland was an eye witness of a thrilling spectacle. Five residents of Cobb's island were on their way in a two sailed boat to Broadwater for the purpose of paying their respects to the president-elect. While in the Great Machipongo inlet the boat capsized. All of the party would certainly have been drowned had it not been for the prompt assistance of the life saving crew.

In conversation regarding the reception of visitors who land upon Broadwater island, Mr. Cleveland stated that he was glad at any time to receive representatives of the state legislature, members of congress from Virginia, men of prominence in their respective localities and natives of the archipelago, but no office seekers, reporters or those who are nonresidents of the state.

Mr. Cleveland's thumb, which was painfully but not seriously injured in attempting to lock his gun, has given him but little trouble. His shooting boat has been provided with a revolving chair, arranged in the bottom of the scow, so that the president-elect can shoot in every direction without rising from his seat.

PRESIDENT M'LEOD TESTIFIES.

He Says All Reading Wants Is a Reasonable Price for Coal.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 30.—At the congressional investigation of the Reading coal deal President McLeod, of the Reading railroad system, was the first witness. He stated that the demand for coal made prices and he did not believe prices were other wise influenced by the coal agents.

He was then asked, "Is it a part of your scheme, Mr. McLeod, to effect any further advance in the price of coal?"

Mr. McLeod replied, "We regulate our business according to the conditions we find from month to month. We have no intention of raising the price of coal for December, and we couldn't raise prices in January if we wanted to."

He disclaimed any co-operation on his part toward the election of Reading directors in the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western railroad, and said that the election had no connection with the Reading leases.

Mr. McLeod further stated that if there were no meetings to regulate the output of coal the smaller producers would be crowded to the wall and the more powerful would combine and raise the price of coal. Many producers who were on the verge of bankruptcy were saved by the Reading management. The coal business had been conducted at a loss and prices are no higher than they have been.

Mr. McLeod concluded that the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron company had never paid a dividend and that the Reading is not getting a reasonable profit on the output of coal. "We want a reasonable price," said he, "but we do not propose to go so far as in any way to injure our trade."

BEATEN BY BRIGGS MEN

Two Counts Struck Out of the Heresy Indictment.

THE DOCTOR'S NOTABLE VICTORY.

It Is Said That the Famous Case May Be Dismissed for Lack of Sufficient Evidence Against the Accused—A Test Vote in the Presbytery.

NEW YORK, Nov. 30.—At the great heresy trial the defendant, Rev. Dr. Briggs, secured an order to strike from the indictment against him its two most essential counts, Nos. 4 and 7. President Thomas S. Hastings, of the Union Theological seminary, defended Dr. Briggs, and advocated the striking out of the charge on the ground that it was a radical change and differed from the old charge.

"When the presbytery," he said, "tells the accused that he contradicts himself when he has told him that he disavows the charge and substantiates the disavowal in his demurrer, it gives the lie to Dr. Briggs, and that's the plain English of it."

In order to satisfy the anti-Briggs men the Alexander motion to order the fourth and seventh charges to be stricken from the indictment was divided, so as to allow the vote to be taken separately on each charge. This divided the argument also, and for an hour and a half the anti-Briggs side labored to convince the majority that the charges should stand.

Victory for Dr. Briggs.

The substance of the argument on both charges was that Dr. Briggs had disclaimed the doctrines charged, and the answer was that the disclaimer was not complete, and that it should be made during the trial and not in the preliminary argument.

Both motions were carried. The fourth charge, relating to the fulfillment of prophecy, was stricken out by a vote of 79 to 49, and the seventh charge, relating to redemption after death, by a vote of 74 to 39. These were standing votes, and many qualified voters did not vote on either side. As confirmed by the count of the vote, so that the opinion of each man was not recorded. The prosecuting committee will complain of these votes and carry the case to the general assembly, which meets in Washington next May.

The case will proceed with reference to the six remaining charges. The temper of the presbytery is clearly seen by its action. In all probability these charges will be declared insufficient and the case dismissed.

Against the Revision Idea.

CHICAGO, Nov. 30.—"Wreck Calvinism, the backbone of the Presbyterian church, the doctrine which in all time has given it its character, and I shall be one of many to refuse longer to follow the flag of that church."

That was Dr. Herrick Johnson's declaration at the meeting of the Presbyterian ministers. In the debate several others said that they were ready to protest that in conscience could not approve, and thereby called forth the startling reply of the orthodox conservatives.

At the close Chicago Presbyterians placed themselves on record as disapproving of the changes made by the general assembly of the course at large.

Lace will be much used for evening and dinner dresses, both in black and white, and immense baggy sleeves of velvet will be their chief adornment.

Black corduroy is predicted as one of the fashionable materials for tailor-made gowns next season. It is a material that fits well and one that will undoubtedly be popular, for although it must be made up very simply it will stand either fur or braid trimming with artistic results.

A Hint Concerning the Teeth.

Women whose teeth are tarnished about the edges from the use of medicine or the effects of working of dentifrice would do well to remember that powdered pumice stone is a harmless eradicator of such evils. It is easily applied by winding a piece of fine linen about a small stick, a wooden toothpick or a match whittled to a point, and best two or three thorough applications are necessary in order to remove any discoloration from the teeth where the enamels are not eaten away.

The distinguishing mark of a true Parisian toilet is a touch of black, deftly added. A favorite method of its arrangement is slight women is to make a belt with loops of ribbon hanging about the waist, which gives a pleasant fulness to the slight figure and is suggestive of Venetian sleashings.

WITH THE HOUSEKEEPER.

IN THESE COLUMNS SHE WILL ALWAYS FIND SOMETHING NEW.

Little Hints That Will Aid in Making the Home More Attractive and Cheerful—Some Good Recipes and Other Matter Which Will Be of Interest.

Chestnut sandwiches are an addition to the list of edibles, which includes, nowadays, almost everything in the larder. The chestnuts are boiled soft, then peeled and passed through a wire sieve; the paste thus obtained spread between small triangles or oblongs of bread, from which the crust has been neatly cut. Some cooks use a dust of cinnamon or mace, preferably the latter, with the paste, but it should be remembered that the chestnut flavor is a peculiar, fleeting one, and does not bear much tampering with.

New Umbrella Stand.

NEW DESIGN FOR UMBRELLA STAND.

Here is an umbrella stand, inexpensive, useful and ornamental. There is nothing stiff or clumsy in its appearance and it looks well in any shaped hall. It is of cherry, with brass trimmings. At the top panels are arranged of blue tiles separated from one another by a rim of brass. The optimal square through which each umbrella is passed is also of brass, and the elongated tub at the bottom where the umbrella may drip is of cherry. This same design may be made of bamboo.

WASTED ENERGY.

Sensible Suggestions in Regard to Scrubbing and Cleaning.

The good housekeeper is not the one who indulges in periodic scrubbings and overhaulings, says the New York Tribune, but one who keeps her premises so scrupulously clean, while she is about her work, that there is never any need to the superficial observer for the stated cleaning days, which like the good workman's systematic care of his engine, keeps the machinery always in working order. The housekeeper whose broom is a continual accompaniment of her housekeeping, must be a careless, shiftless manager. It is the art of keeping a house clean, not of making it clean, that characterizes good housekeeping. It is a disentanglement of the parts of work, that wear out time and patience, and break down the strength of body and nerve.

The average woman who has not yet learned how to manage her work, wastes about one-half her strength in useless energy, in unmethodical ways, taking ten steps where she need take but one. When work is once reduced to system and each part follows properly the other, when the housekeeper has learned the true economy of time and strength, she will hear little of broken-down housekeepers unable to withstand the weight of the daily toil which comes to their lot.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

A teaspoonful of borax added to cold starch will make clothes very stiff.

A bowl of quick lime kept in a cupboard will quickly absorb any moisture there may be.

Kerosene will make a tin kettle as bright as new. Wet a flannel cloth and rub with it. Kerosene will also remove stains and dirt from varnished furniture.

When the crust of a loaf of bread is over-baked, wrap it in a damp cloth when taken from the oven, then throw over it a thick bread cloth. The crust will be tender.

Pour boiling water through the drain pipe every day now to destroy any germs that may be growing and to carry off accumulations of grease. A little soda in it occasionally is still better.

Do not hang the dish towels, or cloth, either, in a close place. They will turn sour in a few hours this time of year. Wash with any pure soap and rinse well, then hang out in the sun in a convenient place, and they will be much pleasanter and more healthful to use.

Sponge Steak.

Remove carefully every particle of bone, fat and gristle, as well as the tough end, from four porterhouse or two sirloin steaks; place in a stewpan with just enough water to cover them and let them simmer (not boil) until they fall to pieces when taken from the pan. If the water does not cover the meat is done add a little more, but keep closely covered and see that all the water is absorbed. When the meat is cooked remove from the fire, mince very fine, add pepper, salt and catsup to taste. Press out all the juice and add an unbeaten egg. Form into cakes with your hands, brown quickly in hot butter and lay on a bed of fresh green parsley.

Nice Tea Rolls.

Scald one and a half pints of new milk, and when lukewarm stir it into two quarts of sifted flour, with two tablespoonfuls of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of sugar and half a cake of compressed yeast, or half a teacupful of home-made yeast. Stir well together and let rise; then knead and rise again. When light a third time knead well, roll out half an inch thick, and cut with a large biscuit cutter. Spread a little butter over half, turn and draw the other half nearly over it, pack in buttered pans and set rise again. Bake in a moderate oven fifteen or twenty minutes.

Sift one quart of flour, mix with it a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of sugar and two tablespoonfuls of butter; rub in one cake of compressed yeast, or one cupful of home-made yeast; add one pint of warm milk and water, mix into a soft dough, let stand for four hours, cut out, prick with a fork and bake in a very hot oven.

MR. BILLUPS READS ALOUD.

A Domestic Feat Attended by Some Difficulty.

Mr. Billups was reading aloud to his wife.

"Are you listening?" he said to Mrs. Billups.

"Why, certainly, dear," she replied. "Go on, please; go on."

"Excuse me for thinking so," said Mr. Billups, "but I did think that you were going to sleep with your eyes open."

"Oh, do please go on!" Mrs. Billups exclaimed. "You are so aggravating, John!"

"All right," continued Mr. Billups. "Where was I at? Ah, I see! 'The darkness that can be felt, impaled and stabbed through its whole thickness by one mighty moonbeam, clear and clean and'"—

Mr. Billups' impressive elocution was rudely marred at this point by a hoarse wail of "Ma-a-a! Ma-a-a! Ma-ma!" which issued from the next room, and, arresting the progress of that "mighty moonbeam," corroborated Mrs. Billups' impression that she had heard the baby. The baby was indeed awake. He apparently wanted "mamma" very much, and she arose from her chair and started to go to him.

"Confound it!" Mr. Billups ejaculated, "I've a notion to read the story to myself if you can't listen."

"Oh, please don't," said Mrs. Billups. "I'll bring him out and hold him in my arms, and he'll be good, I know he will."

She hastened away and brought back the two-year-old, who blinked at the lamp light, and was so glad to be released from his crib that he became instantly quiet and happy. Mrs. Billups tucked the young man's nightdress snugly about his toes, resumed her seat and told her husband to go on again.

He obeyed.

"'One mighty moonbeam,'" he read, "'clear and clean and cold, from the top to the bottom.'"

"Hello, papa!" chirped the baby, having rapidly reached the wide awake state, in which, particularly by lamplight, he was a very observant child.

"Hello, you rascal! Keep still!" said papa, and then resumed, "'All around, in the circle of the outer black, lie the great dead'"—

"Ma-ma!" cried the disturber again; "ma-ma! Down! Dit down!"

"He wants to get down and run around," mamma explained to Mr. Billups, who was not an adept in baby talk, and she allowed the boy to slide from her lap and shift for himself.

"'Lie the great dead in their tombs,'" Mr. Billups continued, with a sigh of resignation, "'whispering to each other of deeds'"—

"Wait just a minute, John," said Mrs. Billups, calmly breaking in upon the voices from the tombs. "He's got your pipe off the table."

"Well, let him have it," said Mr. Billups, "if it'll only keep him quiet. It isn't lit."

"No, I won't," said Mrs. Billups. "It'll make him sick anyhow, and besides he might break it."

"Then take it away from him quick!" And, this order having been executed and the baby pacified against the loss of the pipe, Mr. Billups pitched in once more, "'whispering to each other of deeds that shook the world; whispering in a language'"—

"Tatsy-didge," piped a little voice.

"He's only imitating you," was the comment made by Mrs. Billups.

"Well, I wish he wouldn't," Mr. Billups groaned; "'whispering in a language all their own as yet—one language'"—

"Lang-didge, lang-didge!"

"Shut up, you nuisance! The language of the life to come—the language'"—

"Lang-didge, lang-didge!"

"Now, look here, young fellow," said Mr. Billups, "who's doing this reading—you or I?"

"Take him up in your lap," Mrs. Billups suggested. "Perhaps he'll be better that way."

Mr. Billups, in desperation, did as he was told, and with his arms around the baby's shoulders and holding the book at arm's length continued, "'The language of a stillness so sharpened and so his mouth, while Mr. Billups read on, "'And makes dull, muffled beatings in ears that strain to catch the dead men's talk; the shadow of immortality'"—

"Down, down! Dit down!" came again from the restless young Billups, and his father let him down so suddenly that the child stamped his bare toes against a rung of the chair, and began to cry.

"I know what I'll do," said Mrs. Billups, ever hopeful, "I'll give him that box of liver pills to play with. He's so fond of hearing them rattle. Come here, darling"—to the baby—"and get your box."

"Is baby's own box the little fellow.

"Yes," his mamma replied.

John found his place in the book again, while John, Jr., toddled away with that fascinating box of pills.

"'The shadow of immortality,'" Mr. Billups continued in a humdrum tone, his elocutionary basket quickly'"—"the shadow of immortality falling through the shadow of death and bursting back upon its heavenward course'"—

"Horse, horse," shouted that parrot voice from a distant corner of the room.

"'Torse,'" Mrs. Billups replied.

"No, it wasn't, either. It was 'course,'" "Well, I meant 'course.' You know I did. I was just thinking of the baby. He said 'torse,' and I"

"Never mind what he says, Mary. I was reading 'Bursting back upon its heavenward course—course,' mind you—'from the depth of the abyss; climbing again upon its skeleton self'"—

"Ma-a-a! Ma-a-a! Ma-ma!"

This meant trouble, sure.

Baby had got the pillbox open and tasted the contents.

He didn't like the flavor.

"Ma-a-a! ma-a-a! ma-a-a!" he yelled, and mamma leaped to his side and uttered a suppressed shriek.

"Shall I go for the doctor?" queried Mr. Billups in a hard voice, throwing aside his book.

"No, it's not as bad as that, thank goodness!" responded Mrs. Billups. "I thought he had swallowed the pills, but he hasn't."

"I guess he has," said Mr. Billups unfeelingly. "Catch him swallowing anything he doesn't like!"

"Oh, John, what do you mean? The dear little darling! Won't you go on with your reading?"

"Well, I guess not that either," exclaimed the man of the house. "You can put that young villain to sleep again, and I'll go out on the doorstep and take a smoke, if I catch my death of cold doing it."

And Mr. Billups, petulantly seizing his pipe and tobacco pouch, sallied forth and

A Trick with Water.

If a drop of water is put upon a piece of paper, it spreads in a circle. If however, the paper has been rubbed with lampblack or some other substance, the drop of water will not spread, but will slightly flatten. This fact may be made use of for the performance of a trick.

Take a band of paper about a foot long and about two inches wide. Paste several sheets pasted together end to end will do admirably—just as in making a smoking lamp, or, better still, a paper slide of the kind with graphiles, commonly called black lead, or plumbago. Stand upright on the table several books, decreasing regularly in size, and pin the band of paper on their backs, taking care that the pages in the paper are longer and more shallow as you approach the smallest book.

At the lowest end of the band place a dish. At the other end pour water from a cup down on the paper. The drops will speed rapidly down the first incline, and, with the impetus thus gained will respond over the back of the second book, and so on, from one book after another till they drop into the dish.—Illustration.

A Remarkable Little Chilian Girl.

Such a dainty little lot is she was, all in pink silk gown and stockings and white slippers, with a tiny black head, jet black eyes and the daintiest little mouth. With her mamma, in the daintiest of Japanese tea gowns, Miss Teresa Vaughn, in an exquisite gray tailor-made gray reception dress and her friend, Miss Dorothy, also masquerading as a Japanese girl, she received her grown up guests and made them welcome in the most childlike fashion, winning the allegiance of all who saw her.

This was La Republicita, the tiny mite of humanity who dances into everybody's heart in the court scene in "H.M.S. Pinafore," little wonder, who does not find difficult steps of the premiere danseuse, and dances with all the abandon of mature woman. The wonderful child entertained her guests by recitations, in which she was as remarkable as in her dancing. She certainly is a prodigy. She does everything so naturally and easily, and as though she loved it. She is a born artist. Her mother, although never a professional, has a cultivated dramatic talent, and the child inherits it. It really seems as if the possession of the talent in the mother had only made the genius of the child the deeper. The only teacher she has had has been the mother, who would not trust the child in other hands. Although the parents are American, the child was born in Chili, and nearly all of her short seven years of life have been passed there. She is quite fortyish in her looks and manner, and would easily pass for a Spanish child.—Boston Herald.

Ted. Lincoln as a Boy.

Ted. as he was called at home, was his father's own companion. Scarcely a night he could be seen trudging along the country roads near their summer home or in the city itself, his small figure in comical contrast to the president's tall lank form. In these walks they had chats which were to the boy as precious memories. His early death was a calamity, for on his return from Europe he promised to be a fine, manly and noble which his father had hoped for.

A characteristic incident, which he himself related to the writer, occurred a day or two after entering temporarily a foreign school. A rather snobbish young gentleman of rank, not knowing who young Lincoln was, inquired, as boys will of each other, who his father was. Ted, with the slow, reflective smile, which was his sole point of resemblance to his father, answered:

"A wool chopper."

"Oh, indeed!" was the rather sneering answer, "and for a day or two the high born lad turned the cold shoulder to the "new boy."

Judge of his feelings when very soon, the American lad's proper place being known to all the school, he found that he had made himself ridiculous.—Harper's Young People.

A Lucky Chinese Baby.

The Chinese baby at Washington, which is yet so young that it has not been through one presidential term of four years, has already fallen heir to the finest opal in the world. The opal belongs to the Chinese minister. It is as large as a pigeon's egg, and is surrounded by beautiful white diamonds. The minister wears it in his cap on state occasions, and the baby wore it upon the day in baby's life which corresponds to an American christening.—New York Recorder.

Pussy, pussy, on the fence,
Snoozing in the sun;
Pussy, pussy, on the rug,
Not a thing you've done!

Pussy, pussy, on the rug,
Taking cosy naps—
Perfect up-to-date pussy all the day—
Wakes to yawn perhaps!

Puss, I wonder what the mice
Really think of you?
You've no energy at all,
Lazy pussy, you

She Colonized.

A young man with a wide brimmed straw hat on the back of his head and a look of forgiveness for everybody on his face entered a suburban car at a South Side depot yesterday afternoon, scanned the few passengers who had gone aboard and took his seat by the side of a pretty, black eyed young woman half way down the aisle.

"I beg your pardon," he said with an engaging smile. "The car isn't full yet, but it soon will be, and I think one runs less risk of getting an undesirable seat mate if one makes the selection one's self. Don't you think so?"

"Yes, sir, I do," she replied, rising up at once and taking a seat by the side of a white haired old lady on the other side of the car.—Chicago Tribune.

His Hopes Dashed.

The Widower (coldly)—So you wish to marry that Van Schuyler girl?

His Son (timidly)—Yes, sir, if you have no objection.

The Widower—Well, I have.

His Son—She is beautiful, and accomplished.

The Widower—I know that.

His Son—She is very rich.

The Widower—Are you absolutely sure about that?

His Son (much encouraged)—Absolutely sure, sir.
